The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which was passed over on page 15 will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 12, in the clause providing for "Grass and forage plant investigations," before the word "thousand," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out "ten" and insert "eighteen"; so as to make the total appropriation $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I now offer the amendment which I proposed earlier this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17 it is proposed to strike out all of lines 12, 13, 14, and 15, and insert the following:

Irrigation investigation: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue the collection of information through the United States Geological Survey as to the best modes of irrigation, $15,000, of which sum $5,000 shall be immediately available, to continue the work now under way of gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, and for preparing and publishing bulletins and reports on this subject for distribution.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hesitate to make a point of order on the amendment, and I do not know that I shall do so; but I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that the investigation here proposed as the bill was sent to us from the House of Representatives is an entirely different subject from that now included in his amendment. This irrigation investigation, so far as the Agricultural Department is concerned, is a compromise between conflicting interests in the West that had its origin really in the discontent of many of the Western States with the method of dealing with this subject pursued by the then Director of the Geological Survey, and a separate and distinct provision was inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill some years ago upon this subject. My impression is that this investigation, now being conducted by the Agricultural Department, is of very little utility and importance. I believe that this investigation should be conducted by the Director of the Geological Survey, and he is conducting from year to year certain investigations upon this subject, especially the measurement of streams, etc., as to the quantity of water that can be gathered.

I am in thorough sympathy with the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming. I believe that this subject can best be dealt with in the manner proposed by him in his amendment; but his proposition is that that shall be conducted under the Secretary of the Interior, which of course means that it must be conducted by the Geological Survey. His amendment is injected, however, into an Agricultural appropriation bill, the appropriations in which are to be wholly expended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. PLATT. I beg pardon. All the money for the books which are to be printed, costing one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, is to be expended by the Public Printer.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. That is the mere printing, and that is in accordance with a law which we have passed. So the appropriation for the printing of these agricultural documents is expended under the direction of the Public Printer because the law requires it to be so expended. That is necessary.

Mr. PLATT. The Secretary of Agriculture does not have anything to do with that appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. Technically the Senator from Connecticut is correct; but really the Senator does not understand that the appropriations in this bill, providing for the administration of the Agricultural Department, are to be distributed through all the Departments of the Government, and to be expended by the several Secretaries. That was the substance of what I intended to say.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask the Senator on what bill this provision should be properly placed?

Mr. ALLISON. It should properly be placed on the sundry civil bill, where all of the appropriations for the Geological Survey are usually made.

Mr. KYLE. I know we had the matter under consideration last year and we had a good deal of debate regarding it, and in the shuffle we were afraid we were going to be lost on both sides.

Mr. ALLISON. I know why the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is anxious about this special appropriation in the bill. It is because there is now a deficiency in the appropriation for the measurements of the streams, which deficiency was not presented to the Committee on Appropriations until after the urgent deficiency appropriation bill had been passed. There ought to be a provision of $5,000 made for the measurement of those streams before the sundry civil bill will probably come before us. For myself I should be glad if the Senators interested in this amendment would allow it to stand until the sundry civil bill shall appear, when a proper appropriation will be made for this purpose. I should be entirely willing to strike out the whole of this appropriation under the Department of Agriculture, for I think it is practically useless, and the committee, having that in view, struck down the appropriation from $15,000 to $6,000. I should be entirely content—though I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] who has charge of this bill—if the entire provision were stricken out.

I believe that the appropriation suggested by the Senator from Wyoming is a wise one, and I should support it cordially in another bill, but it does seem to me that it is inappropriate to insert it in this bill. However, I shall not myself make the point of order upon the proposition.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am in thorough accord with the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], as I think all the Western representatives on this floor are. I am very glad to say that the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] meets with my cordial support. It is perfectly absurd to state that we shall expend $6,000 to complete the collection of information as to the best modes of agriculture by irrigation. Three-fifths of this country is irrigable, and you can not begin to complete the collection of information by an expenditure of $6,000. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Wyoming, I, speaking for myself, will be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa and strike out this entire clause, depending upon getting into the sundry civil bill the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Two points may be made in a decided way in favor of the appropriation and change which I prefer. So far as the narrow confines of technical construction of language are concerned, to have this amendment go in here may be an innovation, but it covers a want that can not be covered in the sundry civil bill nor any other bill, nor in any other way, because an immediate appropriation is required to prevent a suspension of extremely necessary work now being performed, and the sundry civil bill, general deficiency bill, and others will not be passed early enough to furnish relief.

There are now at work over the Western country agents of the Geological Survey—on small pay, it is true—who, with the State engineers, and in connection with State governments, are gauging the streams to ascertain their flow and the supply of water. The appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year of 1896 was insufficient, and unless we appropriate money immediately to continue the work those men will have to be brought in, and the expense of bringing them in and sending them out again, later on, would be as much, perhaps, as the $5,000 proposed to be made immediately available in my proposed amendment to carry on the work.

I move this amendment in the interest of economy and efficacy. I agree that to strike out the committee's proposed $6,000 and leave the bill with nothing for irrigation investigation to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture would be no loss to the people in the arid regions, but I go further than to strike out the useless $6,000 for the Secretary of Agriculture, and I seek in some way to cover at this time a deficiency that exists, as shown in the estimate submitted by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, now in the possession of the Senator from North Carolina, to whom I loaned it a moment ago.

Irrigation work has been done, both under the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, for many years. Sometimes the appropriations have been small for one and large for the other, and in some years appropriations have been larger than in others.

There will be nothing done in all probability which will be of value to irrigation if we leave the committee amendment in as it is, which provides $6,000, just about enough to pay three clerks to sit in their office and write discouraging letters in answer to those received making inquiry about irrigation. During the last three years there has been no report upon this subject made from the Agricultural Department. There has been nothing done whatever, as far as we can learn, to prosecute irrigation or reclamation of arid lands, nothing except to curtly acknowledge letters that have been received. But even this courtesy of reply has been denied by the Secretary of Agriculture to the United States Senate, for on December 20 the following resolution was introduced:

IRRIGATION INTERESTS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture be requested to furnish such information as may be had in their respective Departments concerning the existing legislation relative to irrigation as far as it concerns the Executive Departments, the operations of each bureau and office in any way concerned with irrigation, the principles which govern the subdivision of work among the various offices wherever the law allows latitude, and such other facts as will serve to show clearly what has been already accomplished and what is proposed to be accomplished in this line."

To which the Secretary of Agriculture has made no reply.

I do not want to see shut out entirely from a measure which purports to be the regular Agricultural bill all benefits proposed for those interested in irrigation. I do not want to say to the farmers in my State and in other Western States that they are not in any way recognized in this bill. I see no difference as to which Department expends the money. We are appropriating money for agriculture. I do not care whether money appropriated in this bill is expended under the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior, provided it is expended in the interest and for the benefit of the subject named, but I do not want the money fooled away or misapplied.

I ask that the amendment may be adopted as it is, making $5,000 immediately available. That sum can be expended immediately, and will perform as much work if made available now as $10,000 will perform if we wait until the sundry civil bill comes here.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely desire to say a word. When this matter was under consideration in the Committee on Appropriations it was a matter of doubt in the minds of the committee whether the provision ought to be left there at all, and for a time the disposition on the part of those coming nearest to representing what is called the "arid region" seemed to be in favor of striking it all out. I know it was the disposition of the committee, generally, to do whatever was best in the interest of irrigation, and if the provision had been as those most interested wanted it, the amount would have been made larger.

But after a considerable time it was determined to leave the amount in the bill at $6,000, and to secure that sum in the way the provision indicates. I myself am exceedingly anxious that whatever legislation may be necessary to bring into use the lands of the arid regions, or in regions where water has to be carried to the land and dispersed over it, shall be enacted; but it is apparent that those most interested in the subject are not satisfied with the provision in the bill or with any other provision or amount to be expended in such manner as this clause provides for.

I said to the Senator from Wyoming that I should be glad indeed if he could prepare such a provision as would be satisfactory to the people most interested in the subject, and I went so far as to ask him to confer with as many of the gentlemen representing that portion of the country as he could. He has prepared such an amendment, but we are met with the difficulty that it provides for an entirely different mode and manner of operation and also for a different Department to have the expenditure of the money.

Therefore the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations raises the point that in a bill every provision of which is under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture, except as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, we are inserting a clause which as to a particular investigation takes the matter out of the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and his Department and places it in the hands of another Department. He suggests, and I think properly, that it ought not to be done, and that such legislation as will be satisfactory to the gentlemen representing that section of the country should be put on the sundry civil bill.

I hope the Senator from Wyoming will consent to that arrangement. I would be willing even to consent to the greater part of the appropriation remaining in the bill if it would seem to Senators consistent, to be used as a deficiency fund pending the time when the other provision shall become a law.

Mr. TELLER. That does not meet the trouble. This Department is doing nothing that is of any value whatever——

Mr. ALLISON. Let us strike out this provision.

Mr. TELLER. And another Department is. If this clause is not amended as the Senator from Wyoming proposes, the provision ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Colorado is familiar not only with legislation on the subject, but with the administration of the Interior Department and the Departments generally, and I should like to have him state whether or not he thinks it would be better to put the appropriation in the sundry civil bill this year or leave it as now proposed?

Mr. TELLER. I will admit that that seems to be the logical method of proceeding, and I do not know but that it can be reached just about as quickly in the sundry civil bill as in this bill, probably; at any rate within a short time.

Mr. CULLOM. A month or two.

Mr. TELLER. There is not money enough to continue the work. If it was certain that we would appropriate the money the work would go on, and if the money was appropriated a month from now it would probably do just as well.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I wish to state that this work has already been planned by the Geological Survey in connection with State geological surveys. They are at work now, but the appropriation has given out.

The geologist in my State, a most excellent and efficient man, has written here that if the work is not done early this spring it can not be done so well, and that it will have to be done at greater cost, because they will have to cease operations. The geological survey of North Carolina is at work now, and the National Geological Survey is cooperating with it. The State geological survey would have to stop. They could not work in conjunction. It is true that this money would be more appropriately asked for in the general deficiency bill, but it is a matter of importance, of emergency, and to get the best results with the amount of money the appropriation should be made early.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior recommended this appropriation on February 19. His communication came to the Senate a few days after the urgent deficiency bill was passed. The next day after that bill had passed I received a long letter from the State geologist of North Carolina, urging me to get this appropriation upon the urgent deficiency bill. But it was a day or two too late. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior also came a day or two too late. If this appropriation be put in the pending bill it will be economy, and it seems to me that is a more important consideration than the question whether it is put in the Agricultural bill or the general deficiency bill or the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to make a suggestion which perhaps will be satisfactory to all the gentlemen who are interested in this subject? If so, so far as I am personally concerned, I would be willing to let it rest upon that temporary basis as a sort of deficiency arrangement. I propose to insert this provision in the place of the one that is now in the bill:

To enable the Director of the United States Geological Survey to continue gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, to June 30, 1896, $4,500, to be made immediately available.

Mr. BUTLER. That will be agreeable to me if it is to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Wyoming will consent to that provision, so far as I am concerned I will allow it to go into the bill in that shape.

Mr. WARREN. I appreciate the proposition. The reason why I desire that the money shall be handled by some other Department is shown in many ways, but principally on page 50 of the 1895 report of the Secretary of Agriculture, in which, where he closes as to the irrigation inquiry, he says:

With almost a superabundance of agricultural products in our home markets at reasonably low prices, public funds out of taxes gathered largely from existing farms and farmers can not justly be appropriated from the Treasury of the United States to create competing farms.

Now, Mr. President, I submit that those who are interested in carving out "competing farms" in the Rocky Mountain and desert plain regions are not in favor of having this "competing farm" fearing Department handle in any manner any money that shall be appropriated to forward the work of irrigation and the reclamation of arid lands. That is one proposition.

The second proposition, so far as the deficiency is concerned, is that if you appropriate $4,500 in order to gauge those streams hundreds of miles from railroads, thousands of miles from headquarters, the funds must be available at once. It takes quite a good deal of time to prepare the work for the next season, and in order to do it economically it must be done in unison with the States and with the State boards, and it is necessary to plan with certainty long beforehand the $15,000 appropriation asked for.

I have here a paper published at my home, of date Friday, February 28, which gives a list of persons who, since January 11, have applied for lands under the so-called Carey Act. The list—which I ask to have printed in my remarks—shows that more than fifty applications have been made in one and one-half months' time to enter land under that law, and the aggregate number of acres amounts to over 50,000. The great necessity for this land is water, and what is most interesting to these proposed land reclaimers, and what must be first established for them, is the water supply and an assurance of its adequacy.

APPLICATIONS FOR LEASE OF STATE LANDS DONATED UNDER ACT OF JULY 16, 1890—NEARLY 53,000 ACRES APPLIED FOR SINCE JANUARY 11, 1896, THE DATE OF THE LAST PUBLICATION OF THE LIST IN THE TRIBUNE.

On January 11 last the Tribune published for the information of those concerned a list of the applications on file in the office of the secretary of the State land board for the lease of lands donated to the State by the General Government under the act of admission.

The applications filed since January 11, are as follows:

In gauging the streams they must be gauged at all seasons of the year, every month; in fact, at different times in the month. If the proposition to expend this money through the Department of the Interior is wrong, that has been already waived by the late proposition of the Senator in charge of the bill. Having waived the opposition because it is to be expended through the Interior Department, I ask why we shall not appropriate $15,000, as well as $5,000, so that the work shall go on without waiting for the sundry civil bill, in order that the officers can depend upon it and can keep the men and instruments now at those remote points, where they are, and can conduct the work to a finality not only with an understanding as to the present, but know about what will be their season's work?

Now, I beg the Senator from Illinois to let the amendment stand as I offer it. Of course, if he insists upon it I shall be obliged to surrender, but if it is fair and right to expend in that manner $4,500 or $5,000, it is fair and right to expend $10,000 or $15,000; and if it is proposed to put that amount or more in the sundry civil bill, if you put in any of the sum now—and I insist that it is necessary—it is a business proposition to put it all in. So I ask that the amendment shall go in in its entirety.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Wyoming knows that I am the best natured man in the world and especially toward him, and I would yield in anything that I consistently could. But I do not think that he ought to insist upon any greater sum than will carry this work along until another bill shall be passed, which will be within a month or two, and will substantially answer all he desires in the premises.

Mr. KYLE. Do we understand the Senator from Illinois to give a guaranty that there will be a liberal appropriation in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I can not guarantee anything. I said in the outset that I am exceedingly anxious that whatever sum is necessary to be expended in order to carry on the work of irrigation shall be appropriated by Congress and that whatever legislation is necessary shall be enacted.

Mr. KYLE. The committee was very unanimous last year that it should be stricken from the Agricultural bill, and they said they would put it in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not have charge of the sundry civil bill in any way, but I know that the members of the Appropriations Committee are all anxious to do whatever the gentlemen who are especially interested in the subject desire in the premises.

Mr. WARREN. After the promise and the explanation that has been made, I can not resist the appeal of the Senator from Illinois. I merely want to draw attention at this time to the fact that $15,000 is the same amount, no more or no less, that was appropriated in the Agricultural act of last year.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say further that if it is my good fortune to be here in this Chamber at some other time, when some other man is at the head of the Agricultural Department, I shall desire a very much larger appropriation put into proposed Agricultural bills, to be expended in the interests of the reclamation of arid lands, and I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, to evacuate the field, and to leave out of Agricultural bills hereafter a sufficient appropriation for this purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Wyoming to withdraw his amendment, and the Senator from Illinois submits an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive, and insert what I have sent to the desk.

Mr. WARREN. Appropriating how much?

Mr. CULLOM. Four thousand five hundred dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after line 11 on page 17, down to and including line 15, in the following words:

Irrigation investigation: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the collection of information as to the best modes of agriculture by irrigation, $15,000.

And to insert:

Geological Survey: To enable the Director of the United States Geological Survey to continue gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, in arid and semiarid sections, to June 30, 1896, $4,500, to be immediately available.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the people of Florida and some of the Southern States are interested in the question of irrigation. There are two aspects of that question. One relates to the methods of application, the other to the water supply and the area. One of these belongs to geology. The question of the subterranean rivers and streams and the areas of waters on the surface of the earth is geological, and that is a proper subject for the Geological Survey to investigate. The methods of the application of water are matters for agriculture, and in that respect the diffusion of information is the sole function that the Agricultural Department can have, and the most important one in that branch of the subject. In that the people of Florida are greatly interested.

I shall take no part in this discussion, but I wish to say that you can not divorce the Department of Agriculture from the important function of diffusing information as to the methods of the application of water, the plants to which it shall be applied, the seasons when it shall be applied, and you should not attempt to do it. The two should go together. The Geological Survey should have an ample appropriation, for this is one of the most important subjects connected with agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 18, on page 10, I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "fifteen" before "thousand," so as to read:

Botanical investigations and experiments, Division of Botany: Investigations relating to medicinal and other economic plants, the collection of plants, traveling expenses, and express charges; the purchase of specimens, paper, and all other necessary supplies, materials, and apparatus for the herbarium, and labor necessary in preparing the same; subscriptions to and purchase of botanical publications for use in the division, and the preparation, illustration, and publication of reports, $15,000.

I will state that in years past it has been customary to appropriate from $25,000 to $30,000 for the expenses of botanical investigations and experiments for the Division of Botany. A year ago the Division of Agrostology was created out of the Division of Botany, and was set aside as a separate and independent division. Since that time the expenses of the Botanical Division have been at the rate of $20,000, and it is proposed by this bill to cut that sum down to $10,000, which will necessitate cutting the division in two and thus impair its usefulness. The Division of Agrostology has a separate appropriation, and, as I have said, is a separate division.

The Secretary in his official estimate asks for $20,000 for the expenses of the Division of Botany on its own account, exclusive of the Division of Agrostology. So it must be plain to Senators that if we cut in two the amount that is being expended now to sustain that division and decrease the sum from $20,000 to $10,000 the division itself must be cut in two and one-half the employees discharged and one-half of its usefulness be destroyed. Hence I move the amendment which I have indicated.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to take a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill (S. 1448) to withdraw from the Supreme Court jurisdiction of criminal cases not capital and confer the same on the circuit courts of appeals. It is a bill which was very carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as reads "in cases of conviction of a capital or otherwise infamous crime," be amended by striking out the words "or otherwise infamous," so that the same will read "in cases of conviction of a capital crime"; and that appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district courts or circuit courts to the proper circuit court of appeals in cases of conviction of an infamous crime not capital: Provided, That no case now pending in the Supreme Court or in which an appeal or writ of error shall have been taken or sued out before the passage of this act shall be hereby affected, but in all such cases the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall remain and said Supreme Court shall proceed therein as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know the scope of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. It is a bill to transfer jurisdiction in criminal cases not capital from the Supreme Court to the respective circuit courts of appeals in the several circuits.

Mr. CALL. All right. The explanation is sufficient.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED ART COMMISSION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the consent of the Senate for the consideration of the bill (S. 1922) creating an art commission of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that we might proceed for half an hour or so under the same arrangement which was agreed to yesterday upon his motion. I stayed here all day yesterday hoping to reach one of my bills and came within three of it. Now I am losing ground all the while by these special exceptions.

Mr. HALE. I think that would be a very fitting thing to do.

Mr. HILL. If we proceed in this way I shall not be as near my bill another day as I was last night when we adjourned.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I shall make the request after the conclusion of the bill the Senator from North Dakota desires to call up.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I simply desire to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. When that bill is through I shall submit the same proposition I made yesterday, to take up the Calendar where we left off yesterday and proceed for the remainder of the day to consider unobjected cases.

Mr. HARRIS. For the remainder of what day—to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. HALE. Of to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. There is not much remainder left of to-day. It is now 5 o'clock.

Mr. BERRY. I think we might call up bills specially this evening. Many Senators on either side of the Chamber have special bills, short bills, that they desire to have considered, and I think we would get along more rapidly in that way for the rest of to-day's session.

Mr. HALE. I have nothing to ask for myself; I am not particular about it. I thought if we would take up the Calendar where we left off yesterday and go on in order it would be a good proceeding, but of course it can only be done by unanimous consent. If anyone objects to it that is the end of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1922) creating an art commission of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to object when a request is made for unanimous consent, but still I ask that the bill may go over, because I have had some letters with reference to the bill and I have not had time to look into the matter. I did not know that the bill would come up at any time soon and I have not investigated it. I do not propose to delay the consideration of the bill long. I will try to be ready to-morrow to take up the bill and proceed with it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from North Carolina well knows the almost utter impossibility of getting unanimous consent here to have a bill taken up. I have been making an effort here to get this bill up for the last three weeks. I have received letters on this question no doubt similar to those received by the Senator from North Carolina. I reported the bill from the Committee on the Library, the committee believing that it is absolutely necessary that we should have some legislation on this subject.

Mr. BUTLER. I will hear the bill read before making any objection to its being considered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state that I have some amendments to the bill, which have been suggested by Senators and others who are familiar with the subject, which I shall offer at the proper time.

Mr. BUTLER. May I make a parliamentary inquiry? By allowing the bill to be read I will still have the right to object?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will still have the right to object. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Let the bill go over until the next day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas objects.

PORT OF SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to let that bill go over. My attention has been called to it.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object to its consideration?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do object, if I have a right to object.

Mr. BERRY. I say does the Senator object?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. BERRY. He objects to unanimous consent? I have asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object. I have been requested to look at the bill. I will look at it and notify the Senator from Arkansas after I have examined it.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state, if I may be permitted, that I was designated by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to report the bill to the Senate, and a member from New York who represents that district has been continually urging me for a week to have the bill called up and considered at the first opportunity. This is the first chance I have had; but of course if the Senator from New Hampshire objects that carries it over.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Arkansas is at liberty to say to the distinguished Representative from the Syracuse district who it is in this House that objects. The bill proposes to create a large number of additional offices. In these hard times when the poor of New York and of Arkansas are under a pressure, I do not intend to let the bill go through until after I have examined it.

Mr. BERRY. It was not necessary for the Senator from New Hampshire to have given any reasons. I simply desired to give the gentleman from New York who represents that district, and who is very anxious to have the bill passed, the reasons why I have been unable to have it considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. While I am on the subject, I take occasion to say that I do not think it right to come in here with the wishes of individual members of the House of Representatives. They are entitled to all respect while they confine themselves to their own proper functions, but certainly it does not seem to me that it would be proper for a Representative to get up in the House of Representatives and say, "Senator So and So wants a thing done"; neither ought it to be said here because an objection is made to the consideration of a bill that the enmity, perhaps, will be incurred of the Representative from the district in the other House. I do not suppose the Senator from Arkansas intended anything of that kind, but it has an uncomfortable sound to be in some sort threatened in that way with the animosity of a member of the House who undoubtedly is powerful within his own district, perhaps in his State, perhaps throughout the nation.

Mr. BERRY. As to what is proper or improper for me to do here I am the sole judge, and I take no orders or suggestions from the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to that matter. So far as intending to threaten the Senator with the enmity of the distinguished gentleman from New York who represents that district and whose name I do not know, I had no such intention. I only gave as a reason why I was anxious to have the bill considered that he had made a request of me to have it done, and that I had been requested by the Senator from Maine to report the bill to the Senate.

RESTRICTION OF FREE MAIL MATTER.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up a bill which will meet the approval of every member of the Senate. It was explained the other day. It is a bill to limit the use of the post-offices in transportation of mail, and to prevent the transportation of roller desks, electric motors, carpets all made up, and other heavy truck at the expense of the Government. It is the bill (S. 2169) to regulate mail matter of the fourth class. It is a very short bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CALL. I do not like to object, and I shall not do so; but I will state to the Senator from Colorado that there is a good deal of opposition in the country to that bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I explain to the Senator from Florida that this is not the bill he refers to? This only applies to the Government Departments in shipping matter.

Mr. CALL. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It does not apply to anything except to the shipment by the Treasury and other Departments, against the protests of the Post-Office Department, free, of different heavy articles.

The Senator will see that it simply changes the law so as to limit free mail matter to letters and documents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be read at length as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not want to object to the bill. I am a member of the committee, but I did not happen to be present when it was considered, which was my own fault. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado, the chairman of the committee, how this bill changes the present law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It simply limits the different Departments in sending matter free through the mails to letters and documents printed at Government expense, or packages weighing 3 pounds, and does not permit them to send roller desks and other heavy machinery, at the expense of the Post-Office Department, through the mails.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any law now providing that that may be done?

Mr. WOLCOTT. There ought not to be, but the construction which the different Departments have placed upon the existing law apparently authorizes them to do it, although the Post-Office Department has protested against it. The proposed change of phraseology puts the law beyond question.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not all this Government work done at Government cost?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; but it should be appropriated for in the appropriations for the several Departments. Instead of that, it goes to help make up the deficit of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask another question. I have no doubt that the chairman has investigated this matter, and I want the information. What will be the relative difference between the cost? Now, this is Government business. The Government must pay somebody to do it, and it now has a way to do it. How much is the difference between the cost to the Government in transporting the matter and having it done——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will tell the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. The difference in cost between transporting these heavy articles through the mails——

Mr. WOLCOTT. So far as it can be ascertained——

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; answer that question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So far as it can be reasonably ascertained, the expense to the Government is greater under the present arrangement in addition to the evident unfairness of the custom. I will say to the Senator that the mails are paid for by weight. If, when a Government building is being fitted, we will say in California, there is sent from here a half dozen carpets, all made up, an electric motor, and half a dozen roller desks, and they go by mail free and it happens to be a weighing day, then for three hundred and sixty-five days in the year the Government pays as if every day all this great mass of stuff, which is unmailable and which has no business in the postal cars, were to be carried. In addition to that, these articles are so bulky and so large that additional employees have to be gathered together in the different towns to load and unload them, and doors have to be taken out of the postal cars to put the stuff in.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the Senator any information that the Departments of the Government have ever purposely sent these articles on the days that the mails were weighed, so as to charge the Government with the increased weight for the full year?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; but if they failed to do that and took advantage of those days when the mails were weighed, and wronged the railroads to that extent, the Government officials are not fit to hold their places a day. The Government should pay upon its average business, and it is the duty of the Government to see that the average mail is sent on a weighing day. If the Government officials would not send the matter through on the days when the mails were weighed, and saved their heavy stuff for those days when the mails were not weighed, then I say the Government officials would be derelict in their duty.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the Senator that the point is to get at the average business; but has the Senator any information that the Departments have been doing that thing for the purpose of getting more matter through the mails?

Mr. WOLCOTT. But it does not become an average. You can not average it. It is perpetrated, too, upon comparatively few occasions, because fortunately the great, lumbering freight does not have to be sent every day, but it may be sent upon weighing day or it may be sent upon a day which is not weighing day, and it is not a fit subject for the mails. The Postmaster-General urges the passage of this bill, and the construction which the other Departments put upon the law is very doubtful.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the rate the Government has to pay now for the transmission of this matter?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It varies. If they send, for instance, by mail they do not pay anything. If they send by freight they pay freight rates. They pay less rates on certain railroads than on others. If they send by express they have certain express rates to pay. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that there is a report filed in connection with this bill, and that the Post-Office Committee, not at one meeting, but at several, at which unfortunately the Senator from North Carolina was not present, had this bill under discussion, and if he had only contented himself with reading the report which accompanies the bill he would not now object, I know, to its passage.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the Senator does not object, since I have been derelict in my duty, because I am myself trying to get the information in the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no doubt the Senator is the only member of the Senate who has not read the report. I am very glad indeed personally to give him any information in my power. I certainly never suspected that the Senator from North Carolina had not read the report until he rose and asked to have the bill explained.

Mr. BUTLER. If this matter is not carried through the mails it will be carried by the express companies?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Or by the railroad companies, or it will be bought in the place where the building is erected, or they will go without it or pay for it themselves, or put the postage on it if it does not weigh too much, or divide it up into small packages, so that each separate parcel will not weigh more than 3 pounds. So that in some way or other they will comply with the law and not put this burden on the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BUTLER. Does this very valuable report, which everybody has read but myself, show that it will be economy to the Government to make this change?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Right here I should like to call attention to the fact that it appeared before the committee, and I think it has appeared still more clearly since, that nine-tenths, if not ninety-nine one-hundredths of all this merchandise might go by freight just as well as by mail. There is no haste about it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It might go by canal, most of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I regret very much, being the only man in the Senate who has not read the report, to object to the bill, but I think as I am the only man who has not read it, that I shall have to object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If that be so, then I beg in behalf of the public service that the Senator from North Carolina will attend the next meeting of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and assist that committee in the performance of its duties.

Mr. GRAY. I ask whether the bill was not already up for consideration by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the bill was read for information. Objection has been interposed to its consideration at this time.

Mr. GRAY. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado to move to take it up.

LIEUT. WILLIAM M'CARTY LITTLE.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 76) authorizing Lieut. William McCarty Little to accept a decoration from the King of Spain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not object to that joint resolution, but I rise for the purpose of giving notice that, if I can get the floor when this matter is disposed of, I propose to move that the Senate adjourn; but I do not want to make that motion in the face of the request of any Senator to consider any matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will substitute for that motion a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, Mr. President, I will yield to such a motion.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be regarded as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of asking that the title of that joint resolution might be again read, so that I might determine whether or not I would object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the joint resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 76) authorizing Lieut. William McCarty Little to accept a decoration from the King of Spain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. I do not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes Lieut. William McCarty Little, of the United States Navy, to accept from the King of Spain, through the Queen Regent, the decoration of the cross of ordinary commander of the Order of Isabella the Catholic in recognition of his services in Spain in connection with the Columbian Exposition.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTRICTION OF FREE MAIL MATTER.

Mr. HARRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill (S. 2169) to regulate mail matter of the fourth class. I assure the Senator that the bill is one which will commend itself to his judgment upon consideration, and I trust that he will let it be called up and acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw my objection, Mr. President.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2169) to regulate mail matter of the fourth class. It provides that mailable matter of the fourth class shall embrace all matter not embraced in the first, second, or third class which is not in its form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise damage the contents of the mail bag or harm the person of anyone engaged in the postal service, and is not above the weight provided by law, which is hereby declared to be not exceeding 4 pounds for each package thereof, except in case of single books weighing in excess of that amount, and except for books and documents published or circulated by order of Congress, or printed or written official matter emanating from any of the Departments of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution, or which is not declared nonmailable under the provisions of section 3893 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of July 12, 1876, or matter appertaining to lotteries, gift concerts, or fraudulent schemes or devices.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 4, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 3, 1896.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Charles E. Wells, of West Virginia, to be marshal of the United States for the district of West Virginia, vice A. D. Garden, deceased.

PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE CORPS.

First Lieut. Thomas N. Wood, of the Marine Corps, to be a captain in said Corps, from the 28th of January, 1896, vice Capt. Samuel Mercer, retired.

Second Lieut. Rufus H. Lane, of the Marine Corps, to be a first lieutenant in said Corps, from the 28th of January, 1896, vice First Lieut. Thomas N. Wood, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 3, 1896.

CONSUL.

Samuel H. Keedy, of New York, to be consul of the United States at Grenoble, France.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL.

George J. Roskruge, of Tucson, Ariz., to be surveyor-general of Arizona.

CALIFORNIA DÉBRIS COMMISSION.

Under the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 1, 1893, entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," * * * the following-named officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for appointment as members of the Commission, to date from December 27, 1895:

Col. Charles Russell Suter.

Maj. Charles Edward Law Baldwin Davis.

Capt. Cassius Eric Gillette.

MEMBER OF THE MISSOURI RIVER COMMISSION.

Lieut. Col. William Rice King, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Charles E. Wells, of West Virginia, to be United States marshal for the district of West Virginia.

S. Henry Van Dyck, to be postmaster at Coxsackie, in the county of Greene and State of New York.

Leonard W. Young, to be postmaster at Bayshore, in the county of Suffolk and State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 3, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3537) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. R. 43) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase and distribute seeds, bulbs, etc., as has been done in preceding years.

CORRECTION.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, in making a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs yesterday I omitted to include among the resolutions considered by the committee and for which the committee resolutions were reported as a substitute the resolutions (H. Res. 122) submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GIBSON. They should have been included with the other resolutions enumerated in the report.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, House bill No. 5831 was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, properly, as that committee thinks, but there is some question about it and some desire on the part of other gentlemen that it should go to the Committee on Railroads and Canals, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be so referred. It is the bill to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Canal Company, etc.

Mr. POWERS objected to the proposed change of reference, but subsequently withdrew the objection, and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Railroads and Canals.

The SPEAKER. Senate bill 1631, granting a pension to Emeline Filgate, has been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions by error. The reference should have been to the Committee on Pensions, and if there be no objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ANCHORAGE IN ST. MARYS RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 4779) relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Marys River, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

On motion of Mr. BENNETT, the amendments were concurred in.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KULP, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for four days, on account of important business.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE, by unanimous consent, obtained an order for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 3339) to create a special commission on highways and to make appropriation therefor, the supply of the same having been exhausted.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee of the Whole rose last evening I was endeavoring to explain that part of the amendment which provides for field deputies (which is section 6), and to explain also the limited departure made by that section from the general principle of the measure, which is to substitute salaries for fees. The committee with great reluctance felt constrained to make this limited departure, and were especially influenced by the advice of the Department of Justice. The committee first consented to give to these field deputies three-fourths of their fees as compensation for their services, because it was felt that some stimulus was necessary to incite these gentlemen to activity in the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws.

Afterwards, when the committee asked the opinion of the Department of Justice as to whether or not the provisions of this amendatory bill would impair the strength of the arm of the Government in the enforcement of the laws, the Department of Justice informed the committee, after careful consideration of some days, that unless these field deputies, besides their regular compensation, were permitted to be paid their actual and necessary expenses, that Department could hardly say conscientiously that the arm of the Government would not be weakened in the enforcement of the laws. For this reason the committee consented to the provisions of section 7; and, on reflection, I will say for myself (and the committee all concur in the opinion) that I recognize the necessity for the creation of these field deputies on the basis of section 6 of the bill.

Section 7 provides for subsistence and traveling expenses of marshals.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask a question concerning section 6. Did the committee take into consideration that the appointment of field deputies should be restricted in such a way that it should not be at the mere option of the marshal himself, but should be done with the approval of the district judge?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. In reply to the gentleman's question, I can say that the committee did go over that ground with great care. These field deputies, as I have already said, were created, among other objects, to answer emergencies. Their appointment is to be made by the marshal, who is to report immediately that appointment to the Attorney-General; the latter officer has power to cancel those appointments, or to permit the officers to remain till such time as they may become unnecessary, when he can terminate their authority. We did not think it necessary to make these appointments dependent at all upon the judge.

I wish to say in this connection that in framing this bill, where it was necessary to lodge discretion somewhere as to some particular action, we have placed that discretion as far as possible in a single place—in the Department of Justice. That Department must make report to Congress. If the Department goes wrong, Congress can call it to account. But Congress would not be able practically to call to account 1,500 or 2,500 deputy marshals scattered all over the United States. Under this measure the responsibility is lodged where the Congress of the United States can control the matter; and I venture to say that the discretion where it is to be lodged under this bill will be patriotically exercised.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman refer me to the section giving the Attorney-General power to cancel these appointments?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That will be found in section 6. The gentleman will permit me to say it is hardly fair to occupy my limited time by asking me questions as to what an examination of the bill itself will show him.

Section 10 provides for clerks for district attorneys. Where the business is large the district attorney often needs clerical assistance. It is now the habit of business men to use typewriters in conducting correspondence; and for the same reason typewriters are often necessary in the offices of the district attorneys. Hence we have given to the district attorney power to employ, with the approval of the Attorney-General, necessary clerical assistance.

The next two sections are purely administrative. The next section (section 13 of the amendment and 19 of the bill) prohibits United States officers from demanding or receiving illegal compensation.

We now reach another subject. The committee in the early part of their labors determined not to excite too many enemies, and therefore decided to leave out of the bill clerks and commissioners. These gentlemen have no power to institute criminal proceedings; therefore it was not so important in connection with this measure of reform that they be reached. On first consideration the committee decided that it would limit the fees of United States commissioners to $5 a day in any one case, as there had grown up an abuse under which commissioners would keep a case pending day after day indefinitely, and then charge the Government $5 for each day, when the case might have been disposed of in one day as well as not. After agreeing upon this, under the advice of the Department of Justice, the committee went a little further and fixed a schedule of commissioners' fees. There is now no law fixing the term of the commissioners of the circuit court, as they are technically called.

The country is full of such officers, many of them not knowing that they have been appointed commissioners. As we all remember, several electors for President and Vice-President have been found by examining musty old records to have been circuit court commissioners when they had lost the consciousness of that fact themselves. The office has been greatly abused in many cases. It has even been questioned whether Congress possesses the power to remove these old commissioners; it has been claimed that they hold their offices until death releases them. I do not assent to that construction of the law, but that has been claimed. In view of these considerations the committee decided to abolish entirely the office of commissioners of the circuit court, to wipe out the whole list, and to create United States commissioners, with exactly the same functions, under a different name, and to fix their fees.

I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman, that since this bill was brought into the House the committee have agreed to some amendments which will be offered at the proper time as committee amendments. They do not essentially change the bill, and are mainly verbal amendments, only one or two, perhaps three, of them being substantial.

Now, I wish to add a word about the importance of this bill, and it is hardly necessary, I imagine, to do so, for there is no man of intelligence, with reference to public affairs in this country, that can not see the necessity of some radical change in this regard. Most of the States of the Union have already abolished the fee system, because the law has created no machinery by which the State officers are enabled to plunder the public more effectively than through the fee system; and wherever it can be abolished it is the universal sentiment of the people that the salary system should be substituted as speedily as possible for the fee system. In those States which have already adopted the salary system as far as practicable, I believe that no consideration could possibly induce them to return to the fee system.

I said a word in the commencement of my remarks about the magnitude of the expenses of the Department of Justice. These expenses have been growing year by year, until when we come to examine them now we are appalled at the magnitude of the growth; and the trouble is that there is no end to the growth, for it goes on and on indefinitely, and steadily expanding. In 1885 the President of the United States called the attention of Congress to the multitude of frivolous convictions, prosecutions, and expensive litigations that are instituted by these gentlemen who draw their fees as their compensation, and who have the power to institute such proceedings. In the course of the message upon this subject the President says:

> The present mode of compensating United States marshals and district attorneys, in my opinion, ought to be changed. They are allowed to charge against the Government certain fees for services, their income being measured by the amount of such fees within the fixed limit as to their annual aggregate. There is a direct inducement for them to make their fees in criminal cases as large as possible, in an effort to reach the maximum sum permitted. As an entirely natural consequence, unscrupulous marshals are found encouraging frivolous prosecutions, arresting people on petty charges of crime, and transporting them to distant places for examination and trial for the purpose of earning mileage and fees; and district attorneys uselessly attend criminal examinations far from their places of residence for the express purpose of swelling their accounts against the Government. The actual expenses incurred in these transactions are also charged against the Government. Thus the rights and freedom of our citizens are outraged and public expenditures increased for the purpose of furnishing public officers pretexts for increasing the measure of their compensation.

In 1893 the Department of Justice called the attention of Congress to the necessity for a change in this regard in the very strongest terms, and used this emphatic language with reference to the matter:

> Illustrations of the wastefulness and the incongruities of the present system abound on every hand. Congress would not dream of paying any United States district attorney an annual salary twice as large as that received by a judge of a Supreme Court of the United States, yet under the fee system the office of a United States attorney in one district has in recent years realized to its incumbent at least $20,000 a year. In another district, where the earnings of a district attorney for a year and a half amount to $7,063, the returns show that but little more than $1,000 was earned in court, the entire balance, consisting of mileage charges for travel to court, or to attend at the discharge of poor convicts. In another New England district where the entire earnings of the United States attorney, one of the most eminent lawyers of his State, averaged about $400 per year from 1865 to 1880, his successor has received in fees for the year 1880, $1,257.00; for the year 1891, $1,580.80, and for the year 1892, $3,259.80.

Now, then, this was in 1885. Three years after, in 1888, the expenses of the Federal court were $3,864,000. In the year 1895 they had increased to over $6,000,000. In other words, they have more than doubled since 1888, and the business is scarcely increased—in many districts it has actually diminished.

Now, right in this connection I want to call the attention of the committee to another thing that perhaps few persons have had an opportunity to ascertain. The present law gives to the district attorneys and marshals 10 cents per mile for travel both ways—that is to say, travel going and coming—making 20 cents a mile in all. It is well known to all of us that a man who can succeed in one of these offices is usually smart enough to ride on the railroads without any payment at all. Travel fees, until last May, were charged up to an almost unlimited amount to their accounts. Last May the Supreme Court of the United States decided that this travel fee of 20 cents a mile one way was not to go into the fee and emolument accounts where a fee and an emolument account reached the limit of $6,000. These travel fees went into the pockets of the district attorneys, and they could use their assistants to do the traveling that earned them.

While visiting the Department of Justice I ascertained that in one district of the United States since that decision the district attorney has charged up and received in excess of the maximum compensation, for nine months, $2,543. In another district $935 was added in three months. In another district $508; in another district $1,080; in another district $1,061; and so through a large number of the districts of the United States is this unwholesome practice now proceeding, and the Government is paying these things without the knowledge of the people, and without the knowledge of many members of both Houses of Congress. Is it not time, Mr. Chairman, that something was done to stop these unnecessary expenses?

These pointers give us the secret of the steady increase of expenses. It has been said by some philosophical writer that everything and every system and every process on this earth is either dying or growing, is either advancing or going backward, and it is true; but there is one thing that never goes backward without the command of supreme power, and that is a fee bill. A fee bill is capable of indefinite expansion, and the gentlemen whose interest it is to expand fee bills are ingenious enough to accomplish their purpose. When one has made an addition and found a new avenue, a new place in which to insert his arm into the public Treasury, his successor will find another and another, and there is no end to the expansion of which a fee system is capable, except in rural communities where the fee charger is subject to frequent elections and where the fees are paid by the men who elect him to office.

In respect to these United States officers, they are answerable to no one. The wheels of government move on, paying no attention to these small irregularities.

We all know how difficult it is to effect any reform. We know how difficult it is to get a hearing for any cause, however good, or for any reform, however desirable. The present head of the Department of Justice in his last report again calls the attention of Congress to the necessity of this change.

Now, you will see by what I have said that it is utterly impossible to make any accurate estimate of the saving which this bill will accomplish, for we have no means of ascertaining, in the time at our command at least, how much of these accounts are made up of this mileage. I have given instances to show the capacity, the possibilities of the law, as it now stands, and we all know that human nature will exploit those possibilities to the utmost limit sooner or later. As the salaries are now fixed in the amendment we shall save $190,000, and I count that as nothing in comparison——

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman give way for a question?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. With pleasure.

Mr. SULZER. I understand that this bill exempts the district attorney of the southern district of New York?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It does.

Mr. SULZER. I should like to know also whether it exempts the United States commissioner, John A. Shields, of the southern district of New York.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. He is the very man we are after. He represents the class of men we are after exactly, I think. I do not know personally, but there is one man there who is clerk of the United States district court, United States commissioner, collector of internal revenue, and he draws about $20,000 a year out of the Government.

Mr. SULZER. That is not Mr. Shields?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not know whether it is. We have simply excepted the office of the district attorney for that district and all that pertains to it.

Mr. SULZER. I suppose you are aware of the fact that more business in done in the southern district of New York than in all the other districts of the United States combined?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If I understand, that officer is salaried at $6,000 a year by act of Congress.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That office is specially salaried by statute, and has been for several years.

Mr. SULZER. I am referring now to the United States commissioner.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no exception of any United States commissioner. We do not allow any of them to hold double offices anywhere in the United States under this bill.

Mr. SULZER. Does the commissioner in New York City, John A. Shields, hold a double office?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know anything about any individual by name, but the bill is framed so that no United States commissioner can also be the clerk of a court, or vice versa. We except the district attorney and his assistants for the southern district of New York, but in the section which prevents duplication of offices we make no exception.

Mr. SULZER. I am aware of that, and nobody can take any exception to that. I think that is proper; but I should like also to ask this question——

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Shields only reported $1,655 last year as earnings.

Mr. SULZER. This changes the office of the commissioner of the southern district of New York from a fee office to a salaried office.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not the United States commissioner.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not understand that it affects the commissioner of the southern district of New York.

Mr. SULZER. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not understand that it affects him at all.

Mr. CULBERSON. We should like to hear what is being said.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee must be in order. Complaint is made that gentlemen can not hear what is being said.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. As I was remarking when interrupted, the savings on the salaries of the district attorneys and marshals of $190,000 I do not account as amounting to any great thing. The savings of public money will come from other directions. In the first place, there will be less expense of holding the court. There will be fewer frivolous and vexatious cases of prosecution. There will be a further saving, not only to the Government, but to the people who are harassed by these gentlemen, and who are plundered, in many cases, most outrageously. As an evidence of reduction of expenses that we hope to reach by the enactment of this law, I desire to refer the members of this committee, especially those who were members of the last House, to the fact that when in was proposed to put clerks as well as district attorneys and marshals upon salaries there was a general outcry from the clerks against this change. They preferred to hold on to their fees. Within a few days I have received a telegram that has a peculiar significance to my mind, from a gentleman who has a national reputation, a gentleman of high character, and who once was a member of this body. He telegraphed me these words:

If district attorneys and marshals are put on salaries clerks will be ruined if not salaried also.

Ruined! How ruined? Will this amendment burn their habitations and infect their flocks with disease? No. Will it deprive them of the right to carry on their business? No. How are they to be ruined? They are to be ruined because they can not earn as much money from the Government as heretofore in fees; because they see that they will not receive so large fees from these frivolous and vexatious prosecutions. That is the way they will be ruined. Mr. Chairman, if withdrawing from a man the right to plunder the Government; if withdrawing from men the right to take from their neighbors money in frivolous and vexatious prosecutions, be ruin, then I wish that every officer of the United States, State or National, be ruined as speedily as possible. That is the "ruin" that this bill is desired and intended to facilitate. These gentlemen will have their fees remaining for the services which they have to perform, and they will get no other.

Now, a few more words and I am through. I have seen here a feeling like this, that "I must get for my State in this bill a liberal sum or my character at home for efficiency as a Representative will suffer." I have little sympathy with that feeling. The efficiency of a Representative upon this floor depends upon his devotion and activity for the public good. He is not here seeking "a divide." The United States is not a cow, to be milked and her milk to be distributed among the respective States of this Union; and it is no credit to a Representative that he desires and demands for his district an amount for an officer who serves therein beyond reasonable and just compensation. How can my character for being efficient depend upon my procuring the right to some man in my own State to draw a salary that he does not earn?

How can my efficiency as a Representative depend upon turning loose upon the community wherein I live a set—I will not say of pirates—a set of men possessed of letters of marque and reprisal upon my neighbors and friends? I disavow any such character. I am not here for any such purpose. I am here, so far as in me lies, to legislate for the whole people of the United States and to procure efficiency in the enforcement of the laws in so far as I can. So that this bill, while it appropriates no money, while it asks for its support or appeals for its support to no one getting anything out of the public Treasury, it does appeal to the patriotism of every member of this House; it does appeal to public spirit; it appeals to everything that is good and wise and to nothing whatever that is selfish or base; and it must, if it becomes law—if it passes this committee with a favorable recommendation—it must rest upon the patriotism of gentlemen who hold its fate in their hands. That is all.

Mr. FISCHER. I would like to know why the salary for the eastern district of New York, which comprises Long Island and Staten Island, and New York Harbor, with a population of over 1,000,000 is placed at only $3,000?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. If the gentleman will look at the earnings of that district, which he will find in Document No. 167, he will find that there is a less cut there than anywhere in proportion.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a cut of $2,880. The gross earnings were $6,928.49, the net earnings $5,880, and the salary allowed is $3,000.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The net emoluments of that district were $3,950.

Mr. BENNETT. That is for the district attorney.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is a smaller cut in proportion than the average made throughout this schedule of compensation furnished in Document No. 167.

Mr. FISCHER. It is only for information I ask. I understand the reduction is based on the earnings of the fees heretofore.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Oh, no.

Mr. HENDERSON. And also upon the work performed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It is based upon the earnings of the office and the work performed, and from the knowledge the committee gained from the Department of Justice and elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa have all the time he requires to conclude his argument.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, pending that request, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill if there is any agreement as to the time that is to be occupied in general debate?

Mr. HENDERSON. There has been no agreement as yet. We thought we would let the debate run on until we could ascertain the disposition of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman from Iowa be given time to conclude his remarks?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I thank the committee and my colleague from Texas for their courtesy, but I desire to occupy only a very few minutes more.

Mr. LITTLE. Before the gentleman proceeds, will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. If I understand, the effort has been, in the preparation of this bill, to take away from the marshals the temptation to bring useless and frivolous prosecutions?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. To take away that temptation from the marshals and the attorneys.

Mr. LITTLE. Now, what is the reason for not putting commissioners on salaries? In my opinion that would serve as the greatest check upon the action of the deputy marshals. The commissioners are left wholly upon fees, and the more business they make the more money they get. Now, it seems to me that there is the seat of the mischief. If the commissioners could be put upon salaries, then there would be a check put upon them on these frivolous prosecutions. I would like to hear the gentleman upon that line, assuring him that I am not unfriendly to the bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I will reply to the gentleman this: That the Committee on the Judiciary, and doubtless this House, would be very happy, indeed, if they could have brought in a bill and passed it that would make the human race all happy and pure and would cure all the ills that the body politic is heir to [laughter], but they knew they could not pass such a bill in this House. I have already said more than once that we did not desire to excite the resentment of too many enemies. I now say with respect to the commissioners, who are to the United States only what the justices of the peace are to the respective States, that they are the most difficult officers to place upon the salary basis. No State that I know of has been able to put justices of the peace upon a salary basis. We would be glad to do it with the commissioners if it were not for loading down our bill, and also if it were not for the difficulties of the subject. We have not attempted to cure all the evils of the judiciary system. We are merely trying now to make an important step in the right direction, in order that the future may perfect this great reform, as it surely will do whether we commence it now or leave the work for some subsequent Congress. We can not do everything at once; it is impossible.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I desire to say to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] that under the existing law the commissioner is not placed in such a position that he can cause to be instituted these idle prosecutions.

Mr. BROWN. Let me add to what the gentleman from Missouri has said, that the committee has reported an amendment to this bill prohibiting United States commissioners from issuing warrants on the complaints of private individuals until authority has been procured from the United States district attorney, so that if that amendment should be adopted, the commissioners can not issue warrants until they are authorized either by the United States district attorney or by the collector or deputy collector. That, however, applies only to internal-revenue cases.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does that amendment go so far as to prohibit deputy marshals making complaints on which warrants shall be issued?

Mr. BROWN. The deputy marshals can not swear out warrants now before the commissioners unless authorized by the district attorney in internal-revenue cases.

Mr. TAWNEY. But in other cases?

Mr. BROWN. Well, the committee thought that it was perhaps going far enough in making this restriction.

Mr. TAWNEY. In trespass cases, for instance?

Mr. BROWN. That was discussed before the committee, and it was thought unnecessary to go quite so far. The great expense of these courts is in the internal-revenue business.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be so in some districts, but it is not so in the Western districts.

Mr. BROWN. More than half of the $5,000,000 of expenses of the United States courts is expended in thirteen States of this Union, and those are the "moonshiner" States.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel it right to take my seat without acknowledging the very great patience which the Department of Justice has manifested and the very great assistance it has rendered to the Committee on the Judiciary in their deliberation. Another remark that I desire to make before concluding is that, God be praised, there is no sign of partisanship in this bill. In my opinion the present head of the Department of Justice is as earnest and patriotic and sincere in desiring to aid this reform as any man in the United States. And in all the deliberations of the committee, which have been so prolonged, not one hint of partisanship has ever escaped a single lip.

One word more as to the approval of this bill by the Department of Justice. The Attorney-General, after final examination of the measure, says in a letter, suggesting some verbal alterations and amendments:

> I take occasion again to thank the committee for their consideration and patient hearing and to say that I shall be glad to express my hearty approval of the bill in such way and at such time as they may desire.

I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of changing from the fee system to that of salaries for the clerks, marshals, and attorneys of our Federal courts, and I regret that this bill does not provide for it. I am not satisfied with the pending bill in some respects. I introduced a bill myself which I think is a more effective measure for reaching the ends aimed at by the committee than this one. In some particulars the working machinery of the salary system proposed in the pending bill of the committee I think is imperfect, and if left without modification will be found to be incomplete with reference to the end designed to be accomplished. The most of the defects I think are remedied in the bill which I have presented; the liberties of individuals are more securely guarded against groundless and oppressive prosecutions; while the efficient administration of the laws is in no wise impaired, and at no single point are the expenses of the Government augmented, or its revenues diminished. The general effect of several important provisions of it will be to materially reduce expenses. But as I can not hope to have my bill adopted as a whole over the objections of the Judiciary Committee, I will try to have some of its provisions inserted as amendments.

In the preparation of my bill I had the benefit of the experience and help of the very able and competent marshal of the eastern district of Arkansas, and also many suggestions from the worthy clerk of the district in which I reside. The first amendment I suggest is to section 11 as the bill will now be numbered.

There is no objection to office deputies doing field work at such times as they are not engaged in office work if it is possible to get men who are competent both as clerks and field deputies. The best field deputies are usually unfit for office work, and vice versa.

If some amendment like this is not adopted there will be continual irritation between the Department and the marshals' offices as to whether or not certain writs could have been served by the clerks or salaried deputies instead of sending out field deputies; and if the Department of Justice should force the marshal to use these office deputies to go out and serve writs the clerical work of his office will necessarily be neglected, or else he will be compelled to use his own salary to pay for such work.

The next amendment which I propose is a new feature, namely, the summoning of jurors and witnesses in certain cases by mail. This may be by some considered as an innovation, but it is entirely practicable with the present high state of efficiency of the United States postal service and the new facility of securing evidence of service which the modern registry system supplies. Many of the witnesses and all of the jurors in the regular venire can be summoned in this manner and a large saving effected thereby. The practicability of the plan is not conjectural, as it has been the practice of the marshals in Arkansas and other States for years to serve venires and subpœnas in some cases by sending notices and securing written acceptance of service by mail.

The plan has worked well and saved expense and travel to marshals. With this provision enacted into law, the salary system will work still more efficiently, and save expense to the Government, as it has already to marshals. Moreover, the committee makes no provision of any kind for the service of venires, and if the courts should hold, as they are nearly certain to do, that the changes made in the law leaves the Government liable to pay mileage on the service of jurors, it would in the eastern Arkansas district add at least $1,000 a year to what it would cost to serve venires under this plan. That district is probably an average district, so that it is safe to estimate the annual saving for the whole country at $75,000.

The bill allows local deputies three-fourths of the fees, but does not reach the abuse of extortion as to mileage. Under the provisions of the bill, these local deputies would be scattered broadcast over the district and communicated with nearly exclusively by mail. They would be but little under the supervision of the marshal. Therefore they might easily impose on the Government and hatch up frivolous cases to make fees for themselves and the commissioners without the knowledge of the marshal. Nor could they be supervised by the district attorney or judge, except to a very limited extent.

The bill recommended by the committee, indeed, removes temptation from the marshal, but to the deputy it still holds out the same "premium on prosecutions," for he is allowed the same fees and mileages as heretofore. If the fee system is to the marshal an incentive to fraud and perjury, a temptation to the encouragement of frivolous prosecutions involving the Government in needless expense, oppressing the innocent, and outraging the rights of citizens, will it be less so to the deputy, who, under this bill, will get the same proportion of the fees which he now receives.

It must be apparent to anyone who will give the subject due consideration that the deputy is in just as good a position to work up business as the marshal. He is the officer in immediate contact with the people. Some of the deputies in every district are in possession of a larger measure than the marshals of the kind of experience which suggests plans and measures for originating prosecutions and "pushing business." There are deputies in every district to whom it is a life business, who know all the outs and ins, are probably members of detective organizations, and have serviceable business correspondents at different points within the district and outside of it. You may rest assured that if you leave the bars down at this point deputies will not be wanting in many districts who will take prompt advantage of the opening. I think the field deputies should be allowed no fees, and that we should pay them $2 per day and necessary expenses while serving or endeavoring to serve writs and while returning, which is about right for the duties ordinarily performed by them, just as is done with office deputies doing such work.

My next most important amendment is the provision which reduces maximum punishment for the selling of whisky and gives the nearest United States commissioner jurisdiction for final determination and judgment in such cases. As the law now stands, defendants are frequently arrested and conveyed long distances, at a heavy expense to the Government, for a preliminary examination, and after being held to bail are often committed in default of bonds and held in jail for months, in many cases at an enormous expense, while awaiting the grand jury, which in most districts is empaneled twice a year. Then to get an indictment the same witnesses are again summoned and paid mileages and several days' attendance, sometimes a week or more, before the case is reached; an indictment having been returned, the same entire expense has to be repeated at the trial, usually at the next term of court, when the same witnesses are again summoned. This makes three times the witnesses are ordinarily summoned and paid fees and long mileages in cases more than one-half of which result in acquittal or nol-pros; and in the doubtful contingency of conviction the sentence is usually a small fine and a short imprisonment. It thus frequently happens that a man is held in jail three, four, and even five months for an acquittal or a trifling sentence in jail for thirty days, and even not that. This is a grim burlesque alike on economy and justice.

Out of 10,867 criminal cases in 1893 in the circuit and district courts, 8,833, or more than four-fifths of the whole, were internal-revenue cases, and of the 8,833 revenue cases the great majority, probably nine-tenths, were of the classes of cases which are covered by the amendment. Of the 8,833 revenue cases, 4,271 resulted in conviction and 4,562 in acquittal or nol-pros. That is to say, over one-half of the prosecutions failed. Now, economy, as well as justice and right, demand that these trivial prosecutions should be made triable by some means at less expense and smaller inconvenience both to the Government and to the accused. In a single year 4,562 citizens, now presumed to have been innocent, the attempt to convict having failed, were taken for trial before the circuit and district courts, many of whom were taken long distances from their homes for a trial among strangers on trifling charges, many being compelled to make three trips to the remote court or were placed in jails for months awaiting indictment or trial. All were finally turned loose, many of them far from home and among strangers, and penniless.

There are hardships and cruel wrongs growing out of these too often frivolous and utterly groundless prosecutions of which the public never hear and which never reach the ear of Congress. Such cases are unavoidable without such action as is proposed by my amendment. First of all, in the interest of humanity and justice, it is the duty of Congress to close the door against the possibility of these monstrous oppressions and wrongs; but no less is such action demanded by considerations of public economy. These futile prosecutions are a source of enormous expense to the Government. It is a rare and exceptional case that costs less than $100, whether the result be conviction or acquittal, while many cases cost hundreds of dollars, for the Government stops at no expense in prosecuting and pursuing a defendant and bringing him to trial, irrespective of the gravity of the charge.

The change proposed in the amendment, if it does not wholly eliminate, will minimize the possiblity of oppression and wrong through the protracted incarceration of persons charged with these minor offenses, and will at the same time reduce the expenses of such trials.

I have another amendment that limits the number of jurors in original venires to the number provided for in State courts under the laws of the several States, which is, I believe, about one-half the number now usually summoned in United States courts. This will result in an immense saving of wholly unnecessary expenses, especially unnecessary if the other amendment is adopted.

I have another section which provides for records and blanks, and for the compilation of this act with all other laws touching the duties of clerks, attorneys, marshals, their deputies, and commissioners, and for the distribution of the same, provisions rendered very necessary and important by the proposed radical and far-reaching change in the laws affecting them officially.

The last amendment proposes to incorporate in permanent legislation a provision which has become the settled policy of Congress, but which has heretofore only been continued in force from year to year by being attached as a "rider" on successive appropriation bills. The provision has been aimed heretofore mainly at the marshal, but it will still be found necessary as a check on the pernicious activity of the commissioner, in combination, perhaps, with deputies and detectives, with the possible collusion here and there of an unscrupulous marshal or attorney. This section gives the judge and the district attorney power to place a complete and efficient check on all possible corrupt combinations for pushing business by the origination of vexatious, groundless, and oppressive prosecutions, and should be incorporated permanently in the system of Federal laws. No abuses can occur in the way of working up civil business. The public and litigants will take care of themselves as they always have done. I will now insert in the RECORD my amendments in the order that I desire to propose them.

Add to section 11 the following:

"Provided, however, That such office deputies shall not be required to serve writs or do the work of field deputies, as provided in section 12 of this act, except in cases of emergency when there are no field deputies available for that purpose."

Insert as an independent section, between sections 12 and 13, the following:

"SEC. —. That in all writs of venire facias and of subpœna for witnesses summoned on behalf of the United States it shall be the duty of the clerk issuing the same, so far as practicable, to ascertain and insert therein the post-office address of each person named therein; and when the marshal shall receive any such writ, if the time is sufficient for service by mail, as provided in this section, he shall address to each person named in such venire or subpœna, whose post-office address is given or can be ascertained promptly by him, a notice requiring such person to be and appear at the time and place and for the purpose mentioned in the writ. The marshal shall sign such notice officially, mail and register it at the post-office, addressed to the person therein mentioned, with a request indorsed on the envelope in the usual form for the return of the letter to him if not delivered within ten days. The postmaster to whom any such letter shall be delivered, inclosed in a Department of Justice penalty envelope, shall transmit the same without charge for postage or registry fee. The receipt of such registered letter by the person to whom the notice was addressed shall be deemed valid service upon him of the subpœna or venire, and the return registry receipt card, signed by such person, or proof of the delivery of such registered letter on his order, in writing, to any other person for him, shall be taken as prima facie evidence of service, and the marshal shall make return accordingly. Whenever any such notice shall be returned through the post-office undelivered, the marshal shall serve it as other writs are served; and whenever practicable all such returned notices and all process and writs, the costs on which would be chargeable to the United States, other than writs of venire facias and subpœna for witnesses, shall be sent by mail, directed to the deputy marshal residing nearest the locality where such writs, process, or returned notices are to be served or executed, or to a special deputy appointed by him to serve the same in such locality, and such deputies shall make return of such writs, process, or notices to the marshal by mail; and in no case in which the United States would be chargeable with costs for the service of any writ, process, or notice of whatever character shall mileage be charged or allowed for travel from the place of issue to the place of execution or service thereof, if the same was sent or could have been sent by mail to a deputy marshal or other suitable person in the neighborhood of the place of service."

Insert the following new section between sections 20 and 21:

"SEC. —. That every person who carries on the business of a retail liquor dealer without having paid the special tax as required by law shall for every such offense be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned in jail not exceeding six months. That the judges of the circuit courts of the United States and the judges of the Territorial courts shall divide each district into commissioners' districts, consisting of one or more counties or parishes, and they shall appoint one or more United States commissioners in each commissioner's district, as may be required for the efficient and economical execution of the laws. All United States commissioners are hereby constituted inferior tribunals, with jurisdiction for final determination and judgment on any complaint for the offense of retailing liquors without payment of the special tax required by the laws of the United States. The trial of such cases by commissioners shall be without indictment, and a traverse jury of twelve men, when demanded by the defendant, shall be summoned from the bystanders. From any judgment of the commissioner in any such case the defendant may appeal to the district court. In all proceedings in and about the trial of such complaints the commissioner shall conform to the rules for criminal procedure prescribed by the Revised Statutes, so far as the same are applicable, and in matters not provided for by the laws of the United States the commissioner shall follow the rules of procedure and the practice in trials of misdemeanors by justices of the peace or other courts of limited jurisdiction, under the laws of the State where the complaint is tried. United States commissioners shall receive for their services such fees as may be provided by law, except that in all criminal cases heard by them they shall only be allowed $1 for issuing process to arrest and $1 for a recognizance or bond for cost, including affidavits of sureties and acknowledgments, and for all other writs and processes issued, for all oaths administered, for docketing and trying the same, and for all services performed the sum of $5, and no more, for each case; but where two or more charges are preferred against any person at the same time the commissioner shall be allowed only for a fee in one case. In preliminary examinations where there is probable ground to believe the defendant guilty, the commissioner shall bind him over, if he shall give the bail required, to appear for trial before the court having jurisdiction nearest the place where the offense was committed; and if he can not give the required bail, the commissioner shall commit him for trial to the nearest jail where prisoners can be securely and most economically kept, and shall in both cases transmit all the papers in the case to the clerk of the United States court to be held in said district nearest the place where the offense was committed, at which court grand juries are impaneled; and the clerk shall notify the district attorney thereof; but any accused person who may be committed in default of bail may, upon the order of the judge, in writing, be removed to and tried at that place in the judicial district where the court will be held next after his commitment. Justices of the peace shall receive the same fees as United States commissioners for services in criminal cases. Their accounts shall be verified by oath and forwarded to the United States attorney of the district to be submitted to the court for approval. It shall be the duty of commissioners and justices of the peace to examine and certify to the marshal for payment bills of witnesses for transportation and attendance. Jurors shall be allowed for attending a commissioner's court, as provided in this section, 50 cents each, to be paid by the marshal on the certificate and order of the commissioner."

Insert the following sections between 22 and 23:

"SEC. —. That no more jurors shall be summoned in any venire facias for grand or petit jurors than the number necessary to make a regular panel of the grand and petit jury, respectively, in the State courts under the laws of the State wherein such venire is issued. Hereafter jurors and witnesses in all of the States and Territories shall receive their actual and necessary expenditures for transportation, when using any public conveyance, in lieu of mileage, but not exceeding the usual fares; and where there are no public conveyances they shall receive the mileage now allowed by law for travel to and from court; and witnesses shall receive $1.50 a day and jurors shall receive $2 a day during actual attendance at any court or courts and for the time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from the same.

"SEC. —. That United States attorneys and marshals shall be provided, at the expense of the United States, in such manner as shall be directed by the Attorney-General, with all records and other books and all blanks and stationery required for official use in their respective offices. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General carefully to revise the instructions to attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the United States courts heretofore compiled and issued by his authority, adding thereto such portions of this act and other acts as are necessary for the complete instruction of United States attorneys, marshals, clerks, and commissioners in their duties under the laws as amended by this and other acts, and to furnish copies of such revised instructions to all such attorneys, marshals, clerks, and commissioners.

"SEC. —. That no fees shall be paid to any United States commissioner on any warrant issued, or any other fees, in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless said fees have been taxed against and collected from the defendant, or unless the prosecution has been approved either before or after arrest of the defendant by a circuit or district judge, or the attorney of the United States in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, and unless said prosecution shall have been commenced upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, or upon a sworn complaint by a United States district attorney or his assistant, a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief.

"SEC. —. That from and after June 30, 1896, this act shall take effect and be in force."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in the first place, that the amendment proposed to this bill by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], in the forms of bills for the regulation of practice in United States courts, were submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary and duly considered and passed upon. The committee not only had the bills that are now proposed as amendments by those gentlemen before it, but also a bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY] and a bill introduced by the other gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF]. Not only so, but the committee had also before it the bill introduced in the last Congress by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] and reported favorably. The committee has gone carefully over every proposition and every idea suggested by any member of this House and by the Department in order to give this bill, in subcommittee and in general committee, the most careful consideration, and as the result of their deliberation they have reported the bill now before the House.

Of course the committee would have been glad to report a bill that would meet the views of every gentleman on this floor, but that was obviously impossible. The underlying principle on which this bill is framed is to put the marshal and district attorney upon salaries, so as to take away from them the motives that multiply frivolous and useless prosecutions. This result, however, could not be accomplished unless the bill went still further. We are asked: Why not put the United States commissioners on salary? Why not put the clerks of courts on salary? We answer, because the commissioners and the clerks have no power under existing law to institute prosecutions. But a difficulty does arise. As the law now exists any private individual may go before a commissioner and swear out a warrant against his neighbor in an internal-revenue case. The committee intend to meet that difficulty by introducing an amendment to this bill prohibiting United States commissioners from issuing warrants for the arrest of individuals for violation of the internal-revenue laws unless the individual making the complaint has the written authority and consent of the district attorney for the issue of the warrant. When that amendment is adopted and passed as a part of this bill, the district attorney, the collector, the deputy collector, and the special revenue agent alone can procure the issuance of these warrants by the commissioners for violations of the internal-revenue law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the attention of the committee has already been called to the enormous and constantly increasing expense of the Federal courts. For the fiscal year the expenses of the United States courts, as I have figured them up, will be little less than $8,000,000, and they are constantly increasing out of all proportion to the growth in population and to the increase in the business of those courts.

Now, I propose to show, Mr. Chairman, if I can, that this enormous increase of expenses arises principally in the Southern and Western portions of the Union in connection with violation of the internal-revenue laws. I call attention to the fact that the total number of prosecutions disposed of during 1895 were 25,949; and there were pending July 1, 1895, 12,495, making a total during the year, disposed of and undisposed of, of 38,000. Of these 16,144 were for violations of the internal-revenue laws, mostly cases of selling whisky or tobacco without a license. Nearly half of the prosecutions for offenses against the laws of the United States were for violations of the internal-revenue laws.

And in this connection I beg to call attention to the States in which these enormous court expenses occurred, and submit herewith a list of these expenses by States, as follows:

3 districts in Alabama	$292,654.24
2 districts in Arkansas	315,620.23
2 districts in Florida	80,473.60
2 districts in Georgia	189,513.35
2 districts in Illinois	261,843.87
2 districts in Mississippi	145,741.73
2 districts in Missouri	136,500.98
2 districts in North Carolina	198,659.98
2 districts in South Carolina	120,208.20
3 districts in Tennessee	202,472.22
3 districts in Texas	308,044.48
3 districts in Virginia	122,621.46
1 district in West Virginia	122,870.76

It will be seen that nearly one-half of the cost incurred and paid out, as shown by the Attorney-General's report for 1895, occurred in thirteen States of the Union, and those States where prosecutions are set on foot for violations of internal-revenue laws; and when to this is added the Territory of Oklahoma and Indian Territory and the Western States, where frivolous prosecutions are found for trespassing on public lands, we have about two-thirds of this enormous cost of the United States courts and in less than one-third of the States and Territories.

I therefore am, from these facts and figures taken from official records, justified in the statement that more than one-half, nearly two-thirds, of the enormous sums appropriated by Congress for the support of the United States courts goes to keep up and maintain the courts in these States where parties are prosecuted for violations of internal-revenue laws and trespassing on United States timber lands, and the further fact will be established, by reference to the Attorney-General's report, that the average cost of convicting a "moonshiner," through a series of years, in some of those courts amounts to more than enough to buy each of the convicted defendants a more than average farm and equipments. In some of the districts the average cost for convicting a "moonshiner" runs or varies from $600 to $2,500, through a series of years, and in others, with similar physical, geographical, and moral surroundings or conditions, etc., the average runs from $200 to $350; the average cost of all cases terminated varies from $115 to $620, and in one of the mountain districts the average cost in 1894 was only $158 for a conviction. It would be, in an analytical way, difficult to account for such wide differences in the average cost of a conviction and of a terminated case in the several different districts. My familiarity with the methods and business details of those courts forbids the suggestion that these wide differences result from dishonesty or peculations of the court officials. But the thought must come, to anyone at all familiar with this subject, that the wide differences found in the average costs of convictions and cases terminated in the "moonshiner courts" is attributable to the pernicious fee system, or that there is something radically wrong in the organism itself of the Federal courts. And a further thought must come that, out of these radical defects, there will, in the nature of things, continue to arise official mismanagement and loose methods, which, in swelling the costs of the United States courts annually to more than $5,000,000 may suggest to the public that the "moonshiner courts" are not so much "temples of justice" as they are eleemosynary institutions.

The practical question is, will this Congress allow such a condition of affairs to continue when a plain remedy is proposed?

The inquiry comes to our minds, why are these large costs and expenses allowed to accrue? I answer, because the judges of the courts are powerless to prevent it. The evil is in the fee system itself. It is becoming every day more apparent that owing to that system the results of prosecutions in these courts are altogether out of proportion to the enormous expenses attending them, and that the disposition to institute prosecutions for the sake of fees frequently causes irreparable damage to innocent parties and places the Federal Government in the attitude of "persecuting" rather than "prosecuting."

District attorneys, marshals, and their assistants are paid fees by the United States for services rendered in cases, and the amount of their compensation depends upon the number of cases instituted, and as the majority of cases in the United States courts in which the United States is a party are criminal cases, the amount of the annual compensation of these officers depends upon the number of criminal prosecutions instituted; and as the district attorney is the prosecutor, his compensation depends upon his activity and zeal as a prosecutor. In this he is aided by the marshal and his deputies, who receive fees only when prosecutions are instituted.

The system is intended to stimulate and encourage prosecutions. The fees of the marshal and his deputies increase in like manner with each step in a case, so that the system of fees is really a system of bounties or premiums on prosecutions and convictions, and as a result there are a great many frivolous indictments and unnecessary prosecutions which ought never to be brought.

By cutting off these unnecessary prosecutions the Government not only saves large costs now paid to the district attorney, marshal, and clerk, but large sums paid annually to witnesses and jurors.

Put the marshal on a salary commensurate with the dignity and importance of his office. Take away from him the inducement to earn fees by multiplying frivolous prosecutions and technical violations of the laws. He will appoint better men for his deputies, instead of mere fee grabbers. It will elevate the tone of his office, and his sole aim will be to give the Government a clean, dignified, and efficient administration. He will control his deputies and exercise a wholesome and a restraining influence over them, and allow no cases to be reported to the district attorney except when the law has been violated and when the public good requires that there should be a prosecution of the criminal, and the district attorney, when the proofs are submitted to him for authority to direct the issuance of a warrant of arrest, being uninfluenced by mercenary considerations, can and will determine in a judicial way, with a sole view to the ends of justice, whether the evidence justifies a prosecution. He can and will stand impartially for the right between the Government and the accused.

Take away the power to increase compensation by multiplying prosecutions, and you do away in a large measure with unwarranted prosecutions. And it will take out of "the root-hog-or-die" field two very important officials in each district.

Some have thought that the district attorneys and the marshals might neglect to do their duty if given salaries. Why, any more than the judges, members of Congress, or any other salaried officer?

The fee system has been condemned by judges, lawyers, jurists, and all intelligent people acquainted with the evils, and has often been called to the attention of Congress by the President and the Department of Justice. I ask to read what President Cleveland and various Attorneys-General have said on this question:

RECOMMENDATIONS OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND AND ATTORNEYS-GENERAL OLNEY, MILLER, AND BREWSTER FOR A CHANGE FROM THE FEE SYSTEM.

The system by which United States district attorneys, marshals, clerks, and commissioners are paid by fees has been so often and so emphatically condemned, is so indefensible in principle, and works such gross injustice in practice that its survival to this time is nothing less than a wonder and a reproach. In recommending its summary abolition I merely indorse a change of policy which has received the earnest advocacy of every Attorney-General for the last twenty years.

The present mode of compensating United States marshals and district attorneys should, in my opinion, be changed. They are allowed to charge against the Government certain fees for services, their income being measured by the amount of such fees within the fixed limit as to their annual aggregate. This is a direct inducement for them to make their fees in criminal cases as large as possible in an effort to reach the maximum sum permitted. As an entirely natural consequence unscrupulous marshals are found encouraging frivolous prosecutions, arresting people on petty charges of crime, and transporting them to distant places for examination and trial for the purpose of earning mileage and for fees.

The district attorneys uselessly attend criminal examinations far from their places of residence for the express purpose of swelling their accounts against the Government. The actual expenses incurred in these transactions are also charged against the Government. Thus the rights and freedom of our citizens are outraged and public expenditures increased for the purpose of furnishing public officers pretexts for increasing the measure of their compensation.

The attention of Congress has been repeatedly called to this subject by my predecessors as well as by myself, and were the evils of the system less I should hesitate to again ask that it be changed. As, however, every year and month makes more plain that the payment of United States attorneys, marshals, and commissioners results yearly in a vast expenditure of money, not only to no good purpose, but, what is worse, in creating and pushing forward prosecutions with a view solely to make fees against persons who ought not to be prosecuted at all, I should fall short of what I believe to be my duty if I did not urge a change in the interest of a just administration of the laws as well as of public economy. I believe that if these officers were paid stipulated salaries fairly commensurate with the work they have to perform the total cost of the courts by reason of the great reduction in the fees and mileage of jurors, prisoners, and officers would be greatly lessened, and that with a positive improvement in the administration of the laws.

[Attorney-General Brewster's report for 1884.]

The practice of compensating the United States marshal by fees is an expensive one. Examiners of the Department of Justice who have been detailed to examine their accounts report that in order to make the maximum fees of the office, $6,000 per annum, unscrupulous marshals in some instances, through their deputies, have encouraged frivolous prosecutions, outraging the rights of citizens and involving the United States in unnecessary and excessive expense. It is estimated that it costs the Government $10 in expenses for every dollar of the marshal's emoluments, which shows that it would be to the interest of the Government to give the marshal a fixed compensation, so as to remove all inducement to perpetrate frauds upon the Government and wrongs upon the citizen. If the deputies are paid fees for executing process, it would insure the same efficiency as the present fee system and at the same time relieve the Department of the extraordinary expense complained of, as the marshal would have no interest in encouraging such practices.

[Attorney-General Harmon.]

THE FEE SYSTEM.

Great vigilance has been exercised and every effort made to keep down the expenses connected with the Federal courts. Excessive and illegal charges can in some measure be avoided by watchfulness and laborious investigation, but arrests and prosecutions on frivolous charges and flimsy proof, to which part of these expenses is due, can not be prevented by this Department. This can be accomplished only by abolishing the system which, by making the fees of commissioners, marshals, clerks, and attorneys the source of their compensation, presents a constant inducement to unnecessary arrests and litigation.

The 40 per cent of unsuccessful prosecutions during the past year, which is less than usual, does not, of course, include the cases wherein persons arrested are discharged on preliminary hearing, or those wherein the charges are ignored by grand juries. Not only do the fees of commissioners, and those of marshals and witnesses, with mileage, in these cases, cause a large annual expense to the Government, but annoyance and loss of time are inflicted on those involved as parties and witnesses, which indirectly work both material and moral injury to the public. Besides, a class of professional witnesses and informers grows up in many sections, to the scandal of the administration of justice.

The discovery in northern Alabama of a widespread conspiracy among commissioners and deputy marshals to defraud the Government by means of fraudulent charges of fees, and the recent conviction of such of the conspirators as failed to escape, only call renewed attention in a striking way to the evils of the fee system. These have been so often mentioned to Congress by different Presidents and Attorneys-General that anything I might say would be mere repetition. I will simply refer to the report of Attorney-General Olney for 1893 (page xxiii), where the subject is fully and forcibly discussed.

Considerations of mere economy should not prevail when the tone of such an important branch of the public service is involved; but as such considerations are always of weight, I wish to call attention to the fact that little if any additional expense need be involved in the change from payment by fees to payment by salaries. Indeed, that change may well be hoped eventually to prove a measure of economy, as I think the experience of many of the States has shown.

I may add, Mr. Chairman, that in the official methods of the moonshiner courts probably 95 per cent of the prosecutions are begun before commissioners, many of them at the instance of professional informers, who are paid an allowance for mileage and witness fees, and the effect of this system materialize in the superserviceable zeal of the favored local deputy who has the privilege of earning all fees in wild-cat cases in his county. Of cases discharged before the commissioners, neither the court nor the Attorney-General has any account, but the Government must pay the fees all the same.

The fee system has been prolific of many abuses, as all agree who are at all familiar with the administration of justice in our United States courts. It has degenerated into a system of plunder and fee grabbing. It fosters, encourages, and multiplies professional jurors, witnesses, prosecutors, and informers whose sole intention is the getting of money out of the Government. And around all the United States courts these people may be found, used, and controlled by United States marshals and their deputies, making their living by informing on their neighbors, reporting technical violations of the law, and in many, very many, instances, resorting to false swearing to make out cases against innocent men and women. One of the United States district judges, in a Southern State, related to me a short time since a case which came under his personal observation.

There lived in one of the back counties in middle Tennessee a very old lady, very poor and dependent, who was asked by an old colored woman for employment as a cook. The good old lady replied that she had no money with which to pay her, but if she would take pay in leaf tobacco she would hire her for a short time. The old "auntie" agreed to this, as her "old man" used the weed. And so she did work as a cook and was paid in leaf tobacco. Nearly three years after a United States deputy marshal heard of this transaction, and, with an eye single to fees in sight, had the old lady arrested, after getting the approval of the district attorney, and taken before a commissioner and bound over to court to be held at Nashville, nearly 100 miles away, where she was indicted. When the facts were developed on the trial of the case, of course the judge discharged the prisoner and rebuked the deputy, but this was after the old lady had been put to the expense and annoyance of a long trip to Nashville, which she was poorly able to bear, and after costs had accrued amounting to at least $100 to be paid by the Government.

The old woman was doubtless guilty of a technical violation of the internal-revenue laws, but no right-thinking man would insist that the ends of justice were promoted by her prosecution; but quite the contrary.

This is but one illustration of many such cases. Thousands of cases are set on foot, as this case was, solely for the fees in its prosecution.

The worst abuse of the fee system is found in the great number of cases commenced before commissioners and discharged by them because of insufficient evidence to sustain the charges.

Besides the thousands of cases thus disposed of, the Attorney-General in his report takes no account of the great number of criminal cases in which defendants were acquitted, the average cost in those cases discharged being about $30.

And in this connection I desire to read from a letter just received from a prominent United States official in one of the Southern States. Speaking of the pending bill and the fee system, he says:

A vast amount of trash is sent up to the court, bound over by incompetent commissioners; but there is another evil which is simply awful, that is the cases which are brought before commissioners and the defendant discharged. In these cases the deputy marshals have made statements of what could be proven, and it turns out that these statements are without any foundation. It is no uncommon thing for a large majority of the cases brought by a particular deputy to be discharged by the commissioner. The average cost of the case discharged by commissioner is about $30, and it never comes before the court; there are no consequences to the deputy. Under the present system the marshal is always urging the deputy to do as much work as possible. The one who gets in the largest account for a quarter receives the congratulations of the marshal. I remember one marshal who had a standing rule that the deputy who had in the largest account could have the job of taking prisoners to the penitentiary at that term; and this, being a trip to Brooklyn at no expense, was quite an object. The whole talk of a marshal's office is always that the deputy who sends in the largest account is the best deputy, and in my ten years' experience I have never known a deputy to be removed by the marshal because there was no merit in the cases he brought.

The truth is, I am so convinced of the wisdom of the bill that I hardly know where to commence an argument in its favor. I can see nothing in it that any honest man could object to.

I am authorized to say, Mr. Chairman, that this bill has been submitted to a number of United States judges and they have all approved it. It has been submitted to Judge Pardee, of the southern circuit, who says that it is a good bill. It has been submitted to Judge Key, once United States district judge and Postmaster-General of the United States. It has been submitted to other Federal judges. They all say that it is a good bill and ought to be passed. The present system brings on the courts discredit which they want to see removed by taking away temptation from the officers to bring frivolous and unnecessary prosecutions.

Some may fear to support this bill because it may cripple the administration of the laws in the sections of the country referred to. I am quite sure that these fears are groundless. The judges of the United States courts heartily favor a reform measure such as is now being considered, and do not entertain any such fears.

My sympathies are all with the people, against crime, and I should not support a bill which would seriously retard the proper administration of the laws. This bill, in my judgment, will enable the courts better to administer justice, and take away from the courts much of the odium that has attached to them because of the fee system.

Mr. Chairman, my sympathies are with the people, and against crime. Pardon a personal reference. I had the honor to be for eight years prosecuting attorney in the largest judicial district in the State of Tennessee. I prosecuted crime as vigorously as I could; and I will say that no man can be a prosecuting attorney for eight years and have any sympathy with crime. Speaking from my experience, I say this bill will better the administration of the law.

Some persons may have the idea that the bill is intended to cripple the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws. Not so. In all Southern States there is without question now (although I admit it has not always been so) a strong and healthy public sentiment which will sustain the officials in the proper enforcement of the revenue laws.

The internal-revenue system comes to us as a legacy of the war, it is now structurally fixed in our governmental economies, and it is not at all probable that this or the next generation will consent to any such radical change in our method for securing sufficient governmental income as would follow its repeal. This bill is by no means intended to cripple the proper administration of the law, but on the contrary, the friends of the bill hope and believe to accomplish a cleaner and more efficient administration of that system of laws. That strong sentiment in the South in favor of the proper administration of the law will encourage the prosecution of all real violations of the law, and compel meritorious prosecutions, and at the same time the great and constantly increasing number of frivolous and unwarranted prosecutions set on foot by greedy and avaricious officials and professional prosecutors and informers to get fees will be largely, if not entirely, wiped out, and when the temptation is removed from the district attorney and marshal to multiply cases for fees, and their only motive is to faithfully execute the laws, we shall see the laws better enforced. We shall have a cheaper administration of the laws. We shall see the courts rid of the "hangers-on," the tools and favorites of the deputy marshals; and the courts themselves, instead of being "engines of oppression" to the poor and helpless, will be in fact, as they desire to be, "temples of justice" for the innocent and a real terror to the really guilty, and men will be brought to the bar of justice because they have really violated the law, and not to gratify individual spite and malice or to make fees for officers and witnesses and informers.

And in this connection I desire to call attention to another important provision of this bill—that is, the one placing restrictions upon the appointment of deputy marshals (called field deputies), leaving the matter generally to the marshal and the Attorney-General. This provision, taken in connection with other provisions authorizing the courts to remove deputy marshals for cause, will probably put an end to the practice which prevails in some districts, and that is the member of Congress ex officio naming one deputy marshal for each county in his Congressional district. The deputy marshal being a "mighty man of valor," and being grateful to his Congressman, proceeds to be very active in controlling the primaries and political conventions in the interest of the aforesaid Congressman. So, in addition to feathering his nest at the expense of the taxpayers, and oppressing the poor, he uses his official position to further the interest of his friend, the Congressman, and is able not only to bring discredit on the Government he serves (?), but on the political party which owns him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand my colleague to state that the practice to which he now refers obtains in his district?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has never prevailed in mine.

Mr. BROWN. I say that it prevails in a number of districts in the South. I have on my table now a letter from one of the most eminent Federal judges in the whole South in which he gives me his word that in one district he has personal knowledge of the fact that such a practice does prevail. And that it prevails elsewhere I have no doubt.

I have not intended by anything I have said to censure the judges of the United States courts. I regard our Federal courts as the best courts in all the land. I know how exceedingly anxious the judges are to see this system wiped out and how much they condemn practices they are powerless to prevent.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is a great reform measure. It is true it does not go to the extent desired by some of the opponents of the fee system, but it is as to district attorneys, marshals, and their deputies a change from the present system, and is a long step in the right direction.

If it shall prove a change for the better, then the duty and responsibility will rest with our successors to extend the change to all United States officials. This bill aims to strike at the root of the evils of the fee system, not so much by reducing salaries—though the saving in salaries will be over $100,000 a year—but by cutting off all inducements to the commencement of unnecessary and frivolous prosecutions, out of which comes a large part of the enormous costs of the United States courts.

It must be remembered that it is not the clerks of the United States courts who commence these prosecutions, nor is it the United States commissioners, for they have no authority to issue warrants unless on advice and application of the United States district attorneys, but prosecutions are set on foot by United States district attorneys on information furnished them by marshals or their deputies, and the Judiciary Committee believe that if the temptation were taken away from United States district attorneys to multiply cases in order to make fees, and the like temptation taken away from the marshals, although their deputies are left on fees, but under their control, the commencement of frivolous and malicious cases would soon be entirely ended.

Now, while the Government is in such straitened circumstances financially, while our expenses daily exceed our receipts, is a good time to practice economy and to institute this great reform. And while I know this is by no means a political question, I should like to see this Republican House have the credit of passing such a beneficent and money-saving measure, which will be approved by every honest, intelligent, and law-abiding man in this broad land of ours. Not only so, but every honest Federal official will be glad of its passage, for every man who receives money as fees in these frivolous prosecutions must feel that he is taking "blood money" from the poor and helpless.

I take the liberty of quoting from a letter received a few days ago from an intelligent Federal official who will be affected by this bill. He says:

I have received copy of the bill H. R. 5966 introduced by Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I wish to commend it in the highest terms.

There is no injustice done any honest officer under this bill, nor is there any reason why the public service should be injured by it. The bill will cut off all the trash and leave complete facilities for an honest administration of justice.

This is the language of a court official who is honest and patriotic enough to want to see taken away from the courts the odium which necessarily attaches to the present pernicious fee system. He further says:

I have no doubt the bill will encounter some "practical politicians," who will see in it a decrease in the favors they might have to bestow.

Outside of the motive of honesty, with that reasonable share of patriotism which desires to see abuses abolished, I have a more or less selfish interest in the passage of this bill, because I am tired of the condemnation, and well-merited condemnation, which has for many years attached to the Federal courts. I want to see them on a high plane.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, if we allow this system to continue when we can remedy it, it would not only be a crying outrage, but a standing reproach to us. Let no man take to his heart the satisfaction of anticipating that he will be able to say to his constituents, "I was in favor of that bill, but I did not think it was the right kind of a bill." The Attorney-General says this is the best bill ever submitted to Congress. It is not perfect; it does not go all the way that its friends would like to have it go; but it is the best possible bill under the circumstances.

The simple question, gentlemen, is, On which side will you fight—in favor of the taxpayer or in favor of the taxeater? [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I append to my remarks the letter which I send to the Clerk, from Judge C. D. Clark, United States district judge for the middle and eastern districts of Tennessee.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,
WESTERN DIVISION OF TENNESSEE, JUDGES' CHAMBERS,
Memphis, Tenn., February 28, 1896.

MY DEAR BROWN: I have your favor, inclosing amended bill agreed on by the subcommittee, and which you say will be favorably reported to the full Committee on the Judiciary, in respect to district attorneys, marshals, commissioners, and deputy marshals. You ask me if I believe that the effect of the legislation proposed in that bill would be to cripple or to embarrass the administration of the law. In reply, allow me to say that I have given this subject much study, and have discussed it with judges of much greater experience than I have had, more particularly with my predecessor, Judge D. M. Key. The legislation not only will not weaken, but will greatly add to a clean, reputable, and proper administration of the law. Its effect will be to keep out of court hundreds and thousands of frivolous fee-making cases brought into such courts by deputy marshals and United States commissioners in their attempt to make a living off the Government, and in flagrant oppression of the ignorant and poor in so doing. You know the details full well without any enumeration by me. Let me remind you again of some of the vices that now exist in this system, and you will recognize the abuses that are made without furnishing evidence of these.

The district attorney's emolument limit depends on fees. The marshal's emolument limit depends chiefly on one-fourth of the fees, which he requires his deputy marshals to turn over to him as his share of the work done by them and the fees earned. It may transpire under the system that a district attorney may see that because his fees are larger than the marshal's he will reach his maximum limit, and he becomes more conservative about the issuance of warrants in these frivolous cases where no substantial offense whatever has been committed, but which have been made the cause of arrest, deprivation, imprisonment, and great oppression of the poor and innocent. The marshal, however, has it in his power to say to the district attorney, "By withholding these warrants you are discouraging my deputies and I will fall largely below my limit, and if you force such a condition as this the deputy marshals will stop work, strike on you, so to speak, and we will cut your emolument compensation below the maximum and we will all go down together." I say that this is possible. I do not say that it has occurred in any particular district. It is a vice in the system itself.

Again, there is no limit upon the number of United States commissioners which the courts may appoint, and there is in every district an army of these officials; and there is no limit whatever on the marshal as to the number of deputies which he may appoint, and as his maximum compensation must be made up from one-fourth of their earnings you can understand that he makes the number sufficient to go above rather than below the limit. There is a vast army of these officials everywhere and it is quite practicable for them to work up a partnership with the commissioners in the fee business. The deputy marshal is a position which the best men do not desire, and as a rule do not take. As soon as appointed they abandon every other method of trying to make a living, expecting to make one off of the Government by their three-fourths interest in the fees, and every man, woman, or child who has touched a pint of whisky or twist of tobacco within a period of three years under circumstances that look somewhat suspicious to these eager-for-a-fee officers is promptly run in before some commissioner and with equal promptness bound over to the next term of the United States court and dragged anywhere from 50 to 300 miles and put on trial with the attendance of professional witnesses at the expense of mileage and per diem, and at a cost of from $250 to $500 to the Government; and when the case is developed it is more likely than otherwise to turn out that a good man furnished his neighbor's wife a half pint of whisky in which to take some medicine, or some old white woman without money gave a colored woman a twist of tobacco to do a day's washing.

These are fair samples and are actual cases. The direct losses to the Government in such a system are not its only evil. The indirect results are also to be considered. Such a spectacle in any community is thoroughly demoralizing and the good people stand in complete astonishment that such abuses could be systematically practiced for years by those representing the General Government without any redress or correction. The oppression that is practiced every day is a reproach in the eyes of any civilized community and creates much of that ignorant prejudice against Federal authority which you know to exist in communities where this system is in force, with all its untold abuses. Senators HARRIS and BATE both know of those abuses by reason of their long and eminent experience as practitioners of the law, and could tell you more, perhaps, than I can of them. I only say to you that my profound conviction is that the legislation proposed in this bill would be attended with more practical benefit than any other legislation on the subject within the last twenty-five years. I want to indorse fully, in conclusion, a remark that Judge E. S. Hammond made to-day in conversation with me, and that is that the people of the United States, in the way of useless and frivolous litigation, civil and criminal, unrestricted as the right to engage in this pastime is, squander more money than is wasted in any other of the several directions in which it is supposed money is extravagantly thrown away.

Judge Hammond suggests to me one, and only one, modification of this legislation, and that is to provide that the Attorney-General shall nominate or appoint the commissioner and the district court approve the appointment, and I myself, for reasons developed in our discussion of the subject, believe this would be a desirable change.

Do not give up this legislation, and your full reward will come as soon as its beneficial effects are seen, as they certainly will be.

Yours, truly, C. D. CLARK.

Hon. FOSTER V. BROWN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I rise to ask unanimous consent that general debate on this amendment be closed at 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Or sooner, if there should be no one desiring to occupy the time.

Mr. HARTMAN. Before the limitation of debate is finally determined upon, I should like to inquire how many gentlemen are yet to speak and how much time will be occupied?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON], desires to be heard in general debate, and also the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. HARTMAN. I wish to be heard in the general debate for fifteen or twenty minutes. I do not think I shall exceed that time.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Very well; the gentleman shall have twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] whether in his judgment the arrangement he proposes would necessitate voting upon any amendments to-day?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It is my impression that it would not. For my part, I prefer that at 4 o'clock the committee should rise, and that the consideration of the measure by sections be taken up to-morrow morning.

Mr. DALZELL. That ought to be a part of the understanding.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Well, let that be understood.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman might as well say 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that several gentlemen who desire to participate in the general debate are not in the Hall just now.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Following the suggestion of gentlemen around me, I will ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed at 5 o'clock to-day, or sooner if there is nobody desiring to occupy the floor.

Mr. DALZELL. That is right.

Mr. HENDERSON. And that no vote be taken on any of these sections until to-morrow.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed at 5 o'clock to-day and that no vote be taken on the amendment or any amendment to the amendment this afternoon. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a very few minutes in the discussion of this matter. The evils which the pending bill seeks to remedy are two, and they are interwoven with each other, and they are both inherent in the fee system. One is the frivolous and unnecessary, and in many cases pernicious and malicious, prosecutions that are instituted and maintained in the Federal courts. This bill seeks to destroy that evil. The other is the enormous amount of cost which the Government is called upon to pay by reason of the processes that are called into action in the Federal court incident to these prosecutions.

Every attorney who has ever had anything to do either with the prosecution or the defense of those charged with the committing of crime against the laws of the United States in the Federal courts is possessed with an immense number of personal reminiscences which he could bring to your attention to prove that one of the greatest and most trying evils of the fee system is that by virtue of which, day by day and month by month, our citizens are prosecuted, not because it is desirable to uphold and maintain the majesty of the law, but in order to gratify personal pique and malice.

I shall detain the committee by the recital of one single instance in the county in which I reside, of a gentleman who was at one time the judge of our county court, and he was a most excellent judge, a gentleman of the highest character, a law-abiding, upright citizen. He was the owner of a large farm and lived in the country. He had procured for himself a barrel of the most excellent Kentucky whisky. Adjoining him was a neighbor whose daughter, a lovely girl of about 18 years of age, was dying with consumption. The family physician advised the father and friends of the family that her case was hopeless and that all that could be done would be simply to extend her life by the aid and use of stimulants. The father of the girl went to his neighbor and asked him for a quart or more of the whisky which he had on hand. It was given to him. Shortly afterwards, when this gentleman was away from home, the father of the girl came over to his house in order to make a settlement of some accounts. The father was absent, but the son was present.

The gentleman who had obtained the whisky said to the son: "I have a running account with your father which I desire to settle." "All right," said the son, "father is not here now, but I think in his absence I can transact the business for him." They ran through the mutual accounts and adjusted the matter to the satisfaction of both. At the close of the transaction the father of the dying girl said: "I believe that your father has not charged me with two quarts of whisky I got here the other day for the use of my daughter." The son said: "I suppose that is all right. I do not think father intended to charge you anything for it. But it does not matter. I believe you have not charged father with a turkey he got from you a few days ago." Said the neighbor: "Very well; let us just call it square." And so the matter terminated for the present.

The judge had a tenant occupying a part of his farm. He and the judge could not agree. He desired to re-lease the farm and the judge refused, and then and there, because of his inability to rerent the judge's farm, and actuated by spite and malice, he gave the authorities information against the judge, charging him with the violation of the internal-revenue law in this, that he had sold and disposed of, to the father of the sick girl, two quarts of whisky. The judge was arrested, and it cost him just $500 to get out of that transaction.

Did that tend to uphold the majesty of our flag and the glory of our Government? Did the prosecution of that man under the internal-revenue laws tend to create in his mind or in the minds of his neighbors respect for law and love of country? I say no.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is only one single instance coming within my own knowledge. I could stand here by the hour and relate instances of a similar character. But I shall not take up your time in the attempt to do anything of that kind.

I hold in my hand a letter from a gentleman who once occupied a seat on the floor of this House, a man whose name is a household word, the synonym of honesty and uprightness of character, and one of the best judges that to-day adorns the bench of the Federal court. Upon this subject he says:

> The great evil of the present fee system, as applied to the ministerial officers, United States attorneys, marshals, clerks, and commissioners, has time and again been laid before Congress by the executive and judicial departments of the Government. But from some cause, hardly comprehensible to an outsider, Congress never gets further with legislation on the subject than the report of the Judiciary Committee. This matter, so vastly important to the public, has no politics in it, and for this reason excites little attention, and is, I apprehend, one reason for its never reaching a vote.
> If legislators could have the insight into this vicious system that an honest judge of a United States district court has, the system would not last one month. The dependence of these officers for compensation on fees is wholly vicious. From the district attorney down to the deputy marshal there is the constant temptation to multiply prosecutions, regardless of merit or result to the Government, as their fees are mutually dependent on the number. The inevitable result is arrest and trial before commissioners of the most trivial and venial causes imaginable. The commissioners "stand in" with the deputy marshals, so that every poor devil arrested is bound over. The district attorney attends upon these preliminary trials, traveling sometimes 100 miles at 10 cents a mile and sometimes 300 miles, receiving, in addition, his per diem of $5. So that it frequently happens that the costs in a miserable "whisky case" before a commissioner amounts to $150, and when it reaches the grand jury the bill is ignored, or if indicted, the defendant is acquitted for lack of proof, or because the witnesses are such a graceless set of scalawags who would swear away the liberty of the goddess for $1.50 a day, that neither court nor jury will believe them. By this time the costs have reached $200 or $250. But no matter what the result, these officers get the same amount of fees. And when you take into consideration the annoyance and persecution of the poor and helpless and friendless defendants used for this "fee-grabbing" business, it is not only scandalous but a public disgrace.
> The court is powerless to prevent. He can only charge the grand jury to exercise scrutiny and caution and declare the law of the case to the petit jury. But one-half or more of these outrageous costs are created by proceedings before the commissioners before the cause reaches the court. The defendants are, as a rule, impecunious. No fines are collected worth mentioning. One-half of the offenses alleged against them, while technically within the statute, could well be ignored without injury to the public welfare.
> The remedy for this unspeakable evil and disgrace to the Republic is in the hands of Congress. Strike down the fee system. Salary the officers. That would do away with the harpies who prowl over the country as insatiate wolves, with their strikers and spies as detectives, trying to make crime, and preying on the poor for a living that must come from persecution in the name of public justice. On such a question the matter of reducing public expenditures is of secondary consideration. The good name of the Government and the integrity of public officials, especially in connection with courts of justice, are of supreme concern.

That is quite strong language, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, and it is true, every word of it.

Now, we have got further with this bill than any other touching this question. We have got it up for consideration before the House. I will not say that it is perfect in all its details. I will admit that it does not cure all of the evils that grow out of and are incident to the fee system. But it strikes at the root in this, that it takes away from the district attorney and his assistants, from the marshals and their deputies, any and all inducements to institute these proceedings, because if they do institute them their compensation will in no way be affected or enlarged by any such proceedings.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in accordance with the views which I have outlined, and for the purposes which I have stated, the committee have reported this bill, consisting of seventeen sections. Not only does it substantially receive the support of every member of the committee, but it has the express approval of the Attorney-General and all who are connected with him in the administration of justice in and about his office.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Was there not a bill framed by the Department of Justice, or were not the amounts that should be paid in salaries recommended by the Attorney-General, in all these instances?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Not exactly; but I am coming to that, and will answer the gentleman.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now, I desire to ask if the committee have not cut down the salaries recommended by the Attorney-General for the marshals and district attorneys?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. In some instances; and in some instances they have increased them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. For instance, in the matter of the district of Washington, my understanding is that the salary there was recommended at $5,000. Of course the maximum is $6,000. It was recommended at $5.000 by the Attorney-General, and it is now cut down to $4,000 in the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I will say that I do not particularly remember as to that district, but I do say that a number of the districts were put upon the basis of $4,000, and if the district to which the gentleman refers is put at $4,000, then it was because of an examination of the character of the work done and likely to be done in that district, and because it averages up with these other districts placed at the same figure.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I want to ask the gentleman a further question, if he will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The emoluments for the United States attorney in that district during the year 1895 were $6,460.13. I understand that the basis of all this calculation is the report of 1895.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The emoluments?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No; that basis was discarded.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Well, at all events, those are the net emoluments of the district attorney—$6,460.13.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The net emoluments of the marshal in that district were $11,064.57.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now, is it not true that salaries in other districts have been placed at $5,000 instead of $4,000, where the net emoluments are very much less than those of the marshal in the district to which I call attention?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Not that I know of.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is nevertheless true.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Now, I say upon the basis that I have stated, and for the purpose of doing away with the wrongs that I have named, the committee have adopted this bill, consisting of seventeen sections. The first section merely provides that all fees taxed and collected shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States. The second section designates the amount of salary to be paid to each particular district attorney, and in order that the gentleman may understand, I now call his attention to this statement. It was first proposed to base the salaries of attorneys and marshals upon the emoluments which they had received, but it was found that that would not do. In many of the districts, the Attorney-General informed the committee, the earnings had been padded by a continued, persistent institution and prosecution of these unnecessary, frivolous, pernicious, and malicious suits.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that of my own knowledge—and I have watched the whole subject very closely—I know that no such reason exists or has existed in the State of Washington.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I am not claiming that it does. What I said was that the Attorney-General so informed us; and if my friend will take this report of the Attorney-General and read it over, I think he will come to the conclusion that there are some of the districts named therein in which the emoluments never could have been counted up or taxed to the amount which they have been unless there had been an outrageous abuse of the processes of the Government of the United States. I do not say that that was true in the gentleman's district.

Again, having abandoned the idea of fees and emoluments as a basis, the next question was upon what basis should we determine these salaries; and the basis which we adopted was the nature, character, and amount of work that was done in each particular district.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Covering what length of time?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. That is an average.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. An average covering what period of time?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I do not remember now just what data we had.

Mr. BROMWELL. It was just for the year ended June 30, 1895.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. That was as to some of them.

Mr. BROMWELL. That was as to all of them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That would certainly be very inequitable.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Oh, no; we had before us a gentleman who had been fourteen years the attorney in one district. In another instance we had before us gentlemen who were connected with the Federal courts for years, from whom we obtained the average work for several years.

Mr. DOCKERY. If my colleague will allow me to suggest, replying to the observation of the gentleman from Washington, according to the gentleman in charge of the bill, and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the fees have been increasing year by year. Certainly if the past calendar year of 1895 is the basis of the calculation, no injustice has been done to present incumbents of those offices.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They have not increased in a great many districts, of course, but they have in a great many others.

Mr. DOCKERY. The grand total has very enormously increased.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Here is another matter my friend has not taken into consideration, and I was about to approach it. These districts differ. In some the prosecutions consist almost exclusively of custom-house cases, and in others of violations of the internal-revenue laws, and in others of timber-cutting cases.

Some of the cases peculiar to one district you know nothing of in another district. In some of these districts the district attorney never leaves his office and has no mileage and no expense account. In others a very large proportion of the sum that is returned as earnings and emoluments goes to make up traveling expenses and the subsistence of the district attorney and the marshal while traveling. I think if my friend will examine the accounts from his own State he will find that a considerable proportion of the amount that goes to make up emoluments and earnings are mileage.

Now, you take a city like Chicago, in which there is no mileage, these emoluments and earnings merely grow out of absolute prosecution of cases. I believe we had one case before us—I do not remember the district—where three-fourths of the emoluments and earnings of the district consisted in mileage and subsistence while traveling.

Now, then, if we were to hew down to the line the attorney and marshal of the district which my friend represents, if placed upon the same basis as the attorney and marshal in the city of Chicago, are at a great disadvantage. But if he will follow down this bill he will find that in addition to the salary every district attorney and marshal receives his absolute traveling expenses plus the cost of subsistence while he is traveling. That is fair; that is right; that is equitable. Now, I appeal to my friends. It may be true that the amount designated in this bill for your district attorney and mine may be $500 or $1,000 too small; or it may be $500 or $1,000 too much. If you can convince this committee that it is $500 or $1,000 too small, I for one will gladly vote to increase it to the proper amount; and if you can convince me that it is $500 or $1,000 too much, I will gladly vote to reduce it.

I do not stand here to advocate an iron-bound, ironclad schedule of salaries to district attorneys and United States marshals. On the other hand, both here and in the committee room, I have maintained that the Government of the United States ought to pay salaries sufficient to enable it to employ men competent and qualified to represent it in its courts in each and every district of this Union; but I do appeal to my friends from all over the Union, representing particular districts, who may have friends, personal or political, occupying positions of United States attorney or assistant or United States marshal or deputy, not to jeopardize this bill and fasten upon the Government a system that from year to year necessarily costs it from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 in order to save some personal or political friend from $500 to $1,000. Let us engraft this bill into law, and if it shall transpire that from the work that shall be done the salary which Congress designated for your district attorney and your marshal is too small, come in and amend it.

Another thing, the salaries designated in this bill are not alone predicated upon the work which has been done, but we have taken into consideration the effect of this bill, if enacted, upon the work that shall be done in the future. Sunday before last the United States attorney from the district in which I live called at my home to see me, and he complained of this very bill. I said to him, "My friend, this bill is constructed not alone upon the theory of what has been done, but on what your office will be called upon to do. If this bill passes and the remedial sections of this bill become operative, what effect will it have upon the work that you or your successor will be called upon to do?" He said, "I will be honest with you, Judge BURTON. In my judgment, if you adopt that bill it will decrease the work in my district 50 per cent." And I honestly believe if this bill be engrafted upon the law of the land it will decrease the work 50 per cent in many districts, and in most of them at least 33 per cent.

The third section of this bill provides for the appointment of assistant attorneys and regulates the allowance of their salaries by the Attorney-General upon a showing made by the judge and the district attorney that the services of the assistants are necessary.

The fourth section provides for the salaries of marshals in the same way that it has designated the salaries of district attorneys; and the arguments that I have used heretofore are pertinent and applicable. I again say that I do not stand here as a member of the committee to insist upon an ironbound and an ironclad schedule; but if any gentleman can show this committee by figures, by returns, that the salary named in this bill is too small, I for one shall gladly vote to raise it.

The fifth section of the bill provides for office deputies of United States marshals and clerical assistance.

The sixth section provides for field marshals. A gentleman on my left arose and made an onslaught on this bill in this particular. I am free to confess to the gentleman that I was in favor of placing field marshals upon a salary, but the United States Attorney-General came before our committee and argued long and earnestly against that proposition.

He convinced a majority of our committee. He argued in support of his views that the experience in the Indian Territory, where they have adopted the salary system for the payment of field deputies, justified the Department in saying that if we applied the salary system to the field marshals, then the field marshals would sit down, would remain quiet, and the processes of the Government would not be served nor its laws enforced. The Attorney-General has not absolutely convinced me, but I am so in favor of the great virtues of this bill that I am willing to abandon my individual views upon lesser points, and therefore I stand here to ask the Committee of the Whole, and eventually to ask the House, not to modify this section of the bill.

The seventh section provides for the payment of the actual expenses of the marshals when traveling from court to court or engaged in the service of process.

The eighth section provides how all these accounts shall be made out, and the accounts when made out must be accompanied by receipts for every dollar charged. Even constructive mileage is prohibited, so that under the provisions of this section neither the district attorney nor the marshal can ride across the State on a railroad pass and then charge the United States Government with what it would have cost him to have procured a ticket for the route.

The ninth section provides for office expenses of attorneys and marshals, which is clearly under the control of the Attorney-General.

The eleventh section provides that these salaries shall be paid monthly, the same as other Government salaries.

The twelfth section simply provides that the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to prevent or affect the taxing of costs against the unsuccessful party or against defendants convicted of crimes and misdemeanors.

The thirteenth section makes it a penal offense for any one of these officers to receive fees to which he is not entitled.

The fourteenth section provides that the term of all commissioners of the United States shall expire, and then provides for the appointment of commissioners by the district judges. The object of that provision is this: To-day there is a question as to what is the tenure of office of a United States commissioner of the circuit court, and one judge of the United States circuit court has even expressed doubt whether he has any authority to remove a commissioner who has heretofore been appointed. All over this country there are commissioners who were appointed years and years ago. Some of them are of no earthly account, and some of them are much worse than that, and the object of this provision is to remove each and every one of them and then to confer the appointing power upon the district judge who lives in the district, and who, by reason of his personal knowledge and acquaintance, is best qualified to say whether such and such a person ought to be a commissioner or not. Then it provides further that the court, by an entry of record, shall designate the name and place of business of every one of these commissioners, and that they shall hold their office for the term of four years.

Mr. DALZELL. Before the gentleman passes from that section, I would like to ask him whether there is any provision in this bill for paying expenses incurred by marshals in the carriage of prisoners from place to place.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think there is.

Mr. DALZELL. Can the gentleman point it out?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I do not know that I can without examining the bill. The bill was somewhat changed upon the recommendation of the Attorney-General at a meeting at which I was not present. Before that change I could have pointed out to the gentleman any provision offhand. I know there was a provision on that subject in the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I call the gentleman's attention to section 7, which provides that the marshal when attending court in any place other than his official residence, etc.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. That section does not cover the matter to which the gentleman's inquiry relates.

Mr. LACEY. Section 8 probably covers it, because that would be expenses of his office.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. In the original draft of the bill there was a section particularly applying to that kind of work, and if it is not in the present bill it is probably because it has been inadvertently left out in the printing. Section 8 does not cover the subject.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The committee considered that the general provisions of the bill with respect to marshals' expenses covered that point.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that originally there was a specific section in the bill applying to that matter. I remember it because we labored upon it at great length. I presume it was knocked out at the suggestion of the Attorney-General at the meeting of the committee at which I was so unfortunate as not to be present.

The fifteenth section provides that marshals, clerks, attorneys, assistant attorneys, jury commissioners, bailiffs, and janitors shall not act as United States commissioners, and that is right. In some instances, under the existing system, one gentleman is not only clerk of the circuit court, but he is also clerk of the district court, he is jury commissioner, and a commissioner, under the law as it stands, of the United States circuit court. He is a sort of "Pooh-Bah." He does everything except pay himself.

The sixteenth section was ingrafted upon the bill after it had been completed by the committee, at the special instance and request of the Attorney-General. It is in relation to the fees of United States commissioners. This section seems to set out at length just what the fee of a United States commissioner shall be for each particular piece of work done by him. I especially call attention to the provision contained in the body of the bill on page 18, which provides that—

Not more than one per diem shall be allowed in a case, unless the account shall show that the hearing could not be completed in one day, when one additional per diem may be specially approved and allowed by the court.

Under the existing law the commissioner may continue the case thirty, forty, or fifty times, if it should be capable of being prolonged in that way. Hence there is inducement for him to continue cases. And let it be borne in mind that every continuance by the commissioner entails an increased cost in the per diem of witnesses who are called to attend.

Mr. HARTMAN. Does this limitation upon the per diem apply only to commissioners, or does it extend also to witnesses?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. We do not pretend to put a limitation upon the number of days which may be allowed to a witness for his attendance.

Mr. HARTMAN. It would be absolutely unjust to compel a witness to attend ten days and then allow him for only one.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me put this case to the gentleman: Suppose that in a particular instance nearly two days should be occupied in hearing the prosecution, and that the commissioner is to get no pay beyond those two days. Will he not necessarily be inclined to cut short the hearing—to bind the defendant over without hearing his side?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think not, because there are a great many cases in which the commissioner will get his per diem although the disposition of the case does not occupy fifteen minutes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But will not the tendency be for the commissioner, after hearing the case for the prosecution, to simply bind the defendant over without a hearing?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think not. My answer to the gentleman is this: We believe that under this bill the district courts will not appoint men of such character and caliber as he supposes to act as commissioners, though sometimes the courts may make mistakes. I certainly doubt the propriety of saying that the provision of the existing law shall be continued, and that the commissioner shall receive his per diem for as many days as he may sit in the hearing of the case.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is there in the bill any provision for a "new birth" on the part of the courts that appoint the commissioners?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Oh, no; there is no provision for a "new birth"; but a great many of these commissioners were born long before those who are now the judges of their courts were appointed.

Mr. BROWN. Under this bill the commissioners are to be appointed by the district judges, while under the old system the commissioners have been appointed by United States circuit judges.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The seventeenth section of this bill repeals all acts or parts of acts inconsistent therewith; and it provides also that the bill shall not apply to the Indian Territory, and that certain of its provisions shall not apply to the southern district of New York. The reason we have not made the measure applicable to the Indian Territory is that that Territory now has a special law of its own, under which everything is proceeding substantially to the satisfaction of the Department of Justice.

The Attorney-General asks that certain provisions should not apply to the southern district of New York, because for a quarter of a century the courts there have been operating under a law peculiar to themselves.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I have endeavored as briefly as I could to explain the provisions of this bill. As I stated some time ago some of the salaries provided in it may be too large; some may be too small. But the virtue of this bill lies in the fact that it takes away from the district attorney and his assistants, from the marshal and his deputies, and from the commissioner, any inducement to commence or prosecute these unnecessary, frivolous, and in a great many instances pernicious and malicious prosecutions. And, sir, though this bill might be amended in the salary section so that the salaries should be increased $100,000 over and above what they now are, which would be about $300,000 over and above those named in the bill, still I would stand here to vote for the bill. I shall not be driven away from my support of it by any increase of salaries, because in my judgment the virtue lying in the body of this bill will not only protect our people from malicious and pernicious prosecutions, but will save to this Government from one million to two million dollars in the way of costs year by year.

Mr. Chairman, I yield a portion of my time to my colleague on the committee [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy only a short time with what I have to say on this bill. The system which the bill attacks has been so thoroughly embedded in the Federal administration of justice in this country that it has proved extremely difficult to uproot it. Congress after Congress has witnessed the introduction of bills for the abolition of the fee system; yet it has been maintained and is still maintained. The sentiment of the people of the country has been for years against the continuance of this system, at least in the section of country with which I am familiar, and I have no doubt whatever that the sentiment of hostility to the continuance of this system has prevailed in every part of the United States. But it has received the respect that is usually accorded to age without taking into consideration the decrepitude that accompanies it and the constant growth of abuses that have crept into it from year to year. That those abuses have been of a very grave character in many districts of the country there can be no doubt.

Speaking with reference to the practical operation of this bill, I desire to answer some suggestions that I have heard since the bill came before the committee. The question has been asked whether or not in the operation of this bill the marshal will still be required to make emolument returns. I answer certainly not. The question is also asked how the accounts are to be kept with the field deputy marshals. Under the operation of this measure the field deputies will continue to make their vouchers as they now make them; and at the expiration of each quarter those vouchers, after having been made out and sworn to, will be transmitted to the marshal just as they are now under existing law. And when they have been examined by the district attorney and submitted to the court for examination and approval, after such examination and approval they will be transmitted to the Department of Justice and go through the hands of the accounting officers precisely as they do now.

There is no change in that particular in so far as the field deputies are concerned. I am sorry, for my own part, that there is none. I should have preferred it if there was a change. I believed myself when I drew the bill that I had the honor to introduce in the House along the lines of which the pending bill was largely drawn that all the deputy marshals should be included in the salary list, and I regret exceedingly that they have not been included in this bill, but it was due to the strenuous opposition of the Department of Justice that that section of the bill was left out and these deputies were allowed to remain on fees.

But their accounts will be rendered precisely as they are rendered now under existing law; and when the Department of Justice comes to the examination and the approval of the accounts, and after the approval, when they are certified to the Treasury for payment, three-fourths of the amount found due each deputy marshal will be transmitted to the marshal for payment to the deputy, and the other quarter will be covered into the Treasury of the United States, where it belongs. The reason why marshals and attorneys are required to make emolument returns now is that the law prescribes a maximum of $6,000, beyond which they may not retain fees. Under the operation of this law there is a maximum, so far as the field deputies are concerned, and I assume that under the practical operation of the bill, if it becomes a law, it will be the duty of the Department of Justice to know, and they will know, when any field deputy marshal has received the sum of $2,500, to which he is entitled, and that all other fees found due him will be retained and covered into the Treasury of the United States. Hence I can see no necessity under the operation of this bill for making emolument returns on the part of anybody or that there will be any difficulty in keeping the accounts.

Now, while I concede that there are features of the bill that I do not like, yet it goes a very long distance in the right direction, and if it contained other conditions that I could not approve besides those to which I have referred I would still support the bill rather than have no change of the system, which is almost unanimously condemned. The people, I know, are tired of the evils of the present system. I had four years' experience in what is perhaps an average district in this country, in a district that contained all of the different classes of population and contained the basis or the substructure out of which grow many of the frivolous prosecutions so widely complained of, because in that district there were from one million to a million and a half acres of public land, worth nothing except for the timber upon it, and more than one man have I seen—aye, I may safely say hundreds of them, I think—in the past quarter of a century taken to the Federal courts for the sole reason that they had cut down a tree upon the land that could not have been sold on the stump for more than half a dollar and was valued at half a dollar or a dollar on the trial of the case, and yet that trial cost the Government of the United States from one to two hundred dollars in every instance. There are other classes of cases of a trivial character the prosecution of which benefits no one except the officers interested. But the officers are much less to blame than the iniquitous system under which they perform their duties. Technical violations of the internal-revenue laws have been prosecuted to conviction with no possible resulting benefit to either the Government or the people, but with positive harm to both. These are some of the evils that have grown up out of this system in many of the districts in the United States, and, as I said, I believe I represent a district which is about an average one.

Now, under the operation of this law those cases will be kept out of the courts. In my own city we have a district court held twice a year. It takes two weeks of hard work to clean up the docket, and then it is not always done; but if you will adopt this bill there will never be exceeding one week of court held in that division of the western district of Missouri. Hence you cut off one week's pay of the jurors who are assembled for the purpose of finding indictments and trying cases in those courts. You cut off the pay that is now given to hundreds of witnesses. I have seen over 500 witnesses in attendance upon that district court upon the first day of the term.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TRACEY. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. On account of the experience which you have had in the operations of the marshal's office, I should like to have your views as to what you think should be the salary allowed to field marshals; whether the amount of $2,500 is not too much. I am in sympathy with you in this bill, but I should like to hear you upon that.

Mr. TRACEY. In a bill which I introduced I provided a salary of $100 a month.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is the pay usually allowed to deputies, do you know?

Mr. TRACEY. The average deputy, so far as my experience goes, will make not exceeding $100 per month. In rare cases they may make $150 a month.

Mr. BROWN. I want to say to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY] will allow me, that the limit was put in the bill at $2,500 at the request of the Department of Justice. Of course we all understand that deputy marshals can not usually earn anything like $2,500. In fact, the average will not be $1,000; but there are one or two places in the United States, for instance, in the southern district of New York, where the expense of living is so much greater than in other portions of the country that a deputy perhaps ought to earn that much, and where he could earn that much.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But if the majority of deputies are allowed a very large limit, will there be any restrictions whatever upon the pernicious fee system?

Mr. BROWN. They have no authority whatever to swear out any warrant.

Mr. TRACEY. I will answer the question. Under the existing law a deputy marshal can not begin a prosecution. He applies first to the commissioner for the issuing of a warrant, filing his complaint. The commissioner refuses to issue that warrant until the complaint has been approved by the district attorney; so that a deputy marshal can not initiate a prosecution.

Mr. HYDE. What would you do in cases where the district attorney lives 500 miles away, which is the case between Spokane and Seattle?

Mr. TRACEY. I would do precisely as the law requires. Now, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted I was remarking that I had seen as many as 500 witnesses in attendance upon the district court upon the first day of the term in the city in which I live. Those witnesses were brought there from a division of the western district of Missouri embracing about twenty-one counties, and the amount that was paid out to them during and at the conclusion of the term always ran up into the thousands of dollars, generally being from five thousand to seven thousand dollars paid out at each term of court to the witnesses and jurors in attendance upon the court. If you will enact this bill into law the amount will be reduced from 30 to 50 per cent.

But that is not the sole reason why I am in favor of this bill. There is another and more weighty reason than that. While it is always a good thing to save money, yet there are cases when that is not the best thing involved. This is one of them. While I rejoice that we shall be able to save from 30 to 40 per cent in the cost of the administration of Federal justice in the United States, I rejoice more in this bill because it will relieve thousands of poor men from being harassed by prosecutions for trivial offenses, and being taken from their homes and families into court to be tried for some offense, the trial of which benefits no man, woman, or child living, except those whose emoluments are increased. After the trial, when a fine of $1, or $5, or $10 has been assessed, the Government of the United States has the further privilege of boarding the man in the county jail at 50 cents a day for the fine assessed against him, in addition to paying all the costs of the prosecution.

Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not an average of 1 per cent of the costs assessed in these cases collected by the Government of the United States. It is an exceedingly rare case where a dollar is collected. Then, if nobody is to be benefited by such prosecutions, if the cost is being paid by all the people of the United States, if it is no benefit to society, if it is not done for the preservation of law and order, if it is not done for the protection of life and property, then these prosecutions ought to be eliminated from our Federal courts and Federal jurisprudence.

I am in favor of this bill, for these reasons, without going into an examination of it section by section, because that has already been done. It is the general purpose of the bill that I am in favor of. There are some things in it I do not like, and it does not go as far as I would like to have it go; but a succeeding Congress can complete the reform. It is the first step in the right direction, and I am glad to have an opportunity to vote for that first step. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 100) for the relief of the estate of John R. Bigelow;

A bill (S. 1646) providing for certain requirements for vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors;

A bill (S. 680) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens;

A bill (S. 1296) to commission passed assistant surgeons in United States Navy, and to provide for their examination preliminary to their promotion to the grade of surgeon;

A bill (S. 758) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Wilbur with the United States and to pay to said Wilbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to;

A bill (S. 1676) authorizing Rear-Admiral W. A. Kirkland to accept a gold box presented to him by the Emperor of Germany;

A bill (S. 744) providing for a naval training station on the island of Yerba Buena, or Goat Island, in the harbor of San Francisco, Cal., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1478) providing for the construction and equipment of a steam revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic Coast of the United States, with headquarters at the port of New York;

A bill (S. 541) for the relief of Orin R. McDaniel;

A bill (S. 213) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Missouri River between its mouth and the mouth of the Dakota or James River, and across the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Minnesota River, in the State of Minnesota, and South Port, in the State of Louisiana, and across the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers between the mouth of the Illinois and the city of Joliet, in the State of Illinois, and to prescribe the character, location, and dimensions of the same;

A bill (S. 1353) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Little Rock, Ark.," approved March 2, 1891;

A bill (S. 295) making an appropriation for the improvement of the road to the national cemetery near Pensacola, Fla.;

A bill (S. 174) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn.;

A bill (S. 340) to amend the military record of John H. Skinner;

A bill (S. 1701) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service;

A bill (S. 753) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy;

A bill (S. 641) to promote Commodore Louis C. Sartori, now on the retired list of the Navy, to be a rear-admiral on said list, in accordance with his original position on the Navy Register;

A bill (S. 642) for the relief of Commodore Oscar C. Badger;

A bill (S. 716) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull;

A bill (S. 982) to grant medals to survivors and heirs of the Port Hudson (La.) forlorn-hope storming column;

A bill (S. 656) appropriating $125,000 for the construction of a light-house tender for the Gulf coast of Florida;

A bill (S. 1347) for the construction of a steam revenue cutter for service in the Gulf of Mexico and tributary waters;

A bill (S. 1675) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory;

A bill (S. 1962) for the erection of a public building at the city of Jamestown, N. Y.;

A bill (S. 6) for the relief of P. S. Corbett;

A bill (S. 5) referring to the Treasury Department the claims of sundry persons for examination, adjustment, and report to Congress;

A bill (S. 1469) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852;

A bill (S. 516) for the relief of M. D. Crow;

Joint resolution (S. R. 24) for the return to the State of New Hampshire of the flag of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (S. 1424) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 4178, Revised Statutes, in relation to the marking of vessels' names at bow and stern, and also to provide for marking the draft," approved February 21, 1891;

A bill (S. 560) granting an honorable discharge to William Pierce;

A bill (S. 1480) to amend an act entitled "An act to adjust the salaries of postmasters," approved March 3, 1883;

A bill (S. 1106) to place Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alexander Stewart Webb on the retired list of the United States Army;

A bill (S. 1247) to establish and provide for the maintenance of a free public library and reading room in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 1513) to regulate the use of the public parks and improved reservations in the District of Columbia under the charge of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army;

A bill (S. 1835) to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington;

A bill (S. 509) for the relief of John W. Lewis, of Oregon;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 3982) granting to Lincoln Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Valley Hope, R. I., one condemned cannon;

A bill (H. R. 1691) to authorize the St. Louis and Oklahoma City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 65) to authorize Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, to accept medals from the British Government; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 108) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Newtown Creek, New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 54) authorizing the National Dredging Company to proceed with the work of dredging the channel of Mobile Harbor under the direction of the Secretary of War.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the concurrent resolution of the House relating to affairs in Cuba, to enable the House to correct an error in the engrossed resolutions as transmitted to the Senate.

Unanimous consent being granted, the resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill that the committee has reported. I am always in favor of taking a part of a good thing if I can not get it all. But I feel that this bill has not gone far enough to fully remedy the evil that it strikes at. I do not think it goes to the real seat of the disease. This fee system should be abolished. It should be abolished in toto, not simply a partial abolition; and, as far as my personal experience goes, one of the greatest evils arising out of the fee system is not remedied by the provisions of this bill. I think that there are more prosecutions brought in the courts of the United States, brought unjustly and wrongfully to innocent people, arising out of a false interpretation of the law and a dishonest and a corrupt motive of the commissioners of the courts of this country, than there is simply out of the dishonesty or corruption of the deputy marshals.

There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that there have been great frauds and conspiracies to commit great frauds in the administration of the criminal laws of this country. In the district I represent is situated the district court for the northern district of the State of Alabama; and within the last two years the grand jury of that court has indicted, the petit jury convicted, and the judge sentenced to the penitentiary two United States deputy marshals and two commissioners of the United States. The report of the Attorney-General for the year 1895 says:

> The discovery in northern Alabama of a widespread conspiracy among the commissioners and deputy marshals to defraud the Government by means of fraudulent fees, and the recent conviction of such of the conspirators as failed to escape, only calls renewed attention in a striking way to the evils of the fee system. These evils have been so often mentioned to Congress by different Presidents and Attorneys-General that anything I might say would be mere repetition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know of my own personal knowledge of many abuses that have grown out of this system. I have known of many cases where deputy marshals and commissioners have gone into partnership to drag men—who might have violated the law to a slight extent, who might have been guilty of a mere technical violation of the law—before a committing magistrate, a United States commissioner, who sent them down to the jail at Birmingham and kept them locked there for six or eight months at a time for probably selling a pint of whisky or a plug of tobacco.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you had a committing magistrate in the person of a United States commissioner who had no interest in these matters and who sat there to deal out evenhanded justice between the Government of the United States and the criminals or persons who are charged with crime who are brought into his courts, when such cases as that came before the courts they would go no further. The Government would be put to no further expense. But as long as the commissioner is paid his compensation, receives his living out of the number of persons that are tried before him, out of the number of persons that he commits and binds over to the district courts, so long as that exists you will have many men sent up to the district courts for trial who will be discharged when their cases are investigated.

Let me call attention to a few facts in reference to these cases. I find that the report of the Attorney-General for 1895 shows that the following cases during that year were nol-prossed or dismissed, because when they were investigated by a grand jury and came before the district court for trial they were nol-prossed or dismissed by the district attorney:

	Cases.
Under the customs laws	78
Under the internal-revenue laws	2,228
Under the post-office laws	42
Under the election laws	19
Under civil-rights laws	19
Under interstate-commerce laws	130
Under pension laws	167
For embezzlement	34
Miscellaneous	3,340

A total of 61,137 cases that were investigated by grand jury, and when these men who were charged with these offenses came before the district court their cases were nol-prossed or dismissed without trial. The Attorney-General in his report says that 40 per cent of the cases that are investigated by the grand juries even are dismissed or acquitted.

Now, in all these cases the Government of the United States has to bear the expense; has to pay out enormous fees to commissioners, deputy marshals, and others. But that is only a part of the evil. The Attorney-General in his report says that this does not include persons bound over to the district courts by the commissioners and whose cases have been thrown out of court when they came to be investigated by the grand jury. I know of my own personal knowledge that in the court at my own home over 50 per cent committed to the grand jury are discharged or the grand jury never found true bills against them.

Not only is it a question of saving the enormous expense in these cases, but it is a question of doing justice to innocent people who are persecuted by men who are seeking to make a living out of this fee system. The statistics show how this system is working. In 1893 there were 9,410 cases put on the docket. In 1895 there were 12,490 cases put on the docket, an increase of 25 per cent in two years. I therefore think, Mr. Chairman, that if this committee and this House intend to do full justice in this matter, to strike at the very root of the evil, save the Government this enormous expense, and protect many innocent people from frivolous prosecutions, they ought to put these commissioners on a salary, as well as the marshals and the United States district attorneys; and when the proper time comes I shall ask the committee to adopt this amendment:

Strike out all that part of section 16, beginning with the word "entitled," in line 17, on page 12, down to and including the word "employed," in line 24, page 14, and insert the following: "paid such salary as the Attorney-General may from time to time determine, which shall in no case exceed $2,000: Provided, That the necessary subsistence actually paid, not exceeding $4 per day, and actual and necessary traveling expenses of the commissioners while absent from their respective official residences and necessarily employed in going to, returning from, and attending before the United States courts, shall be allowed as hereinbefore provided for the allowance of accounts of marshals."

Mr. Chairman, that amendment does not interfere with the appointment of these commissioners by the judges as they are appointed now. The United States district judges will appoint the commissioners, as is provided by the terms of the bill as it stands before this committee. The amendment which I propose simply provides that the salary of the commissioners shall be fixed by the Attorney-General. The terms of this bill provide that the Attorney-General shall fix the salaries of the different assistant United States district attorneys.

The gentlemen who drafted this bill have determined that it is wise and safe to allow the Attorney-General to fix the fees of the assistant district attorneys. Now, the office of assistant district attorney is a far more important one than the office of United States commissioner, and if the Attorney-General can be safely trusted to fix the salaries of the assistant district attorneys, certainly he can be trusted to fix the salaries of the United States commissioners. The terms of the amendment allow sufficient scope to pay proper salaries. In cases where the business justifies it, the Attorney-General can fix a salary of $2,000, and in other cases he can, when necessary, go down to a very small salary. But it is contended that there are so many United States commissioners that it is impracticable to put them on salaries. Let us consider the facts of the case before we accept that conclusion.

I have taken the trouble to look into the official register of the United States to find out how many United States commissioners there are. I find that the total number recorded in that volume is 1,868. It must be remembered, however, that it has been held in some districts, and is held generally, that when a United States commissioner is once appointed he can not be removed—that is, under the old law—unless he is removed for corruption or dishonesty in office, so that if not removed for such a cause he holds the office until he resigns or dies. The consequence is that in the register as it stands now there are the names of a good many United States commissioners who are really not serving as such or doing any work in that capacity.

But I find also that during the year 1895, $144,168 was paid to United States commissioners for work done in 1894, and $232,283 for work done in 1895. Of course they have not received all their pay for 1895, but will receive part of it in 1896. So we may say that the United States Government pays out annually at least $376,451 in fees to the commissioners of the United States courts, and now I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that that money is not paid by the parties that are brought before those commissioners, nor by those who are convicted of criminal offenses in the United States courts. Why do I say that? Because I find from the report of the Attorney-General that the amount of fines and forfeitures assessed in the United States for the year 1895 amounted to more than $1,000,000, and yet that there was only $132,000 of those fines actually collected, the balance having been remitted, or discharged, or found uncollectible.

Now, that $132,000, if distributed among the United States commissioners, United States marshals, deputy marshals, commissioners, and clerks, would only pay a very small amount of the fees they receive. Therefore it is evident that these immense charges which are paid to these officers are really paid out of the Treasury of the United States and come out of the pockets of the taxpayers. But I find that even if every one of these 1,868 commissioners were at work and should receive his proportion of the fees each one of them would get only $201. Now, is it impossible for the district attorney, under such circumstances and in view of this state of facts, to fix the compensation of these officers? But to bring it down to a closer case—I could not go into a careful investigation of the statistics——

Mr. BROWN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. Are you not incorrect when you say that they would get only $201 each? Is not the amount $2,000?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. As I have said, there are a great many commissioners who are not doing any work at all as such.

Mr. BROWN. But I understood you to say that there was about $376,000 annually paid to them in the way of fees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Three hundred and seventy-six thousand four hundred and fifty-one dollars.

Mr. BROWN. How many commissioners are there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are 1,868 commissioners, according to the register, and that number of commissioners divided into the amount give a result of $201 each; at least, I think that calculation is correct. But, Mr. Chairman, in some States there is a vast number of commissioners in proportion to the necessities of the case. For instance, Tennessee has 129 commissioners, while in Alabama, which has as much criminal business, there are only 30. This shows that a much smaller number of these commissioners can easily transact this business.

Now, sir, in Alabama, where there are only 30 commissioners, I find that the amounts paid to them for the year 1895 were $31,808, or over a thousand dollars for each commissioner.

Mr. BROWN. Now see what was paid in Tennessee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, in Tennessee, where they have 129 commissioners, it would only make—I have not calculated the precise amount—about $50 or $60 apiece.

Mr. BROWN. In Tennessee the commissioners were not paid so much in the aggregate in 1895 as in Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no doubt that is the fact; but it simply shows that in some of these States a great many more commissioners have been appointed than were necessary. In Alabama 30 commissioners have transacted the business. My recollection is that they have transacted more business—have committed more persons to appear before the United States circuit court—than the 129 commissioners in Tennessee.

Mr. BROWN. Let me state that this bill is intended to put a restriction on the appointment of these commissioners. The district judge is authorized to appoint the commissioners, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I heartily concur with the committee in that view. The fact is that the appointment of great numbers of commissioners is a growing evil; for when a commissioner is appointed for whom there is not sufficient business he thinks he is entitled to make a living out of his position, and he expects to work up enough business to make that living. But when you appoint a smaller number of commissioners—only so many as can make a fair and honest compensation out of the business—they attend to the business better.

Mr. BROWN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but he will allow me to say that in regard to the proposition to put commissioners on salaries the Judiciary Committee had before it Judge Stewart, of the Indian Territory, whom I understand to be an eminent lawyer and a judge who has had much experience in that Territory. In 1895, if I remember aright, when this House passed a bill putting the field deputies and the United States commissioners on salaries, Judge Stewart came before the committee and asked to have the measure amended, so far as it applied to the Indian Territory, and the field deputies and commissioners there paid by fees as they had been previously.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman permit me a statement? The request was not for a change of the system as applied to those commissioners except so far as the commissioners in the Indian Territory performed the same services as justices of the peace in the several States. The request was that for services not performed by other commissioners of the United States those commissioners should have the same fees as justices of the peace in the States. But I am able to say that the salary system as applied generally to the commissioners was entirely satisfactory to the people of that Territory.

Mr. BROWN. I think you are mistaken about that.

Mr. BAILEY. I know I am not mistaken.

Mr. SWANSON. In the Indian Territory, do not the deputy marshals perform the same duties that sheriffs or deputy sheriffs perform in the States?

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely so. The truth is that the judiciary constitute practically the only representative of the Government in that Territory.

Mr. SWANSON. And consequently the workings of the system in the Indian Territory would not be a fair ground of comparison with a community where most of the local business is transacted by the State courts. Is not that a fair distinction?

Mr. BAILEY. I would respond affirmatively to that question, though I am satisfied that I would not apply the gentleman's view so far as he does. My opinion is that you can not apply the salary system to the field deputies anywhere.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In answer to my friend from Tennessee I wish to call his attention to the report of the Attorney-General on this question. The language of that officer is:

> Great vigilance has been exercised and every effort made to keep down expenses connected with the Federal courts. Excessive and illegal charges can in some cases be avoided by watchfulness and laborious investigation; but arrests and prosecutions on frivolous charges and flimsy proof, to which part of these expenses is due, can not be prevented by this Department. This can be accomplished only by abolishing the system which, by making the fees of commissioners, clerks, and attorneys the source of their compensation, presents a constant inducement to unnecessary arrests and litigation.

The present Attorney-General of the United States is therefore in favor of putting these United States commissioners on a salary. The Attorney-General in 1893 also expressed himself in his report in favor of putting these commissioners on a salary. I have failed yet to see the report of any Attorney-General that has not asked Congress to put these commissioners on a salary.

I do not, by my remarks on this subject, mean to imply that all the commissioners are corrupt. I know many of them. I am satisfied that a large majority of them are honest, painstaking, truthful, and just men. But there are, undoubtedly, as shown by the statistics and by the facts that are before the committee, a number of these commissioners who have an utter disregard for justice and the rights of the defendants brought before them; and public justice demands, as a matter of humanity to the people brought into these courts, the abolition of this system.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that there is nothing we can do—that no system that we can adopt will save more money to the United States in the Department of Justice than the change of the system now in vogue, and putting the commissioners on the salaried list. There is no more reason why they should not be put on the salaried list than why the postmasters should not be paid salaries. As I said a little while ago, there are 30 United States commissioners in the State of Alabama. There are more than 30 postmasters in Alabama who are appointed by the President of the United States and receive a salary. If the Postmaster-General can find good and efficient men to appoint to these positions and can fix the salary for the postmaster in this State, why can not the district judge and the Attorney-General find efficient and good men, and fix the salaries for them, to fill the positions of 30 United States commissioners in the State of Alabama? And, sir, I only refer to Alabama to illustrate the point. The same is true of all of the other States.

Mr. Chairman, that system by which the compensation of a judicial officer is determined by the number of prosecutions commenced before him is one that fixes a premium on corruption and dishonesty in office. I feel that it is a relic of the Dark Ages and a travesty on justice, as well as a disgrace to the American people.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the principle announced by the Judiciary Committee in reporting this bill. But there are some gross inequalities in the preparation of the bill, which I believe it is due to the committee to point out, to the end that they may be rectified if the Committee on the Judiciary all entertain the same spirit evinced by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON].

I want to call your attention to some of these inequalities, and will state at the outset that my remarks are based on the information furnished to us by the letter of the Attorney-General. I wish to direct your attention especially to some of the gross earnings and some of the net earnings and the salaries which are proposed to be paid in the pending bill in the various districts of the United States as an illustration of what I regard as inequalities that the bill contains. For example, as it pertains to the United States marshals in the State of Montana, from which I hail: The gross earnings of the United States marshal for the year ending June 30, 1895, in Montana, as shown by this report, is $23,835.81. The net earnings for the same year are $6,493.06, and the committee have given the United States marshal for that district the munificent salary of $3,500. The district of Massachusetts, on the contrary, shows gross earnings of $10,497.24, less than one-half of Montana; net earnings, $6,000, or $493.06 less than Montana, and Massachusetts is provided with a salary of $5,000, which is accorded to her marshal, against $3,500 to the marshal in Montana.

Again, take, if you please, the district of the State of Iowa. The gross earnings, as shown by the report, are $13,460.88 and net earnings $5,195.64, and the salary of the marshal is fixed at $4,000. In other words, here is $10,000 per annum less in gross earnings, with $1,300 per annum less of net earnings, and yet this district is accorded $500 per annum more as a salary for this official than is allowed for the district from which I hail.

Mr. BROWN. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the amount of business done in Montana in the courts as compared with the amount done in Massachusetts?

Mr. HARTMAN. I have taken into consideration a number of items. I have taken into consideration, in the first place, the official report placed in our hands by the Attorney-General. I have taken into consideration some of the things which the Committee on the Judiciary took into consideration and some things which they did not take into consideration; and among the things which they did not seem to give consideration to was that it is a much easier task to act as United States marshal in a district such as the district of Massachusetts, and it is less a hardship and it has less labor attached to it, than to fill that office in the great State of Montana, covering an area of 146,000 square miles of ground.

Mr. BROWN. Let me ask if the attention of the gentleman was called to the fact that in Massachusetts, during the year 1895, there were 116 criminal cases disposed of, while in Montana, for the same time, there were only 34.

Mr. HARTMAN. That is true enough. But let me ask, how far do you suppose the United States marshal of Massachusetts had to travel to serve the processes on witnesses and defendants in the cases to which you refer?

Mr. BROWN. And let me say to the gentleman, further, that the marshal is allowed his mileage, under the bill now before us, in addition to his salary, and for every mile that he has to travel in the State of Montana he will get paid for.

Mr. HARTMAN. I understand that. The point is this: Do you pretend to say that it is an easier task to fill the position of United States marshal in Montana than it is in Massachusetts? I do not care what the number of cases may be, but I ask the gentleman if he recognizes the fact that there is a great deal of difference in the amount of labor that is performed. Do you know what it amounts to in Montana? Do you know what it means? Do you know that it means that these marshals, in order to serve processes, are compelled to travel by stage and horseback and in every other conceivable way to reach their destinations? Do you know that the Northern Pacific Railroad runs 781 miles, east and west, through that State? Do you not know that many and many a mile is traveled more off the railroad than on the railroad?

Now, I want to say this: There is another view of it. It is a good deal cheaper—with all due respect to gentlemen who have taken the other view—it is cheaper to live in the Eastern States, where prices are a good deal lower, than in our Western country. It is a great deal less expensive to maintain your family on the same plane.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Does the United States marshal of Montana go out and do this field work personally, or does he do it through his deputies?

Mr. HARTMAN. He does it himself, and through his deputies—both. He is often in the field himself, as I know personally.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman may have overlooked the fact that a large part of this $6,500 which he mentions was made up of mileage?

Mr. HARTMAN. Well, I want to know from the gentleman from Illinois whether a man can sit down in his office and cock his feet up on a desk and earn mileage, or whether it does not take actual work to earn mileage, and if it is not worth something to earn mileage? I am giving you the net results, not the gross results.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The net results, so far as the marshal of Montana is concerned, consist in a large part of mileage.

Mr. HARTMAN. Oh, I admit that; and if a man does not do anything in earning mileage, then I understand the force of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Under the law as it stands now the marshal makes a profit on every mile he travels.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. How do you know that?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Because he is allowed 5 cents a mile, and it does not cost him that.

Mr. HARTMAN. Do you know what the railroad fare is in my State?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not know what it is.

Mr. HARTMAN. I will tell you what it is. It is 5 cents a mile, except where you ride on a division where the road runs through a tunnel, and then it is 10 cents a mile.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I presume your marshal travels on a pass, like the others.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will suggest to the gentleman that when a man is traveling on the hurricane deck of a cayuse he is not traveling on a pass.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Under this bill the marshal is allowed $3,500 for his own salary—his own personal compensation. Now, for every dollar he pays out for travel he is reimbursed. For every penny that he pays out for subsistence he is reimbursed, so that he receives $3,500 net.

Mr. HARTMAN. I did not yield for a speech, but for a question. And I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the same provision in the bill does not apply to every other marshal in every other district?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is true.

Mr. HARTMAN. Then where have we any advantage in that? Now, there is another proposition to which I want to call your attention, and I am going to submit it in detail and prove these inequalities. In the first place, the earnings of the Montana marshal's office are higher than any of the other of the 18 districts that I will present here. The gross earnings of the Montana marshal's office are higher than any of them except 4, and the salary in Montana is the lowest one with the exception of the States of Idaho and Maryland, the salary in Idaho being $2,500 and in Maryland $3,000.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There are many below that.

Mr. HARTMAN. That is not the point. I am speaking of these 18 districts. We have in these districts the largest net returns to the Treasury, and yet you make the salary the third lowest out of these 18 districts. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] if he considers that equitable or just?

Mr. BROWN. I want to ask the gentleman from what source does he obtain his figures?

Mr. HARTMAN. I do not yield for a question at present.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I desire to say this with reference to Montana: It is a State of magnificent distances, and as the gentleman has already said, and under the recent rulings of the Supreme Court, I have no doubt that these great earnings there were made at 20 cents a mile, for which nothing under heaven was paid, and for which the Government of the United States has been bled.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman answer the question? Do you consider it an equitable rating of the salaries, while we produced the largest net earnings into the Treasury and you put us the third lowest out of 18 States and districts?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. These are not net earnings for the Treasury, but net earnings to the marshal.

Mr. HARTMAN. But they will be net earnings to the Treasury under your bill?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman in charge of the bill?

Mr. HARTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. The increases of the amount of fees are explained by the provisions of the existing law, which provides—

That the marshal, district attorney, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of the districts of California, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota shall, for the services they may perform during the fiscal year herein provided for, receive the fees and compensation allowed by law to like officers performing similar duties in the districts of Oregon and Idaho.

Mr. HARTMAN. I understand that.

Mr. DOCKERY. These, I understand, all get very much larger fees.

Mr. HARTMAN. That is true. As a matter of fact, these fees are provided for by law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but how have they increased the gross receipts? Because they get double the fees of the marshals of other States. That is exactly the reason.

Mr. HARTMAN. Come, if you please, to the State of Oregon——

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). They are excepted by law, and especially favored.

Mr. HARTMAN. Come to the State of Oregon.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is in the same condition.

Mr. HARTMAN. The gross earnings of the United States attorney in the State of Oregon were $5,916.75; the net earnings $5,747.52. In Oregon the salary is $4,000, and in our State the salary is $3,500. We get no increase for the amount above that produced by the State of Oregon. Now, I do not want the State of Oregon changed. I am not opposing anybody's salary; but we want to be put right square along with the other States and Territories in the remuneration given to those officers; and I have a right to insist upon that at the hands of this committee.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Will you allow me a single suggestion?

Mr. HARTMAN. Certainly; I am willing to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The gentleman makes a mistake when he speaks about this being earnings for the Treasury. They are fees paid by the Treasury and wrested from the people.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is it.

Mr. HARTMAN. But under the provisions of the gentleman's bill all of these fees go into the Treasury, just as I said. Of course they are the property of the officers under the existing law.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. But they will if the bill is passed, if they are wrested——

Mr. HARTMAN. I am criticising the bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF (continuing). If these amounts are still continued to be wrested from the people they will all, of course, go to the Treasury.

Mr. HARTMAN. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech, I will say to him.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Well, that is all.

Mr. HARTMAN. Take another illustration, Mr. Chairman. Take the State of Kentucky. The net earnings of the State of Kentucky through the United States marshal's office are $6,200; the net earnings through the United States marshal of our State $6,493. In Kentucky the salary is $5,000, in Montana $3,500. The equity of the case is apparent.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Do you not understand the reason?

Mr. HARTMAN. How is that?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Do you not understand the reason?

Mr. HARTMAN. No; but I have no doubt you could give it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. You voted for silver. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN. I am not prepared to say that that is the reason. I am going to insist upon this. I believe that the Committee on the Judiciary are aiming to do the right thing in this matter, and I have pointed the situation out to them. I do not impugn their fairness; but certainly they must have acted without information at all when they happened to fix upon $3,500 as the salaries of marshals and district attorneys of Montana.

Now, I want to call attention to another thing. For instance, in the southern district of the State of New York the net earnings of the marshal's office for the district are $5,047.46, $1,200 less than the earnings of our State. The salary in the State of New York is $5,000; salary in Montana, $3,500. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to consume the time of this committee any longer, but with the consent of the committee I am going to submit and have printed in the RECORD a table showing these inequalities; and when the time comes, when this bill is open to amendment under the five-minute rule, I shall then move a series of amendments—at least I shall move for my own State, and if other gentlemen see fit to move for theirs I believe this committee can afford to meet us in the spirit evinced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON], or at least try to take out many of the glaring inequalities contained in this bill.

Before I sit down I want to say that everyone knows who is familiar with the price of living, the everyday living of the people, it is more expensive in the intermountain States—all of those intermountain States—than it is, for instance, in the State of Indiana. And before I take my seat I want to call attention to the State of Indiana. In the United States marshal's office for the State of Indiana the gross earnings were $15,048.48, the net earnings $4,500. The salary in Indiana is $4,500—$2,000 less net earnings than in my State, and $1,000 more salary.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is no equity in that kind of a proceeding; and I am satisfied, as I stated before, that the inequality that has crept in is not by reason of the intention of the committee, but by inadvertence on the part of the committee.

I want to call attention to 14 districts where the net earnings are lower than in Montana and the gross earnings are lower than in Montana and the salary is higher. The salary in Montana is lower than in any of these 14 districts, except Idaho and Maryland. I will not detain the committee further.

Mr. PROWN. In stating the gross earnings for the southern district of New York the gentleman made a mistake.

Mr. HARTMAN. I beg pardon; I see. The return is for six months instead of for a year. I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to it.

I append the following as a part of my remarks:

*Six months.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire only a moment to correct a misapprehension under which the committee may rest by reason of the observations of the gentleman from Montana. The gentleman recites the large amount of fees earned in his State, and because of that fact argues that the marshal and the attorney there should receive larger compensation than is carried in this bill. I have no doubt, sir, that the fees in the district of Montana are very large, and I will submit to the committee an explanation of that fact. Section 837 of the Revised Statutes is in this language:

The district attorneys and marshals for the districts of Oregon and Nevada shall be entitled to receive for like services double the fees hereinbefore provided, but neither of them shall be allowed to retain of said fees any sum exceeding the aggregate compensation of such officers as hereinbefore provided.

That is to say, Mr. Chairman, the marshals, clerks, and attorneys in those districts are allowed to charge double fees. Now, then, a provision has been carried in the legislative appropriation bill time out of mind which also provides that—

That the marshal, district attorney, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of the districts of California, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota shall, for the services they may perform during the fiscal year herein provided for, receive the fees and compensation allowed by law to like officers performing similar duties in the districts of Oregon and Idaho.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, in the States of California, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, Nevada, and Idaho double fees are allowed by law to the marshals, attorneys, and clerks, and therefore it is not a matter of surprise that the gentleman should be able to show affluent gross receipts from the offices in his State.

Mr. HARTMAN. That being the case, and I admitted it frankly in my first statement, I want to ask the gentleman whether that throws any light upon this discrepancy. In the northern district of California the gross earnings amounted to $4,407, the net earnings, to $1,900 as against $5,800 in Montana. The salary fixed for that officer in California by this bill is $4,000, while the salary for the corresponding officer in Montana is $3,500, both of the districts operating under the double fee system. What has the gentleman to say about that?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman's inquiry, I will say that he will have to seek information as to the specific item about which he desires to be advised from the committee reporting this bill. I am not a member of the committee, and therefore not familiar with the various items contained in it. I was only attempting to answer the general proposition laid down by the gentleman from Montana, that because of the large receipts of the offices of the marshal, clerk, and attorney in his State, therefore larger salaries should be paid those officers than are provided by this bill. I desire now to emphasize the statement made by the gentleman in charge of this bill, so that the Committee of the Whole may not be misled. All the money expended for marshals, attorneys, and clerks comes from the pockets of the taxpayers, from the people of the United States, and because of certain conditions which have hitherto existed in the States mentioned in the statute read the officers there have been allowed to charge double fees. This fact, however, does not seem to me a justification for asking salaries proportioned to the gross fees of their several offices, inasmuch as those fees have been enormously swollen by reason of special legislative favors.

Mr. HARTMAN. Does not the gentleman believe that money spent in the employment of a responsible, reliable, and competent attorney to represent the United States is money well spent?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do. I believe in giving proper compensation to every officer; but I apprehend that the gentleman will have no trouble whatever in finding some competent citizen in the State of Montana who will be glad to accept either office, marshal or attorney, at $3,500 a year, with actual subsistence and actual mileage additional. If the gentleman should have any trouble in that respect, and the law can be amended, I beg to assure him that in the district I have the honor to represent thousands of competent citizens can be found willing to accept those offices upon the terms of this bill.

Mr. HARTMAN. There are plenty of men willing to take the offices at that salary, but they are not competent.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I can hardly make any adequate statement of my views upon this bill in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to secure more time now?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes, sir. I will endeavor not to be tedious, but I would like to have time to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time remaining for general debate is very brief, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman for twelve minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, we have been told on all hands that this is a most excellent measure, that it represents the best judgment of the committee, that they sought information from every available source, and obtained, I take it, all that was obtainable. I mean no discourtesy, sir, when I say that I do not doubt that they have obtained it, and that they have succeeded in bottling it up and keeping it from sight better than any committee I have ever known. [Laughter.] Every gentleman on this floor who has taken an interest in this bill has sought in vain, has plied the committee in vain, for any clear statement of the basis upon which the bill has been made up.

In the opening statement we were told that it had been approved by the Attorney-General; that he had given it great attention; had given the committee a great many hours of his time, and had written letters approving of the bill, until we thought it was the bill of the Attorney-General that we had before us; but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] to-day tells us that the letter of the Attorney-General is not what was followed at all in framing the bill, and that it does not constitute the basis of the bill. Permit me to add, sir, at the expense of repetition, that no gentleman, either on the committee or off it, has suggested any basis upon which this bill is made up. If we take the letter of the Attorney-General it deals with only one year, and, without wishing to be critical, it is to me a most extraordinary circumstance that gentlemen seeking all available information from the office of the Attorney-General should get tables covering only a single year—a year in which the Judiciary Committee allege the returns were padded in some districts—a year in which, as every sensible man knows, there was commercial depression, when vessels were tied to their docks, and business fell to a point far below any previous experience in the other districts.

I look at that letter of the Attorney-General, and I find in it things that make the action of the committee most inexplicable. I find, for instance, that the total income of an office represents the amount of business that is done there and the amount of responsibility resting upon the head of that office. In New Hampshire the total income, according to the Attorney-General's letter, was $1,846; in New Jersey, $6,400—more than three times as much—almost four times as much. But by this bill the salaries of the prosecuting attorneys in those two districts are made equal. There is $500 difference in the salaries of the United States marshals. That is the only year's return that the committee in their kindness have attempted to lay before the House; and yet they appear to have discarded the returns for that year in making up this bill. Now, it is unfair to say that there has been time for the discussion of this bill. It is unfair to say there has been opportunity to gather information; because the bill came in here yesterday and it was only yesterday that anybody knew that it was time to begin to gather information for use to-day.

But taking the Attorney-General's report—not for last year, but for the year before—1894—we find in a statement of the amounts arising from civil suits to which the United States was a party and criminal prosecutions in the circuit and district courts during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, some interesting facts. We find that the total amount of fees, forfeitures, and penalties imposed was, in New Hampshire, $389; in New Jersey, $5,048. In the large districts of Pennsylvania the amounts were much less than in New Jersey, and in the western district of Tennessee the amount was $6,000. So that on the basis of the business thus appearing the district of New Jersey is the largest in the list which I have named save only the western district of Tennessee. Under this bill the marshal of New Jersey receives a salary of $2,500; in the western district of Tennessee the marshal receives $4,000; in the western district of Pennsylvania, $3,500. It would be very interesting, Mr. Chairman, to know how any basis for this bill can be found in either of those two reports of the Attorney-General.

Taking the Attorney-General's Report for 1893 (which I have obtained from the library) and going two years back of the single year that the committee thought it worth while to lay before themselves and the House, we find in that year the total amount of fines, forfeitures, and penalties in New Hampshire was $1,300; in New Jersey, $5,800; in the western district of Tennessee, $10,000, and in the greater districts of Pennsylvania, $2,600; showing that for that year New Jersey, in the amounts derived from imposition and collection of fines and other penalties was above the largest district cited. Yet in this bill she is classed with New Hampshire in fixing the salary, although she outranks the western district of Pennsylvania in the amount of business, as shown by this test of the Attorney-General's report. Taking the columns showing the amounts of fines and forfeitures realized, the amount in New Hampshire is $900, in New Jersey $1,800, in Pennsylvania for that year nothing, and in the western district of Tennessee nothing.

Now, those are all the authorities that I could look up and bring here to-day. They are cited to show that on the average of business, taking any data which you choose to select in the three last reports of the Attorney-General, the business of New Jersey ranks with the largest district cited and is in every instance three or four times as much as in the State of New Hampshire, with which she is classed in fixing the salaries.

Now, these are the facts as to the only four districts with which I have had time to make any comparison to-day. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] has shown similar facts with respect to fifteen or sixteen districts, concerning which he proposes to print the data. That there are inequalities in the districts is undisputed and indisputable. They arise from the fact that this is a bill made up by fixing the items arbitrarily, each according to somebody's judgment, without proceeding upon any just and uniform basis.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be considered as criticising the committee, yet the salaries as shown in this bill remind me of a certain city assessment where the board of assessors, consisting of four men, went out one morning and in undertaking to assess the property were unable to agree. So as a compromise it was arranged that the man in favor of the lowest valuation should assess one block, the man in favor of the highest valuation another block, the intermediate man another block, and the fourth man another block. [Laughter.] Gentlemen can imagine the equitable character of the assessment.

I know of no other basis on which to explain the inequitable features of this bill than that different minds have drafted different items. I have such full faith in the Judiciary Committee that I do not believe there is a man on that committee who would sit down here to-day and after examining the case of New Jersey, in connection with any other five districts he may select, would say, in the light of the Attorney-General's reports for a series of years, that the bill does not exhibit the grossest inequality of rating against New Jersey.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not like to object, but as a member of the committee I should like to say a few words on this subject; and only twenty minutes remain before the usual hour of adjournment.

A MEMBER. Let the time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I want to say that I am as much in favor of the principle of salaries as any man on this floor. I want to repudiate the idea that the question is between the adoption of this bill, with all its inequalities, and the adoption of the fee system. I am for salaries. I am for salaries in a bill that I believe approaches to a condition of fairness. There is none in that bill. From now until the day we pass away forever, from now until the last sad rites are read over the last member of the Committee on the Judiciary, no one of them will ever be able to declare the basis on which that bill is constructed, or if there was any. [Laughter.]

In the beginning we heard nothing but the Attorney-General, until all thought that the wise men on milk-white camels had gone in search of a new star, and had discovered an unsnuffed and smoking candle in the Department window for that star, and came back with the emotions of men who had new light and a new reform gospel. But the gentleman from Missouri, Judge BURTON, says they repudiated that idea of the gospel letter and took into consideration certain other things, such as the kind of business done. Here are the reports of the Attorney-General, showing the kind of service done, the number of cases and returns, and he puts his figures in here to show as a matter of fact that is the basis——

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question just there?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. How many cases were disposed of in the courts of New Jersey last year?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURTON of Missouri (continuing). How many were pending and how many were disposed of in any way?

Mr. GARDNER. The reports, Mr. Chairman, are here, and I have picked out a few from which I have made extracts. The gentleman's eyes are better than mine and perhaps he can report them to the House. [Laughter.]

But now think—think of the absurdity of the question the gentleman suggests. The gentleman confesses that the Judiciary Committee have proceeded upon that basis. They come into the House and say that business was "drummed up"; that the dockets were padded; that people were dragged into the courts, and now they want to make up a salary bill on the basis of the cases they found in the courts last year. Why, I answered that question at the very beginning of my remarks, when I said that last year it was confessed on all sides that the dockets were loaded in some sections of the country. It is admitted on all sides, and will be admitted here to-day, if the gentleman will examine the figures, that in every admiralty district the figures fell abnormally low.

I have not the figures at hand to prove the assertion, but think I know enough to make the statement without fear of contradiction, and I defy any gentleman to refute it, that the income of the marshal in the district of New Jersey last year was a little less than 50 per cent of what it was some years ago, when the country was prosperous. Now, because last year down in one district the docket was padded, and because somewhere else business had been drummed up, and because in the admiralty districts it had fallen lower than for years before, the gentleman, with the report of that particular year in his hands, rises and asks how many cases are pending in New Jersey. Then, if I would answer his question by the figures without giving the facts environing them, they would not have the slightest significance, for the report of the Attorney-General shows that in the matter of fines and forfeitures and cases compromised by the Secretary of the Treasury, without going into court at all, the amount of money realized was greater than the gross returns from districts salaried in the same class as New Jersey and greater than in districts where the salary of the marshal is fixed at $4,000.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, although I am a member of the committee, I did not intend to debate this bill at all, because there seems to be a general recognition by the House that its principle is sound. But I take the floor now in response to what my friend from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] said, as well as the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER], as to the basis on which the committee acted in determining the compensation of these different officials in the change from the fee system to a salary. I do not expect to satisfy them that the bill is perfect, but I hope to satisfy them at least that a fair degree of intelligence and impartiality was brought to its consideration.

We all know, and both of these gentlemen will admit, that no bill could be brought in here cutting down, as this does, the salary of an official in almost every judicial district in the United States that would suit all of the members of the House. That must be recognized at once as an impossibility. We are all sensitive to every bill that cuts off any stream of revenue that flows into our district, and particularly so when that revenue happens to go into the pockets of an influential constituent or a personal friend, as is probably true of most of the reductions in this bill. But while I think we might wish to show our devotion to our district by standing up on the floor and speaking against it, I have confidence that the members of this House, when it comes to a question between the good of the whole country and the pockets of their home friends, will, by their votes, sustain the bill, which inaugurates a great reform, even if they think it bears hard upon their districts.

Now, upon what basis ought we to decide what each district attorney should get under this bill? I seems to me we can not decide it solely by what he had earned in the past in the office or by the amount of work he had done in the past in the office. We must simply say what is a fair compensation for that place under the laws of supply and demand. What is it necessary to pay to get the right man and compensate him reasonably? To determine that, we can look first at what he has earned before; we can look also at what he has done before; but the real point of decision is, What is an adequate compensation? And I do not believe that the amounts in this bill are generally too small. I believe they are liberal. I do not believe there is a district attorney to-day who, if this bill goes into effect, will resign his office.

I believe the United States under this bill can get in every district good and capable men who will perform the duties of the office as well as in the past. And one point ought to be borne in mind, which my friend from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] seemed to ignore, and that is that the office of district attorney is not useful to a lawyer simply because of the cash revenue it brings him. It gives him, besides, a standing in the courts, a precedence at the bar, a prestige in the community, an acquaintance with clients and with jurors, which has a cash value, and which we ought to recognize. I think we should consider the fact that a district attorney gets from his office an advertisement and a business that he otherwise would not have, and which is part of the remuneration of his position. I do not think we ought necessarily to pay partly in cash and partly in honor, but if the honor is directly and palpably of cash value, then I think we ought to take that into account.

Mr. TAWNEY. Suppose the district attorney has so much business to attend to for the Government that he has no time to do anything else. What advantage, then, does he derive from the position outside of the compensation?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Very little, I will agree, unless, he has a partner, but I think the case suggested by the gentleman is very infrequent in the whole United States. There are cases, perhaps, where that condition does exist, but we all know that generally the district attorney carries on his private practice as well as the Government business, and his private practice is directly helped by his Government business.

Mr. FISCHER. I suppose you will wipe out the question of honor with regard to marshals, and say it is purely a question of fees or salary. Now, I want to call your attention to these districts in New York, and have you answer concerning them, if you will. In the northern district of New York you fix the salary at $5,000. The net proceeds were $8,200. For the eastern district of New York you fix the salary at $3,000, and the net income is $5,800. For the southern district of New York, the income being $600 less, you fix the salary at $5,000. Now, I ask you, on what basis do you make that distinction?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The southern district is not in the bill at all, is it?

Mr. FISCHER. It is included here, if I can read correctly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, as far as the marshals go, it is; yes.

Mr. FISCHER. You fix both those districts at $5,000 and the one I live in at $3,000, and yet it exceeds the other that I have mentioned in the net receipts. It includes Brooklyn, which, with its port, is one of the largest commercial points in this country, and rates very high with others in the world. Will you kindly tell me on what basis you fix that amount?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That amount was fixed on the basis that the marshal should have the same compensation as the district attorney. Now, I concede, personally, for myself, that I do not think that is a fair basis in all cases. I think the district attorney should generally be paid more than the marshal, but of course this bill does not pretend to be ideal. It is a compromise bill. The committee adopted the old rule of paying the marshal the same as the district attorney, and we fixed the district attorney's salary first and then fixed the marshal's by it. Now, as to the district attorney's salary, there is this that comes in, and which must be taken into consideration: A lawyer in a large city necessarily should receive a larger salary than a lawyer in a country district.

Mr. GARDNER. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. The salary of the marshal in New Jersey is fixed at $2,500, which is above that of the district attorney, so that was not fixed on that basis.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is one of the few exceptions in the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Do you happen to recollect the grounds of that exception?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No, I do not. Mr. Chairman, as to the district in California that my friend from Montana spoke of as being allowed too much, compared with his district, it contains the city of San Francisco; and we all know that the lawyers of a large city, lawyers even of the same grade, earn much more than lawyers in a small town. It is not because they are better lawyers, but it is because large amounts are involved and the law of supply and demand enacts that result. For instance, it was said in the committee that there was one State in this Union in which there was not a lawyer earning over $4,000. Very likely there are lawyers there just as profound and as brilliant as in other States, but the standard of lawyers' wages is not as high. If you or I have occasion to employ counsel there, we pay only a quarter or a tenth what the same grade of service would cost in New York City. Why should not the United States, when it comes into the market to buy legal services, have the same advantage? And so the real basis upon which my mind has turned and turns in determining these salaries is: For how little can the United States get the requisite talent and what is fair compensation for it? What the officer earned last year and what work he did last year is only useful as bearing upon that.

Mr. FISCHER. If I understood you correctly, you stated that you did not desire in this bill to fix the salary of the marshal above that of the district attorney. How does it happen that in the northern district of New York you fix it at $5,000, and the district attorney at $4,000?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. FISCHER. There are many such instances in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes of the time remain, if any gentleman desires to be recognized.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think the gentleman from Illinois wants to be recognized.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether during the short time remaining it is worth while for me to take up any time at all or not. I meant to address myself somewhat generally to the bill; but there is no time for doing that now.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have fifteen minutes—that he be given ten minutes in addition to the time at which general debate was to close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois have fifteen minutes, and that the time for general debate be extended until ten minutes after 5. If there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not object. Why not have it to-morrow, and extend the debate a couple of hours? There are a number of gentlemen who desire to speak. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] wants to speak on this matter. Why not give a couple of hours to-morrow. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There will be plenty of time for debate when we come to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended for two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, with whatever look of inequality there may be found in it concerning the salaries as fixed. If any be found, after full consideration, I am for the bill because, first, it is one step in the direction of finally getting rid of the internal-revenue law. I shall hail the day when this country will repeal all the internal-revenue laws and raise our money entirely by the old-fashioned way of a tariff. [Applause.] But while we have that internal-revenue law it must be enforced. It is a curious fact, when we reflect on it, that none of these troubles about frivolous prosecutions were ever complained of in this country until we had an internal-revenue law, and it was many years after the internal-revenue law was enacted before the persons whose duty it was to enforce that law found out methods whereby they might increase their own income. They have thoroughly discovered now all the methods by which they may increase their earnings, and the purpose of this bill is, so far as possible, to circumvent these gentlemen who, all over the United States, are engaged, and have been for some years, in padding and extending their legitimate salaries. Complaint has been made by a gentleman who spoke on the other side of the House this afternoon against this bill because it failed to put commissioners on a salary as well as marshals and district attorneys.

Now, let me say, Mr. Chairman, this bill strikes at the evil when it puts the district attorney on a salary. It digs up this whole system by the roots; for I say here that the men who are the most responsible for this system of padding salaries, for this system of frivolous prosecutions, are the district attorneys of the United States. There are 150 men in the United States whose interest it is to have this bill defeated; but the rest of the 70,000,000 are interested in having this bill passed. The commissioners can do no harm. If the district attorneys have their stings pulled the commissioners will have no sting left. Commissioners can not institute prosecutions. Under the law as it exists now the only reason why we have this system of frivolous prosecutions continued is because it is to the interest of the district attorneys to have them continue in their districts until each has made his maximum of $6,000.

You will find now in every district practically that when the district attorney's earnings have reached $6,000 in a year he loses his interest for the balance of the year in all kinds of prosecutions. No more of these frivolous prosecutions will be carried on except enough to pay him his $6,000. Incidentally it pays $6,000 to the marshal. Incidentally it pays large fees to the commissioner, but the mischief lies with the district attorney, who is at the foundation of it all. Now, complaint has been made that this bill makes no provision for limiting the number of commissioners. As I remember, Mr. Chairman, in the last Congress, in the Congress before the last, in a great many Democratic Congresses for years, clamor was made that defendants were being carried too far from their homes for examination before commissioners, and it was insisted that they must be taken before commissioners close to their homes. The result was a yielding to that clamor and the appointment of additional commissioners in nearly every district in the United States. For instance, in the three districts of Tennessee there are, I think, about 120 commissioners. Now, the last Congress enacted a law, which is permanent, providing that—

Hereafter no part of any money appropriated to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks shall be used for any warrant issued, or arrest made, or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless said fees have been taxed against and collected from the defendant, or unless the prosecution has been commenced upon a sworn complaint, setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, or upon a sworn complaint by a United States attorney, collector, or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief, and approved either before or after such arrest by a circuit or district judge or attorney of the United States in the district in which the offense is committed.

There comes in the district attorney again, even in that law passed by the last Congress, which it was thought would limit these prosecutions, but which does not limit them as long as they depend upon the will of the district attorney, because his will is to permit the prosecutions to continue until he has made his $6,000. Now, I say, sir, that the mischief we complain of, the mischief the whole country has for years been complaining of, lies at the door of the district attorneys, and I say that after a personal experience of over thirteen years as a district attorney, in which, most of the time, I confess I did not make my maximum. I limited my prosecutions in internal-revenue cases to the cases reported to me by the collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, and refused to prosecute cases that came to me through letters from parties interested in swelling prosecutions.

I might readily have made my maximum if I had chosen, but I felt that it was a system of petty larceny, that I did not have to practice it to live, and that I would not do it. Now, sir, I say as to this bill that if the salaries be properly arranged, if we have not done injustice here in that respect, the fact that we do not put the commissioners on salary does no harm. No man on earth can tell what business a commissioner would do with the system of "padding" returns wiped out. There are hundreds of commissioners that have been brought into existence by this system of swelling returns in order to make the maximum for the district attorneys. The very moment we drop that system these commissioners, many of them, will drop out of existence and will fall back to what they were thirty years ago, when we had no internal-revenue law. Their business will be small. It always used to be very small, in many instances not exceeding $5 or $10 a year. Take away the inducement to multiply cases frivolously, for the mere sake of making fees; take away that inducement from the district attorney, and then the marshal and deputy marshal drop their fees, the commissioner drops his, the main spoke in the wheel has been knocked out, and that is what this bill does. All that is left, therefore, will do no harm so far as the commissioners are concerned.

Now, as to the arrangement of the salaries, I have heard different gentlemen state here what the basis was upon which the committee acted, and I have no doubt that each of the members of the committee had his own particular view as to why the salaries should be thus arranged, though all of them, of course, considered to a large extent what the earnings of the different offices had been. These salaries have been criticised. For instance, take the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], who complains very bitterly that the salaries in the Montana district have been reduced too low. Now, the members of the committee, some of them at least, I for one, gave a good deal of attention to the States where the salaries of the district attorneys were being put so low, and I wish to call attention now to the facts in the case of Montana. Last year the district attorney there disposed of cases 4 for the United States. There were 28 cases pending on the 21st day of July, 1895. The district attorney disposed of 4 cases. Now, $50 is the maximum fee that such an officer can possibly receive in a single case. If this officer received the maximum in every case he earned $200.

Mr. HARTMAN. The statement which the gentleman has before him refers, I presume, to those cases disposed of in the district courts. It does not include cases heard before United States commissioners preparatory to their being taken to the court.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; of course it does not. As the fee for attending to a case before the commissioner was $5, with mileage at the rate of 10 cents a mile going and returning, the attorney, when he traveled 100 miles to attend to a case before a commissioner, would receive $25 in all. But there could not have been very many such cases, as there were only 28 pending on the 1st of July, 1895. If he had disposed of the whole 28 and received the maximum fee of $50 in each case, he could not have earned more than $1,400. So that when the gentleman points out the amount that the district attorney earns and the amount that the marshal earns and calls it "net," I ask him to tell me how that district attorney earned $6,000 net out of 4 cases, if he did not get it from his mileage at 10 cents a mile going and returning.

Mr. HARTMAN. I frankly stated in my remarks to the Committee of the Whole that a large portion of the earnings of these officers comes from the mileage. But if travel is essential to the performance of the officer's duties and if the law provides that mileage shall be paid, and if it occupies two or three days for him to travel between the capital and the place where the hearing takes place, I want to know whether he is not entitled to such mileage and whether he ought not to receive in that way sufficient compensation to justify him in leaving his regular place of business.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It looks to me this way: That man disposed of four cases in a year and received emoluments amounting to $6,000. The proportion of mileage is too large for the proportion of brain work; legs, it would seem, are more valuable than brains in that district. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN. Does not the gentleman understand that the attorney has other duties to perform than simply trying cases in the United States courts?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DALZELL. I ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly. He is giving us very valuable information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended, so as to allow the gentleman from Illinois to conclude his remarks. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I say, then, Mr. Chairman, of course without seeking to belittle the State which the gentleman represents, or the district attorney in whose behalf he is interested, that we must look at this thing as it is. This is a serious question of facts. This matter is not like a river and harbor bill, in which every fellow must get a little slice if he has a creek in his district. This is a bill which seeks to uproot an evil, and down at the bottom of that evil is the district attorney's office. Now, when we find in the case to which I have referred a remarkable illustration of the mischief of the present system and the necessity for correcting it—when we find a district attorney who disposes of but four cases in a year and receives $6,000, we know that he is making a large part of that $6,000 by travel at the rate of 10 cents a mile going and returning.

Now, let me say to the gentleman that his district attorney will be just as well off under this bill in its present form (I am speaking from experience) as under the law as it stands to-day. Under the existing law he is forced to live in his gripsack—to travel constantly from one end of the district to the other in order to earn the $6,000. Under this bill as it stands he will receive his $3,500; and he will not need to go outside of his office, except in a case where he knows that as an attorney representing the United States his duties require him to go; and when he does so the United States Government pays every dollar that it costs him to travel and allows him $4 a day for his subsistence; so that he is not out one penny. Now, that man to-day does not earn by legitmate services in court $2,000; and the returns of the Attorney-General show it.

Mr. HARTMAN. But my question is whether a salary of $3,500 for a district attorney in Montana is equitable as compared, for instance, with the salary allowed to the district attorney of the northern district of California, whose net earnings under the present system are only $1,947.17, as against $5,800 earned by the district attorney in Montana.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The northern district of California is another of the cases in which there are double fees.

Mr. HARTMAN. Yes, sir; so in that respect the two districts are on a par.

Mr. CONNOLLY. In the northern district of California there were 105 cases pending on the 1st of July, 1895; there were terminated during the year 6 cases. The total number of cases disposed of during the year was 23. Thus there are 23 cases disposed of in the northern district of California as against 4 in the district of Montana. Under the present system the district attorney for the northern district of California, disposing of 23 cases in the course of a year, would, if he received in each case the maximum of $50, earn $1,150 as against $200 earned by the district attorney in Montana. The gentleman will find that the committee has not acted in this matter with its eyes closed.

Now, a word in reply to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER]. I feel some little interest in New Jersey, because that is my native State, and I do not want to see her unjustly treated. During the last year the district attorney of New Jersey disposed of 21 cases. Now, if that district attorney had received the full maximum of $50 for each jury trial terminated in the court you can easily see what he would have earned—just $1,050.

Mr. GARDNER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: What does the clause, as he uses it, "disposed of," in this column to which he has been referring, mean?

Mr. CONNOLLY. It means civil and criminal cases disposed of finally in the court.

Mr. GARDNER. Disposed of how?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why, in whatever way the case may be disposed of. The cases are tried; some of them disposed of in one way and some in another. In some cases there is a trial and conviction, and in some cases there is acquittal, but I give him credit for all the cases that have been disposed of in the court.

Mr. GARDNER. Does that include compromises made by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly, if it was a case pending in the court. It includes all cases of such kind.

Mr. GARDNER. But not cases of investigation by the Department not before the court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Not in those cases where it was limited to investigations by the Internal Revenue Department. I speak now of the business in the court exclusively.

Mr. GARDNER. But that represents but a very small part of the business done within a populous maritime district.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But all he can get his fees for are the cases that are disposed of in the court. That is all that he can get under the law now. He can get his pay for those and for no others. If there are cases pending in the Internal Revenue Bureau requiring information from the district attorney, but do not go into court, he may be called upon to furnish information, but he is not entitled to fees in those cases.

Mr. GARDNER. What does the column in the Attorney-General's letter that fixes the salary at $2,254.40 mean?

Mr. CONNOLLY. It means over and above all he earned as a lawyer in the court. It means what he earned as a traveling man on the railroad——

Mr. GARDNER. Now you know that New Jersey is not a broad, expansive State or Territory, and there is not much opportunity for travel there.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; but an industrious traveler can get in a good deal of mileage during the year in that State. [Laughter]. If he has nothing else to do he can take his gripsack and travel.

Mr. GARDNER. That is all very well to talk about and make humorous remarks upon. Such remarks are funny, but they have little bearing upon the general question.

Now, if the gentleman will permit me, leave the present district attorney out of the question altogether—and I have stated already that last year was an exceptional year in New Jersey—and take the man who preceded the last one, Mr. White, an able lawyer and an honorable gentleman. He will come before the House if it be desired and make an affidavit that the business as prosecuting attorney in the State of New Jersey consumed his time to such an extent that his entire practice left him during the four years he held the office.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have no doubt that it is true. That is largely the experience of every district attorney unless he has civil business before the court in which he is district attorney. He can not attend to outside matters in other courts. His business will leave him under such circumstances necessarily. He can not attend to local business in the State courts and at the same time attend to the business as district attorney in the United States courts.

Mr. GARDNER. Well, if the district attorney can not perform the duties of the court without sacrificing his own practice, do you mean to salary him according to some system of fees which you see fit to allow him for the business he transacts in the court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I think the committee have fixed the salaries now, not taking into consideration all of the elements which go to make up the salary in the district; that is, the cost of living, the value of professional services, and matters of that kind, but on the basis chiefly of the business done. That is the principal criterion on which to base such salary. A man does not have to be a district attorney if the salary is too small for him, but there are large numbers of men, young, active, intelligent, growing practitioners of skill and ambition, who would like to have these positions. It is a stepping-stone to them. It gives them a better standing, introduces them to the profession, acquaints them with the transaction of business and the business in the court, and gets practice for them in those courts that they had not practiced in before. In my judgment it is a step for a young lawyer which is much better, even, than making him a judge.

Mr. GARDNER. Let me ask the gentleman this question with all seriousness: Take an old district in the East, an admiralty district, and do you solemnly make the proposition here that a young lawyer is calculated to go there and take care of the interests of the Government in the variety of questions that arise, and intelligently deal with the important business that ordinarily a young practitioner never aspires to touch?

Mr. CONNOLLY. My dear sir, what has the United States to do with your admiralty business that you speak of? That is private business, a contention between private suitors, with which the United States has nothing to do. Besides that, admiralty business is simply an overgrown justice-of-the-peace business, anyhow. It does not take much of a lawyer to run an ordinary admiralty business.

Mr. GARDNER. Well, take your revenue business.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The internal-revenue cases, after you get the run of them, are as easily disposed of as cases before a justice of the peace.

Mr. GARDNER. How about your customs cases?

Mr. CONNOLLY. New Jersey had very little of that. New Jersey had only two customs cases disposed of last year. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER. Very well; suppose she did. That is all very well to laugh about, but——

Mr. CONNOLLY. I can not help the laughing. I simply mention the fact.

Mr. GARDNER. These gentlemen all think this is very funny. Suppose there were but two cases. Suppose there had been only one. Do you want the Government represented in that one by an inexperienced youth?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, no; and there is no danger of inexperienced youths being appointed district attorneys anywhere in the United States. Now, as a rule, while the very best lawyers may not always be selected, or very often selected, because the best lawyers could not afford to take the position, having won their spurs in the courts and their time being worth more, yet there is many a young man who is practicing in the State courts, and has been for fifteen years, to whom it furnishes an opening to make him district attorney and carry him into the Federal courts, opening up an entirely new field to him. And if he is competent he can very soon win for himself a practice in the United States courts which, added to what he makes as district attorney, will make him a very handsome compensation, and will lay the foundation for a permanent practice for him in the Federal courts.

Mr. GARDNER. If the object of the bill is to educate novices by making them district attorneys, then so far it is all right.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, sir, that is not the object of the bill. But the law that provides for the appointment of district attorneys does in effect educate thousands of novices, and I am one of the novices that it did take from practice in the State courts and put me into the Federal courts, where I had a chance to open for myself an entirely different and wider field of practice, so that while I may not have made anything as my earnings as district attorney, yet by being introduced to a new field of business, a much higher and more respectable one, I put myself into an independent position as a practicing lawyer. So it will be with every district attorney who is competent. He will introduce himself to a line of business valuable to him.

Now, sir, while thanking the committee for extending my time as much as you have, I have not the time to go through with these different districts. There are many of them about which I have made minutes to show what these earnings are; and to one who will sit down calmly and take his pencil and figure it out it shows that in large numbers of these districts the $6,000 maximum that has been made by marshals and district attorneys has been made by traveling on the railroad, receiving big mileage from the Government traveling on a railroad pass and paying out nothing. That is very largely so, but whether they travel on railroad passes or not, it makes no difference. When a district attorney is paid 10 cents a mile for going and 10 cents a mile for returning from a commissioner's court he is being paid too much.

We all know that. This mileage was fixed long ago, when there were no railroads, when a man had to travel on horseback and by stage, when he did not know when he would arrive at his destination. It has come down through generations, this 10 cents a mile. Why, I remember very well, in my own district, in my own State, to start from Springfield, where the courts are held, down to

Cairo, the extreme southern point of the State, and try a case before the commissioner, I could do it inside of twenty-four hours, and my fees would be $48.50 at this rate of 10 cents a mile going and 10 cents returning. I would travel ordinarily on a railroad pass, so that it was all fat, every bit of it. [Laughter.]

Now, that is the condition in which almost every district attorney is. When you remember that the district attorney is the fountain head from which this mischief springs, that he is the man who holds in his hands the power to say whether a prosecution shall be commenced or not, you see that we obviate all this mischief when we put him on a salary. And while we are doing that we can also put the marshal upon a salary just as well.

No mischief can come from these fees paid to field deputies, because no field deputy can have a writ in his hands unless the district attorney authorizes that writ. When the motive is taken away from the district attorney to authorize unnecessary writs, the field deputies will have no unnecessary writs to serve, and my prediction is that this bill, if passed as it is, will save a million dollars to the United States the very first year it is passed. How? Not in salaries of commissioners, not in salaries of marshals, not in salaries of district attorneys or deputy marshals, but in the saving of witness fees and jurors' fees all over the United States.

Why, look, if I have before me the witness fees. Here are the witness fees, for instance. Three-fourths at least of these will be abolished by the passage of this bill. Take, for instance, the northern district of Alabama. There was paid last year to witnesses alone $67,500; in the middle district, $44,000; in the southern district, $26,000; $138,000 paid to the witnesses alone for the three districts of Alabama. In the northern district of Florida, $20,500; in the northern district of Georgia, $38,200; in the southern district of Georgia, $22,500; in the southern district of Iowa, $42,599; in the district of Kentucky, $54,200; in the district of Minnesota, $24,500; in the northern district of New York, $40,800; in the western district of North Carolina, up among the mountains, $40,000 for witness fees. In the district of South Carolina, $50,500; in the western district of Virginia, $55,000; in the district of West Virginia, $53,700.

Now, sir, pass this bill as it stands and you cut off a large part of these expenditures for witnesses. There are witness fees before commissioners; then these witnesses are recognized to the next term of the district court. They go there and hang around the grand jury; then they get their mileage; then they wait until the case is called for trial; so that in each one of these cases, which may finally result in a fine of a dollar, the great mountain of the United States laboring brings forth a mouse.

Mr. STEELE. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I inquire what these cases in Iowa were out of which the witness fees grew to be $42,000? That is a prohibition State.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It does not follow that they were cases at all because they have such large witness fees.

Mr. LACEY. They were "boot leggers" and tobacco cases.

Mr. CONNOLLY. In the northern district of Iowa there were 17 cases pending, and in the southern district there were 221 cases pending—is that Brother LACEY's district?

Mr. LACEY. I did not catch the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. CONNOLLY. There were 221 cases pending on the 1st day of July. Now, they disposed of a total of 19 cases during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and after disposing of those cases they had $42,599 in witness fees. Now, gentlemen, there is where this mischief is. It is in the multiplied expenses of witnesses.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will permit me, for those 19 cases the witness fees are disproportionate. Now, how will a reduction in the salary of the officer cut off this?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Right here. The district attorney was compelled to have these cases instituted in order to make his $6,000 minimum.

Mr. GARDNER. Is that in the line of the remark made about a minute ago with reference to this great Government, where the fine was probably not more than a dollar, and that the mountain had labored and brought forth a small thing, and——

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Of another member who spoke, giving the number of frivolous prosecutions? Is it the idea of the committee, is that the basis of the bill, that there should not be a prosecution and conviction for crime unless the crime should be something for which the court would inflict the extreme penalty?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; that is not my idea at all. I think that every right-minded district attorney will, whenever a case which contains a substantial violation of the law is presented to him, see it to be his duty as a lawyer and as a public official to prosecute that case.

Mr. GARDNER. The point is this, that out of these 19 cases that cost so much that there were some proportion of them that ought not to have been instituted.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, well, I can not say that, because gentlemen must not understand that because the record shows a certain number of acquittals and a certain number of nol-prosses that therefore these cases should not have been commenced. That does not follow at all.

Mr. LACEY. A great number of the cases were cases in which the fines and penalties were suspended.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, yes, some; but the record shows a number of convictions.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not want to consume the gentleman's time. I want to get the idea clear. I understand that the record shows that cases are trumped up and that there are prosecutions instituted wrongfully for the purpose of making fees, and as a result there is an enormous fee bill; but then when we come to see the number of cases that are responsible for this enormous fee bill, there are but 19 of them which have been tried.

Mr. LACEY. These are the cases that went into the higher courts. These pernicious cases, of which complaint is made, are those which are tried before the United States commissioners.

Mr. CONNOLLY. In Iowa and Montana, and many States where the distances are magnificent, the witnesses get a great deal for mileage. There is 5 cents going to the commissioner's court and 5 cents returning from the commissioner's court, and many of these witnesses get not only the $1.50 for actual attendance, but 10 cents a mile for travel, which will sometimes give them from $20 to $50.

Mr. STEELE. And sometimes there are two or three men paid as guards.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, that is necessary. That is on a different basis. They are the deputies of the United States marshal who guard the prisoners. The old system used to be that they would have a guard for every prisoner. They would have a deputy marshal in charge, and then a guard for the prisoner, although the fellow might only have been accused of using a postage stamp twice. [Laughter.] But the accounting officers of the Treasury several years ago "caught on" to that and refused to allow for guards except where the marshal's report showed an actual necessity for guards. That, however, does not affect this question. There can not be any guards required, and in many cases there will not be any prisoner if the district attorney is not obliged to make a prisoner in order to make a fee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not true that most of these witness fees arise from the fact that the witnesses who are summoned before commissioners are again summoned before the grand jury upon commitments made by the commissioners?

Mr. CONNOLLY. There can be no question about that. I observed that the gentleman [Mr. UNDERWOOD] spoke to-day about the necessity of putting the commissioners on a salary, and I will say now for his benefit that if this bill becomes a law the commissioners will have their teeth pulled. They can not do anything until the district attorney authorizes it, and if you take away from him the temptation to authorize unnecessary prosecutions in order to make his fees the commissioner's occupation will be like Othello's—gone. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the bill that we are now considering, is it not a fact that the commissioner still receives a fee for summoning witnesses?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the bill does not limit the number of witnesses that he shall summon?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No. But I will tell you who does limit it. The district attorney limits it. He is the man at the bottom of all this business. The commissioner to-day can not issue a warrant in any case unless it is approved by the district attorney; but now the district attorney will approve it because it is necessary in his business that he shall approve it and make the fees that will result to him. It will be worth probably $25 to the district attorney to have that writ issue, and so it is issued.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the writ can issue now it must receive the approval of the district attorney, but after it issues the commissioner can summon as many witnesses as he sees fit, without any supervision.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, that is a mistake, because the district attorney instructs the commissioner as to the witnesses he wants summoned. Like any other prosecuting officer, if he understands his business, he notifies the court or the commissioner of the men he wants. He says, "I want A B, C D, and E F subpœnaed as witnesses." He does not leave it to the court to say who shall be subpœnaed, but says: "Subpœna these men, A B and C D; I need them." That is how the commissioner is placed now. It all comes back, therefore, to the door of the district attorney.

Now, I want to give the district attorney a fair and honorable compensation. If the amount is made too small in any of these cases it ought to be increased; and I think it is too low in some instances. I disagreed with my colleagues on the committee in quite a number of instances, as did my friend Judge BURTON, holding that they were reducing to the point of parsimony. That,

I say, is not right. Anybody can be a United States marshal, but anybody can not be a United States district attorney. It requires years of study and of experience, it requires special qualifications, and I am not here to say that a district attorney, or a lawyer in any position, should be forced to accept the same compensation that would suffice for a man who has not been required to qualify himself for his profession by years of study and special training.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not true that the witnesses are in very many cases instruments who were employed originally in working up the case?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is true in very many instances.

Mr. PERKINS. And that those men never would appear as witnesses if they had not first been employed in working up the case?

Mr. CONNOLLY. My dear sir, anybody who has had experience with the criminal law knows that a large part of the criminal business in this country, both in State and Federal courts, grows out of the malicious feelings that A entertains against B. A knows of something that B has done, and, to gratify his own feelings of malice, he goes and reports it to the prosecuting officer.

Mr. PERKINS. Not only that, but it is the practice to employ these men in many districts to work up cases, they to receive their compensation in witness fees.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is true, sir, but my theory about this is, and I know I am right, that the moment you take away from the district attorney the inducement to listen to that kind of a man that moment the man's occupation is gone. The district attorney says to him, "I can not listen to you. My salary is so much; it will not add one penny to it for me to commence a little prosecution such as you desire, and I will not do it."

Mr. PERKINS. I entirely agree with the gentleman, and when you bring in the marshal also, then the incentive is almost entirely gone.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] asks me to read this newspaper paragraph, which he says will be an answer to the gentleman:

In the Ozark Mountains of Missouri there is still a good deal of timber land remaining unsold by the Government, and there are some trees growing on it that are fit for nothing but firewood. A statute exists making the cutting of such trees a misdemeanor. Times are hard and money scarce in that country, so one man stands as a sort of sacrificial victim, cuts down a tree, is informed upon, and several neighbors are summoned as witnesses, there always being some question as to the man's guilt. He is bound over by a United States commissioner, and his neighbors all appear there, before the grand jury, and on the trial as witnesses, their fees and mileage being equally divided among themselves and the family of the victim. If convicted he serves out his term, his neighbors all assisting in doing the necessary work about his farm at home. The Government has expended hundreds of dollars to convict the man for cutting down a 50-cent tree, the accused has received his share of the amount, and everyone is satisfied.

[Laughter.]

And in addition, the district attorney has received his $50.

Now let me state another illustration showing how I know that the responsibility in this matter lies at the door of the district attorneys. On one occasion I was in a United States district court—I will not say where it was. I saw five men brought to the bar. The district attorney called the case of John Smith and asked to have a jury impaneled. Twelve men were brought in. The district attorney said he would accept them, and John Smith—he was not represented by any attorney—said he also would take them. The district attorney gets up and says to the jury: "Gentlemen, this man is indicted for retailing liquor without paying the special tax; he says he is guilty; stand up, John Smith; what do you say to the jury"? The prisoner replies, "I am guilty." "Well," says the judge to the jury, "you can render a verdict where you are, gentlemen." Thereupon the jury returns a verdict of guilty, and judgment is entered. Then the district attorney says: "I call up next the case of William Jones; let the jury be sworn to try his case." The same formality is gone through with, and in that way the whole five cases are disposed of.

Now, if the district attorney had allowed those five men to come into court and do what they wanted to—plead guilty—he would have received a fee of $10 in each case; but by the peculiar system which he adopted, regardless of his duty to the United States, he received in each case a $20 conviction fee as for trial by jury, and an additional $30 conviction fee allowed by the court, making $50 in each case, or $250 in the aggregate paid by the United States, when he should have received but $50. Why did the district attorney adopt that course? It was necessary in order that he might bring up his salary to the maximum allowed by law. If the maximum had already been attained for that year he would not have done it.

Now, I know that all district attorneys do not act that way. I confess that I was a good deal surprised at that method of procedure. I learned a new trick when I saw that thing done. [Laughter.] I had been a district attorney myself a good many years.

A MEMBER. Did you do that way? [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; I never did. If I had done so, I should have felt that I was stealing money from the United States. I think that when a man has enjoyed the confidence of the United States Government to such an extent that it has made him its attorney in a certain district, he ought to remember his obligations as a lawyer so strongly as to refuse to do anything of that kind.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yet they do it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, they do it. Now, then, some of us pray, "Lead us not into temptation." I beg of you, gentlemen, to stand by this bill and not lead the district attorneys who may be appointed in the future into the same temptations that their predecessors have been lead into.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I ask unanimous consent that those gentlemen who have made remarks on this bill, or who may do so, have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this a request for the privilege of extending remarks or for a general leave to print?

The SPEAKER. Both, as the Chair understands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I object to the request for general leave to print. I do not object to granting leave that any gentleman who has actually spoken may extend his remarks.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It is only to those who have spoken that my request applies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the House concurrent resolutions relating to affairs in Cuba.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. Res. 65) to authorize Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, to accept medals from the British Government; when the Speaker signed the same.

RECORD OF A VOTE.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to be recorded in the negative on the question of the Cuban resolution which was before the House on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has some doubt as to whether that can be done if the gentleman was not present at the time the roll was called.

Mr. DALZELL. The rules expressly provide that the Speaker can not entertain a request to record a vote. I make no objection, of course, but only call attention to the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request of the gentleman under the rule.

RETURN OF A FLAG.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution No. 24 be taken from the Speaker's table and be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to return to the State of New Hampshire the regimental flag of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

USE OF UNITED STATES BUILDING, JEFFERSON CITY, MO.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back to the House Senate joint resolution No. 85, granting to the county of Cole, in Missouri, permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo. The committee recommends that the resolution pass.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STAHLE, indefinitely.

To Mr. CROWLEY, for one week.

To Mr. JOY, for one day.

To Mr. VAN HORN, for ten days.

And then the motion of Mr. DALZELL was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a bill to be entitled "An act to amend the ninth section of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations," etc., approved March 3, 1885—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with the papers in the cases, a list of claims under act of July 4, 1864, allowed, etc., by the proper accounting officers since January 23, 1895, etc.—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney-General submitting for an appropriation the account of the Bancroft Company, of San Francisco—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CORLISS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5366) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near Point Gorda, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 587); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 853) providing for the erection of a light-house at Orient Point, Long Island, New York, and for the proper lighting of the entrances to Greenport and Sag Harbor and the west shore of Shelter Island, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 588); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6192) to provide for additional fog bells at Iona Island and Fort Washington, upon the Hudson River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 589); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4797) to provide compensation to the reporter of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 590); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 270) to detach certain counties from the judicial districts of California, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 605); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PHILLIPS, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 47) relating to the Federal census, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 606); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 85) granting the county of Cole, Mo., permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 614); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5710) granting a pension to Eleanor L. Curtiss. (Report No. 598.)

The bill (H. R. 6483) granting increase of pension to Thomas D. Walker. (Report No. 599.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 1924) granting a pension to Carrie L. Yeaton. (Report No. 600.)

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 1820) granting a pension to Neil McNeil. (Report No. 601.)

By Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 3496) for relief of Oliver Dodge, and to place him on the pension roll. (Report No. 602.)

By Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson. (Report No. 603.)

The bill (H. R. 1894) granting a pension to Sophia D. Clendenin. (Report No. 604.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley. (Report No. 607.)

By Mr. CROWTHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater. (Report No. 608.)

By Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 466) granting an increase of pension to William Brown. (Report No. 609.)

By Mr. CROWTHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman. (Report No. 610.)

By Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 739) granting an increase of pension to C. E. Philbrook, widow of Alvah Philbrook, major of Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers. (Report No. 611.)

By Mr. BAKER of Kansas, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 246) granting a pension to Nancy Carson Blunt. (Report No. 612.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 6111) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Sargent. (Report No. 613.)

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. AVERY, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted an adverse report (No. 582) on the bill (H. R. 5717) for the relief of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass.; and the same was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN of Utah: A bill (H. R. 6780) to amend section 2335 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. TRACEY: A bill (H. R. 6781) to extend the national boulevard at Springfield, Mo.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 6782) to amend the internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 6783) providing a general per diem pension for all honorably discharged soldiers, etc.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEWART of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 6784) to appropriate the sum of $30,000 to complete the construction of a public building in Paterson, N. J., in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. COBB of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 6785) providing for the sale of real estate for the nonpayment of taxes in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ATWOOD: A bill (H. R. 6786) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate four condemned cannon to Paul Revere Post, No. 88, Grand Army of the Republic, Quincy, Mass.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KEM: A bill (H. R. 6787) to provide for the transfer of the Fort Sidney Military Post Reserve to the State of Nebraska for educational purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KIEFER (by request): A bill (H. R. 6788) to appropriate $51,686 out of the moneys of the District of Columbia in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Prospect Hill Cemetery for lands condemned, etc.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 6790) to amend section 3 of the act of June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents"—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6791) for the erection of a monument to the memory of the women who during the rebellion attended and nursed the sick and dying soldiers of the United States—to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of John W. Genung, of Petersburg, Nebr., praying that he be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Minden, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation reducing the rate of letter postage to 1 cent per half ounce; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented two petitions of delegates of the Sioux Indian Reservation at Pine Ridge, S. Dak., praying that they be allowed to select a chief herder for their reservation; that the system of licensing traders be abolished, and that no traders be allowed on the reservation except the Indians or those legally incorporated in their tribe; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rheatown,

Tenn., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHITE presented a petition of Atlanta Post, No. 92, Department of California and Nevada, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the enactment of legislation in the interest of veteran soldiers of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oakland, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for the dredging of the deep-water channel from that city to the Bay of San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Los Angeles County, Cal., praying for recognition of the rights of miners and others in the United States forest reservation known as the San Gabriel Canyon; which was referred to the Select Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. VILAS presented a petition of the Congregational Church of Fond du Lac, Wis., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of H. R. Wise and 68 other citizens of Oconto, Wis., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all power and civil authority; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of Samuel Arnold and sundry other citizens of Newcastle, Ind., praying for the passage of House bill No. 306, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who were confined in so-called Confederate prisons; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of C. A. Highfield and 70 other citizens of Dekalb County, Ill., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SQUIRE presented a petition of the board of regents of the University of Washington, at Seattle, and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma, Wash., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1214, to appropriate funds for the investigation and tests of American timber; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Mossy Rock, Wash., remonstrating against the appropriation of public moneys for sectarian purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of L. C. Ladd Post, No. 17, Department of Washington and Alaska, Grand Army of the Republic, of Puyallup, Wash., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Port Angeles, Wash., praying that certain lots in the town site of Port Angeles be granted for public purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KYLE presented the memorial of B. O. Flowers, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing military training in the public schools of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mount Vernon, S. Dak., praying for the establishment of a board of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. SHERMAN. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back the resolution of the Senate, as amended by the House of Representatives, relative to the recognition of belligerency in Cuba. There is some little difference between the two Houses, and I move that the Senate insist upon its proposition and ask for a committee of conference, which I think will be the speediest way to bring about an agreement.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. LODGE were appointed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the following memorials, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to:

Memorial of the National Board of Trade, praying for the establishment of reciprocal trade relations, especially with Canada, Mexico, and the States of Central and South America; and Memorial of the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, Tenn., praying that the act of Congress entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with carriage of property" be so amended as to afford proper protection to shippers of produce or merchandise from American ports against damage from negligence of shipmasters or other employees of vessels engaged in transportation thereof.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the Select Committee on International Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1306) to authorize and encourage the holding of a transmississippi exposition at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, in the year 1898, and making appropriation therefor, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar and the report printed.

Mr. VEST. I wish to make a single remark. It is proper for me to state as a member of the committee reporting the bill that I agreed that the bill should be reported to the Senate with the understanding that I was not committed to its support.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. The report will be printed under the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 711) to increase the pension of Uzziel B. Church, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 856) granting a pension to Philip T. Greely, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1975) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Jones Duncan, widow of Byt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Duncan, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in the county of Aitkin, State of Minnesota, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1117) granting a pension to Cornelia De Peyster Black, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

PROTECTION OF FUR SEALS.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 262) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon. This House bill is the same as the one just now indefinitely postponed.

I desire to ask a unanimous-consent agreement, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I have just reported the Alaska fur-seal bill. The Senator desires to submit a minority report, I understand.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to submit a minority report. I do not know how many members of the committee will sign it. Perhaps it is proper to say that the bill was passed by a bare majority of the committee. I will be able to present the views of the minority in a day or two. Of course I do not want action taken upon the bill until after that is done.

Mr. FRYE. That is why I called the attention of the Senator to it. I wish to ask a unanimous-consent agreement. If the bill should become a law, to be of any earthly use it ought to become a law within the next twenty days, and as it is a bill of considerable importance, I ask unanimous consent that it may be made a special order for a week from Monday next, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I desire to make an inquiry. Has the report of the majority of the committee been filed?

Mr. FRYE. The majority report has been filed.

Mr. WHITE. Is the majority report printed?

Mr. FRYE. The majority report is practically the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on the part of the House.

Mr. BERRY. I will state to the Senator from Maine that a week from next Monday is the 16th of March, and a special order has already been made for that day.

Mr. FRYE. That makes no difference. This would not supersede that under the rule.

Mr. BERRY. Why not put it down for the 17th? We can get through with the other bill, I think, on the 16th, and then there would be no question about which measure should take precedence.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to put it down for Thursday of next week.

Mr. MORGAN. I am prepared for it on my part whenever the bill is called up.

Mr. FRYE. I will ask that the bill be made the special order for Thursday of next week. Under the rules that does not interfere with any unfinished business.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I wish to give him some information that I think will convince him that hasty action upon the bill is not necessary even if it is proper. I hold in my hand the report on the fur-seal fisheries of 1895, made by the scientist on board of the steamer Albatross, who has visited those islands annually, I think, without exception, unless it may be one year, for the last ten years, and who is thoroughly familiar with all of the situation in Alaska and in those islands. His report, which is now in the hands of the printer, has been laid before the Senate. I happen to have the original report in my hand at the moment. He says:

> At a meeting of Canadian sealers recently held at Victoria it was decided that but one cruise be made during the year 1896, that to be in Bering Sea. The northwest coast catch for the spring of 1895 proved unprofitable, but one vessel having made expenses, while the catch in Japanese and Russian waters was made barely remunerative by reason of an advance in the price of seal skins. This action on the part of the sealers is clearly the result of diminished catches. It is now evident to all persons interested in the pelagic sealing industry that further profit can not be expected from sealing in the North Pacific.

I merely wanted to refer the Senator to that statement of our own commissioner, who has made a very elaborate and a very accurate and scientific report on the subject, to show him that the Canadian sealers have met and agreed that they will not conduct any sealing operations in the North Pacific during this season, but that they will concentrate all their energies upon Bering Sea when the seals appear there in the months of August and September, and that there is no occasion for hasty action.

Mr. FRYE. Either that or else they have succeeded in cheating this somewhat innocent agent of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. No; the Senator will find when he examines the report that they could not have cheated this man. He visited over a hundred of the sealing vessels.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be assigned as a special order for Thursday next at 2 o'clock, simply stating that under the rules it does not interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. And not, of course, to interfere with appropriation bills?

Mr. FRYE. No; never.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAFFERY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2382) for the relief of Jacob A. Wolfson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2383) to provide a life-saving station at or near Hampton, in the State of New Hampshire; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2384) for the relief of David O. Burleigh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 2385) to amend the patent laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 2386) granting a pension to Mary Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2387) granting a pension to Margaret J. Verbiskey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2388) for the relief of E. F. Korns, late postmaster at Phillipsburg, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 2389) granting to the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, suburban lot No. 26 in the town site of Port Angeles, in said county, to be used for public purposes, and granting to the city of Port Angeles, in said county, block No. 32 in said town site, to be used by said city for public purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 2390) granting a pension to Itewayaka, or "One-armed Jim"; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2391) to amend section 2981 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of June 10, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the amendment proposing to appropriate for the Naval War Records the full amount estimated for by the Department. I move that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also submit some memoranda prepared on my request upon the subject, which I move be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. CANNON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

> Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate for what reason the nonagricultural and unallotted lands of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation have not been restored to the public domain and proclaimed open to entry and location as prescribed by sections 20 and 21 of the act of Congress approved August 15, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department," etc., and, further, to inform the Senate when, in his judgment, said lands will be so opened to entry and location.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR COLQUITT.

Mr. GORDON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, be printed, as required by law.

SALARY ACCOUNTS OF SENATORS.

Mr. WOLCOTT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to investigate and report to what extent, if any, the salary accounts of any members of the Senate should be credited with amounts which have accumulated during former vacancies in this body.

BOND REDEMPTION AND BIMETALLISM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolutions submitted yesterday by Mr. ALLEN, as follows:

> Resolved, That under existing laws all bonds and legal-tender notes are redeemable in gold and silver coins of the United States of the present ratio and fineness, and that any discrimination between such coins is in violation of the statutes of the United States and the traditions of the Government.
> Resolved, That bimetallism means the unlimited coinage, at a ratio fixed by law, of both gold and silver into money of full debt-paying power and upon terms of exact equality, at the mints of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a question of such a broad, wide-reaching character that unless some one wishes to speak to the resolutions I will move to refer them to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN. I prefer to have the resolutions go over without objection, so that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] may be here when they are discussed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. I wish to enter my motion to refer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered, and, without objection, the resolutions will go over.

RESTRICTION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BUTLER. I gave notice that on March 11 I would call up Senate bill 1341, but I see that in the notice printed on the Calendar of Business it is stated that I would then call it up and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance. That is a mistake, and I ask that the correction be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The correction indicated by the Senator from North Carolina will be made.

Mr. BUTLER. My notice was that on Wednesday, March 11, after the routine morning business, I would call up Senate bill 1341.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar will be made to conform to the notice as now stated by the Senator from North Carolina.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. HALE. I do not know what the purpose of the Senator from Oregon is about calling up any other matter, but I wanted to renew the proposition under which we proceeded to consider the Calendar day before yesterday, that we take up the Calendar at the place where it was left that day and proceed under the five-minute rule to consider unobjected cases, so that we may make progress as we did the other day. I make that proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state to the Senator from Maine that on Friday last I gave notice that this morning at the conclusion of the morning business I should ask the Senate to take up the privileged question relative to the claim of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware.

Mr. HALE. Of course that is privileged, if the Senator proposes to go on before 2 o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to go on at once this morning.

Mr. HALE. Then, of course, I will not make my proposition. I thought the Senator intended to wait until 2 o'clock. I do not seek to interfere with him.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the morning business is concluded, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the privileged question relating to the claim of Henry A. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution called up by the Senator from Oregon.

The resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon on the 18th ultimo from the Committee on Privileges and Elections was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I yield for a moment to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

PROOF OF DEATH IN PENSION CASES.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oregon has courteously yielded to me to ask consideration for a bill that has passed the House of Representatives, and which is being pressed for consideration here. If it develops any discussion whatever, I do not propose to urge it. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 162) regulating proof of death in certain pension cases.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I yield on condition that it will not lead to any debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; that is understood.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in considering claims filed under the pension laws the death of an enlisted man or officer shall be considered as sufficiently proved if satisfactory evidence is produced establishing the fact of the continued and unexplained absence of such enlisted man or officer from his home and family for a period of seven years, during which period no intelligence of his existence shall have been received. And any pension granted under this proviso shall cease upon proof that such officer or enlisted man is still living.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 10 I move to strike out the word "proviso" and insert the word "act." That was a mistake in drafting the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will explain the bill to some extent, or state how much it involves.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not involve anything, except that it relieves the Committee on Pensions from the consideration of certain private bills. I will read briefly from the report made in the House of Representatives:

> In the administration of the pension laws there seems to have been a lack of uniformity in the decisions upon the question of what evidence is required to prove the fact of death of the person through whom the title to pension obtains. In some cases the common-law presumption of death after an absence of seven years has been recognized, while in other cases this presumption has been substantially ignored.
> In the comparatively recent case of Melinda L. Crider, the Secretary of the Interior laid down the following rule:
> "Independent of absence for any period of time, it must be held in pension cases that the facts attending the absence must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the party is dead."

I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I have on my desk now in the Committee on Pensions a case where the soldier has not been heard from for thirty-four years, and yet a pension is not allowable. The bill will simply clear the docket of that class of cases and do no harm to anybody.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another case reported in which the husband really has been dead thirty years, and yet the wife and friends, having been led to think him absent, can not prove the fact of his death.

Mr. GALLINGER. And there is one other case, I will say to the Senator, where intelligence came to the wife that the husband's life was lost by the blowing up of a boiler, and his trunk with his clothes was sent to her, and yet the Pension Office will not accept it as proof. The bill simply establishes the common-law presumption of death.

Mr. BAKER. I think the bill ought to be amended, and I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as an additional section:

> SEC. 2. That the physical examination and enlistment of the soldier by the Government of the United States shall be prima facie evidence of the soundness of health of said soldier at the time of said enlistment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from Kansas will not press that matter. We will try to take care of it in some other bill. This is a bill which has passed the House of Representatives, and it can become a law very readily if it is not encumbered by other propositions. I hope the Senator will not press the amendment, and, as I have stated, we will try later on to take care of the subject which this amendment covers.

Mr. PALMER. I simply wish to repeat the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] not to press the amendment. The only purpose of the pending bill is to establish the common-law rule in regard to the presumption of death—death inferred from long and continued absence. I can see no reason why this rule should not be adopted in pension cases, as it is a just and proper rule. I trust, however, as the amendment relates to an altogether different subject, that this bill, so simple, so necessary, and so useful, will not be encumbered by an amendment which will probably lead to serious discussion.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, several members of the House of Representatives have mentioned to me the fact that this bill ought to be amended, and that, if they had thought of it at the time the bill was pending in the House, they would have proposed this identical amendment. We have more trouble in pension cases in reference to the presumption in regard to death than as to anything else. As the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, however, thinks the committee can report a bill which will take care of this subject, I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. We will try to take care of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN O'KEANE.

Mr. SQUIRE. By permission of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] who is entitled to the floor, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the Senate on Monday last passed the bill (S. 167) for the relief of John O'Keane, of the State of Washington. There is either a clerical error or a printer's error in the bill as passed; at any rate it is an error, and should be corrected. I have the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the case, and the chairman of the committee is fully aware of the mistake, and desires to have it corrected. The bill proposes to pay John O'Keane, of the State of Washington, the sum of $25 as salary due him for services as a farmer in charge of the Tulalip Indian Agency, Washington Territory. By an error, as I understand, the amount is stated in the bill at $25, whereas it should have been $125. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed may be reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. SQUIRE. Now, I move to amend the bill by striking out "25" and inserting "125"; so as to make the amount $125.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 636) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak.;

A joint resolution (S. R. 24) for the return to the State of New Hampshire of the flag of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 85) granting the county of Cole, Mo., permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A joint resolution (S. R. 65) to print the annual report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 65) to authorize Lieut. Sidney S. Jordan, Fifth United States Artillery, and Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army, to accept medals from the British Government.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, it will doubtless be agreed by every member of the Senate, of whatever political party, that a question involving the right of a person to a seat in the Senate of the United States is one not only of the highest privilege, but of the gravest importance.

It is therefore one which under any circumstances should receive the most careful consideration of the Senate. When, however, such right is seriously disputed by any portion of a State's constituency, and especially when disputed by one of the representatives of such State in this body, holding here the high position both as lawyer and statesman which all accord to the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], then it becomes of the utmost importance that its consideration and determination be approached with the greatest possible deliberation and care, and in a judicial rather than a partisan spirit.

No consideration of party supremacy, much less of personal bias or prejudice, should be permitted to intrude as an element in solving such a proposition. It is infinitely better that a State should for a time go in part unrepresented than that a vacancy should be filled by one either not possessing the necessary qualifications or not chosen in the manner prescribed by the Constitution and the laws.

No grant of power, perhaps, within the folds of the Constitution conferred upon either House of Congress separately, or upon the Congress itself, should be guarded with more jealous care, or exercised with a greater degree of nonpartisan spirit, or with more circumspection and deliberation than that which makes each House the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

It is only by exercising this power in a spirit of judicial fairness, observing with strict accuracy, not only the facts of each particular case, but also the several grants and limitations of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, as well as of those of the State interested, that we may hope to preserve the Senate in its proper organization and integrity, and also at the same time vindicate and uphold the rights of the several States.

It is impressed with these considerations I have endeavored to consider and in my own mind reach a conclusion in this case. The Committee on Privileges and Elections having the subject in charge have unfortunately been unable to agree, and hence we have before us a report from that committee representing the majority, favoring the seating of the claimant, Mr. Du Pont, and the views of the minority in opposition to such seating.

As chairman of that committee, I was authorized to prepare and submit to the Senate its report giving the reasons for the conclusions reached by that committee, and I shall now endeavor in opening this case to convey to the Senate as fully and clearly and yet as briefly as I can, not only the precise facts involved, but also the views and arguments on which the committee bases its conclusion.

And, in the first place, I shall endeavor to state the principal facts necessary to be considered in determining the question as to the right of the claimant to a seat, provided the Senate is not estopped, as claimed by the minority of the committee, from inquiring into the right of a certain person to a seat as a member of the Delaware senate in the joint assembly for the purpose of electing a Senator, and the facts bearing upon this question of estoppel will be carefully recapitulated and considered by me later on when I come to that branch of the case.

THE DELAWARE LEGISLATURE.

The legislature of the State of Delaware consists, when each seat is filled, of thirty members. The senate consists of nine members, the house of representatives of twenty-one members. There are in the State of Delaware but three counties in all, namely: Newcastle, Kent, and Sussex. Under the Delaware constitution each of these counties elects three senators and seven representatives to the general assembly of the State, thus constituting a membership in the senate of nine and in the house of twenty-one. The senators are elected for four years and the representatives for two years. A person to be a senator must have attained to the age of 27 years, while to be a representative to 24 years.

The legislature of the State of Delaware is by the constitution of that State designated as a "general assembly," consisting of a senate and a house of representatives, and all legislative powers of the State are by such constitution vested in such general assembly.

A regular biennial session of this general assembly, each of the thirty members of which had been previously duly elected, each having the necessary qualifications, convened at Dover, the capital of the State, on the first Tuesday in January, 1895. The duty of electing a United States Senator to succeed Senator Higgins, then a Senator from the State of Delaware, and whose term was to expire March 4, 1895, devolved upon this general assembly. This general assembly was duly organized on the day it met, that is, the second Tuesday of January, 1895, by the election of William T. Watson, a senator from the county of Kent, as speaker of the senate, and the election of Henry T. McMullen, a member from the county of Newcastle, as speaker of the house of representatives.

THE JOINT ASSEMBLY OF THE MEMBERS OF THE DELAWARE LEGISLATURE.

On the second Tuesday after the organization, in accordance with the act of Congress of July 25, 1866, providing the manner of electing United States Senators, the members of the two houses met in joint assembly at 12 o'clock meridian for the purpose of electing a Senator of the United States. Two ballots were taken on that day without anyone having been chosen. On each succeeding day, except Sunday, the members of the two houses met in joint assembly and voted for United States Senator up to and including May 9, 1895, that being the last day of the session of that joint assembly. On the last day of the session, May 9, 1895, 28 separate ballots were taken in the joint assembly. On the last ballot taken there were 30 votes cast, there being in such joint assembly thirty persons, each claiming to be a member of either the senate or house of the Delaware general assembly, and each claiming the right to a seat in such joint assembly, and the right to be included and counted, and to vote therein for a United States Senator. On the last ballot four persons were voted for for United States Senator; that is to say, Henry A. Du Pont, Ed. Ridgley, J. Edward Addicks, and Ebe W. Tunnell, each of the persons present claiming to be members voting as follows, and each of the candidates receiving the following votes——

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him if it will be convenient to him to state that on the first of the twenty-eight ballots, and on all the succeeding ballots of the twenty-eight, the same persons voted and the same number of votes were cast?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That will clearly appear from my statement as I continue.

Mr. PALMER. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have before me a copy of the journal entry, which I shall now read, bearing directly upon the question suggested by the Senator from Illinois. It reads as follows:

Joint meeting proceeded to another ballot, which resulted as follows:

Mr. Alrichs, of the senate, voted for	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Fenimore	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Hanby	J. Edward Addicks.
Mr. Harrington	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Moore	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Pierce	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Pyle	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Records	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Speaker	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Ball, of the house, voted for	J. Edward Addicks.
Mr. Brown	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Burton	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Daly	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Davis	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Fleming	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Jolls	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Killen	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Money	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Moore	John Edward Addicks.
Mr. Morgan	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Mustard	Ebe W. Tunnell.
Mr. Pyle	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Reybold	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Robbins	J. Edward Addicks.
Mr. Sypherd	Edward Ridgley.
Mr. Townsend	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Walker	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Watson	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Wilson	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Speaker	H. A. Du Pont.

The vote as above ascertained having been announced, as follows:

	Votes.
H. A. Du Pont had	15
Ed. Ridgley had	10
J. Edward Addicks had	4
Ebe W. Tunnell had	1

It will be observed there were in this joint assembly and voting on this last ballot thirty persons, each claiming a right to be there and vote as a member of the general assembly of the State of Delaware. It is a fact, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], that the vote was the same on each of the other 27 ballots taken that day.

It is furthermore a fact that the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont, received but 15 votes. Consequently, if it is true that each of said thirty persons so present and voting had a right to be present and vote for a United States Senator, then the claimant, Mr. Du Pont, did not receive a majority of those present and voting, and in such event he could not be elected, as it is conceded it requires the votes of a majority of the members of the legislature, provided all who are members and who have a right to vote for Senator are present and voting. If, however, the fact is as it is contended by the committee, and by all those who favor the seating of Mr. Du Pont, that one of the thirty persons so present and voting was either not a member of the Delaware senate, or had no right to exercise the office, or any of the functions of senator, and consequently had no right to be in such joint assembly or to vote for Senator therein, then it follows there were but 29 legal votes cast on said last ballot and not 30; then there were but 29 persons in such joint assembly entitled to be there and vote and not 30, and consequently, as it is conceded the claimant, Mr. Du Pont, received 15 votes, no one of which was the vote of a person so alleged to be unlawfully present and to have voted illegally, it follows he had a majority of all the legal votes cast and was therefore duly elected.

GOVERNOR WATSON HAD NO RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE IN THE JOINT ASSEMBLY MAY 9, 1895, OR TO VOTE THEREIN FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR.

It is contended by the claimant, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections believe such contention to be well founded, that William T. Watson, one of the persons present in such joint assembly and voting for Senator, and no time voting for Mr. Du Pont, but having on each ballot voted for Ed. Ridgley, and claiming the right to be there as a senator from the county of Kent and as speaker of the Delaware senate, was on said date the governor of the State of Delaware, and therefore, for this reason, he had not on that date, May 9, 1895, any right whatever under the constitution of the State of Delaware and the law of the land to exercise the office of State senator, or any of the functions pertaining thereto, and had not, therefore, any right to be present in such joint assembly, no right to vote or be counted therein, and that his presence and voting were illegal, wholly ultra vires, and his vote absolutely void.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will permit me to ask him a question at that point, what does he mean by the law of the land as in addition to the constitution of the State of Delaware?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I mean the law relating to the election of United States Senators, the law of July 25, 1866.

THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION.

The constitution of the State of Delaware, section 14, Article III, provides, among other things, as follows:

SEC. 14. Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If the person elected governor shall die, or become disqualified before the commencement of his term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, the person holding the office shall continue to exercise it until a governor shall be elected and duly qualified. If, upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor, there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution, the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly, who shall immediately proceed to elect, by joint ballot of both houses, a person to exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If a vacancy occur in the office of governor, or if the governor-elect die, or become disqualified before the commencement of his term, or refuse to take the office, an election for governor shall be held at the next general election, unless the vacancy happen within six days next preceding the election, exclusive of the day of the happening of the vacancy and the day of the election; in that case, if an election for governor would not have been held at said election without the happening of such vacancy, no election for governor shall be held at said election in consequence of such vacancy. If the trial of a contested election shall continue longer than until the third Tuesday of January next ensuing the election of a governor, the governor of the last year, or the speaker of the senate or of the house of representatives, who may then be in the exercise of the executive authority, shall continue therein until a determination of such contested election.

Mr. PLATT. What section of the constitution does the Senator read?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Section 14, Article III. This section furthermore states:

The governor shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature.

WHAT ARE THE CONCEDED FACTS INVOLVED IN THIS CASE?

Before proceeding to discuss the foregoing and the several other provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware, it is well to inquire precisely what facts are conceded by all parties to this controversy. The following facts I believe are admitted, substantially at least, by those opposing the admission of Mr. Du Pont, including the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

First. That William T. Watson, a duly elected and qualified senator from the county of Kent, was, on the first Tuesday of January, 1895, duly chosen speaker of the Delaware senate, entered upon his duties as such speaker on that date, and continued to serve as such until April 9, 1895.

Second. That on April 8, 1895, Joshua H. Marvil, then governor of the State of Delaware, died, thus creating a vacancy in the office of governor by death, which vacancy William T. Watson, speaker of the Delaware senate, became eligible to fill under the constitutional provision I have just quoted.

Third. That on the day following the death of Governor Marvil, namely, on April 9, 1895, said William T. Watson, then speaker of the Delaware senate, was duly inaugurated governor of the State of Delaware, and the following oaths of office, required by the constitution to be administered to the governor of the State on his taking office, were administered to him. I quote as to the record of this ceremony from the journal entries of the Delaware senate of the proceedings therein April 9, 1895:

The Hon. James L. Wolcott then administered, in the presence of the members of the senate, to Hon. William Tharp Watson, speaker of the senate, the following oaths of office as governor, to wit:

"I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear on the holy evangels of Almighty God that I will support the Constitution of the United States of America. So help me God.

"I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear on the holy evangels of Almighty God that I will support the constitution of the State of Delaware. So help me God.

"I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear on the holy evangels of Almighty God that I will perform the duties of the office of governor of the State of Delaware with fidelity. So help me God."

That immediately on such oaths being administered, he, William T. Watson, entered upon the exercise of the office of governor and has ever since continued in such office, and was on May 9, 1895, and still is, governor of the State of Delaware.

Fourth. That from the date of his inauguration as governor and entering upon the exercise of such office, April 9, 1895, until about noon on May 9, 1895, a period of one month, said William T. Watson, governor of the State of Delaware, did not at any time resume or attempt to resume his seat in the Delaware senate or his seat as speaker of such senate.

Fifth. That from April 9, 1895, when Speaker William T. Watson was inaugurated governor and entered upon the exercise of such office, his name was dropped from the roll call of the Delaware senate and was never once called thereafter, either as senator or speaker of the senate, on any roll call had on any call of the senate, or on any bill, resolution, or motion during the remainder of said session of the general assembly of the State of Delaware.

Sixth. That on May 9, 1895, about the hour of 12 meridian, and but a few moments before the members of the general assembly of the State of Delaware were to meet, and did meet, in joint assembly to elect a Senator, William T. Watson, then governor of the State of Delaware, and then exercising such office and all its functions, entered the senate chamber, took the chair of the speaker of the senate, the speaker pro tempore having left the chair to enable him to do so, and proceeded with the members of the senate to the hall of the house of representatives, and there assumed to act, and did act, as chairman of the joint assembly, and assumed to vote, and did vote, therein for United States Senator on the several ballots cast on that day, casting his vote on each ballot for Edward Ridgley for United States Senator.

Seventh. That immediately after the last ballot was taken for Senator in said joint assembly on May 9, 1895, and before said joint assembly dissolved, a protest against the right of Governor Watson to be in and vote in such joint assembly was presented by Senator Samual Alrichs, a member of such joint assembly, on behalf of himself and fourteen other members of such joint assembly, all of whom had voted for the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont.

This challenge, protest, and demand, as it was at the time designated, is given as follows in the affidavit of Senator Samuel Alrichs, of date November 25, 1895.

Mr. HILL. Was that on the day of the election?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That was on the day of the election.

Mr. GRAY. And after all the ballots had been taken that were taken at all in that election.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. This protest was presented, as I state here, immediately on the conclusion of the last ballot, but before the joint assembly had dissolved May 9, 1895.

Mr. GRAY. That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On the day that Mr. Du Pont claims to have been elected, May 9, 1895.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Watson had not voted on any previous day?

Mr. GRAY. No.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Governor Watson had voted on numerous ballots prior to April 9, 1895, the date he entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, but he had not voted on any of the ballots taken in the joint assembly from the day he took the oath of office as governor, April 9, 1895, until that day, May 9, 1895, nor had he occupied the chair as speaker of the senate at any time subsequent to April 9, when he became governor.

Mr. HILL. But he did vote more than once on that day?

Mr. GRAY. He voted twenty-seven times.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He voted twenty-eight times. There were twenty-eight ballots taken after 12 o'clock on that day.

Mr. HILL. All on one day?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All on one day, after 12 o'clock of May 9, 1895.

Mr. ALLEN. I would ask the Senator what logical deduction he draws from the fact that Watson did not vote or act with the joint assembly until that day?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That the Senator will find as I proceed with my argument. The deduction to be drawn, however, in a word, is that Governor Watson, acting in not voting in accordance with the uniform precedents of a century, believed he had no right to vote. I should now like to read the protest.

Mr. PLATT. With regard to the protest, it was not entered on the record of the joint assembly, was it?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think not; but it is conceded and admitted by all parties to this controversy, and by Governor Watson in his affidavit filed with the committee.

Mr. PALMER. What became of the original protest?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I can not answer that question. I read the protest. It is as follows, as copied in the affidavit of Senator Alrichs, and admitted in the statement and affidavit of Governor Watson himself:

After the last ballot had been taken in said final joint assembly, and before the two houses separated, I, on behalf of myself and the fourteen other senators voting for the said Henry A. Du Pont, arose and presented the following challenge, protest, and demand:

"I very respectfully challenge the correctness of the announcement of this vote and divers preceding votes, and do now most respectfully insist and demand that Henry A. Du Pont be now declared elected Senator for the unexpired term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1895, inasmuch as it is now respectfully insisted that this joint assembly consists of twenty-nine members, the honorable gentleman now undertaking to preside and participate therein being governor of the State, and not now a senator."

After the presentation of the foregoing challenge, protest, and demand, and without taking any further ballot, the joint assembly finally separated, with a declaration from William T. Watson that no person had been elected Senator in Congress for said term.

SAMUEL ALRICHS.

The declaration was then made by the speaker of the house that Henry A. Du Pont had been elected United States Senator from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895, and the joint assembly then dissolved sine die.

Eighth. That the election of the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont, as Senator from the State of Delaware on May 9, 1895, for the full term commencing March 4, 1895, was certified to by Hon. Henry H. McMullen, speaker of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware, and attested by Edgar T. Hastings, clerk of such house of representatives, by a certificate of which the following is a copy, which I ask may be inserted as a part of my remarks:

CERTIFICATE OF THE ELECTION OF MR. DU PONT SIGNED BY THE SPEAKER OF THE DELAWARE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND ATTESTED BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

I, Henry H. McMullen, speaker of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware, do hereby certify that on Tuesday, the fifteenth day of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, that being the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the general assembly of the State of Delaware, the senate and house of representatives of the said State, respectively, proceeded to vote for a Senator in Congress from said State for the term of six years, beginning on the fourth day of March, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five; that at twelve o'clock meridian of the day following the members of the said two houses duly convened in joint assembly, and the journal of each house having been then read and it appearing therefrom that no person had received a majority of the votes in each house for said office, the said joint assembly did then proceed to vote for a person for Senator, and no person having received on said last-mentioned day a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, the said joint assembly did meet at twelve o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session and did take at least one vote, without any person having received such majority, until the ninth day of May of said year, when Henry A. Du Pont received fifteen votes, Edward Ridgley received ten votes, John E. Addicks received four votes, and Ebe W. Tunnell received one vote; that the general assembly of the State of Delaware theretofore duly elected, duly organized on the first Tuesday of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five; that the members of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware who were returned as duly elected thereto from the several counties in said State, and took their seats therein at the time of the organization thereof as aforesaid, were Henry H. McMullen, Frederick Pyle, William Wilson, Francis M. Walker, George W. Reybold, Walter S. Money, and John W. Jolls, representatives from Newcastle County; Horace R. Mustard, William R. Davis, Clarence D. Sypherd, Alexander M. Daly, Ellwood C. Killen, Thomas A. Watson, and Ezekiel Fleming, representatives from Kent County; and John M. Robbins, Newell Ball, Edward S. Burton, George H. Townsend, Charles L. Moore, Horace Brown, and Henry L. Morgan, representatives from Sussex County; that the members of the senate of the State of Delaware, who were returned as duly elected thereto from the several counties in said State at the general election held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-four, or continued in the office of senator by virtue of their election to said office at the general election held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-two, and who took their seats in said senate at the time of the organization thereof on the first Tuesday of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, were Samuel Alrichs, Robert J. Hanby, and John Pyle, senators from Newcastle County; John W. Fenimore, Hezekiah Harrington, and William T. Watson, senators from Kent County; and John M. C. Moore, George F. Pierce, and William T. Records, senators from Sussex County; that all the said senators and representatives save in so far as hereinafter stated to the contrary, continued to act as senators and members of the house of representatives, respectively, from the first Tuesday of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, to the adjournment of the general assembly on the ninth day of May, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, except during occasional absence, or during the recess or adjournments of the respective houses.

That Joshua H. Marvil was elected governor of the State of Delaware on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-four, and thereafter, on the third Tuesday of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, duly qualified as governor of said State for the term of four years, beginning on the day last aforesaid, and ending on the third Tuesday of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, and entered upon the exercise of said office of governor; that thereafter, on the eighth day of April, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, the said Joshua H. Marvil, while continuing to exercise the office of governor, died; that on the day following, to wit, on the ninth day of April, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, the said William T. Watson, who, upon the organization of the senate upon the first Tuesday of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, had been duly elected and qualified as the speaker of the senate, duly took the oath of office as governor of said State, and thereupon entered upon the exercise of the office of governor of the State of Delaware; that the said William T. Watson, during the said session of the general assembly, and until he assumed the office of governor as aforesaid, was, and remained the speaker of the senate, and, as such, presided over that body and voted therein, and participated and voted in the sessions aforesaid of the joint assembly of the two houses, convened for the purpose of electing a Senator from the State of Delaware in the United States Senate; that, upon his qualifying and entering upon the exercise of the office of governor as aforesaid, the said William T. Watson ceased to have the right to act as a member of the senate of said State, or to vote in the said joint assembly for the election of a Senator in Congress as aforesaid; that one of the ten votes so as aforesaid received in said joint assembly on the ninth day of May, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, by Edward Ridgely, was then and there given by the said William T. Watson, at that time the governor of the said State; that said vote so given for Edward Ridgely was given by the said William T. Watson illegally and in violation of the constitution of the State of Delaware, and that Henry A. Du Pont, on said ballot having received fifteen votes, and Edward Ridgely having received only nine legal votes, John E. Addicks having received four votes, and Ebe W. Tunnell having received one vote (no person having theretofore been elected to the office of Senator in Congress from the State of Delaware for said term), the said Henry A. Du Pont having thereby received a majority of the votes of all the senators and representatives then constituting the legislature of the State of Delaware, they being all present and voting, was duly elected Senator in Congress from the State of Delaware for the term of six years from the fourth day of March, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, and was then and there duly declared elected to said office for said term by me a speaker of the house of representatives as aforesaid.

HENRY H. McMULLEN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:
EDGAR T. HASTINGS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

I am still proceeding with my recital of what I understand to be the admitted facts.

Tenth. That since 1792 nine speakers of the senate and one speaker of the house of representatives of the general assembly of the State of Delaware have succeeded to the office of governor, pursuant to the provisions of section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitutions of 1792 and 1831. Four of these were under the constitution of 1792, and six under the present constitution of the State of Delaware, that of 1831, and in not one of these 10 cases has any person, speaker of the senate or speaker of the house, who has in the last one hundred and four years succeeded to the governorship in virtue of section 14 of Article III, which is the same in number and in so far as this question is concerned substantially similar in the two constitutions of 1792 and 1831, taken any part whatever during his continuance in the office of governor in the proceedings of the senate or the house of representatives, nor attempted to do so, with the single exception of the attempt on the part of the present governor of Delaware, and during all this time such persons have drawn the salary of governor and have not drawn the salary of senator or member.

GOVERNOR WATSON HAD NO RIGHT TO EXERCISE SIMULTANEOUSLY THE OFFICES OF GOVERNOR AND STATE SENATOR.

Assuming, then, for the present, Mr. President, that the Senate of the United States is not estopped—and I shall come to that question later on—from inquiring into the right of William T. Watson, governor of the State of Delaware, while exercising the office of governor, to exercise simultaneously the functions of a senator of that State in its general assembly, and to sit in the joint assembly and vote for a United States Senator therein, I shall proceed to demonstrate, as I believe I can beyond the power of successful contradiction, that he had no such right.

This is a question which, in my judgment, must be determined, in the main, by a construction of the several provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware, the same to be construed in the light emanating from judicial and legislative decisions under the common law, and also, and more especially, from those rendered under our American system of government.

UNDER THE COMMON LAW THE SAME PERSON COULD NOT EXERCISE SIMULTANEOUSLY INCOMPATIBLE OFFICES, AND THE ACCEPTANCE OF AN INCOMPATIBLE OFFICE WITH ONE ALREADY HELD WAS IPSO FACTO A RESIGNATION OF THE OTHER.

But while the precise question involved in this case must, I concede, be determined by a construction of the several provisions of the Delaware constitution, as throwing light on the subject, I propose to establish by authority these two propositions:

First. That it is a well-settled rule of the common law that the same person shall not exercise simultaneously incompatible offices, and that under the common law the acceptance of an office incompatible with the one already held is ipso facto a resignation of the other; and

Second. The offices of governor and legislator are, under the American system, incompatible, and the dual functions of the two can not be and are not, as a general rule, exercised either in whole or in part simultaneously by the same person, and are never so exercised in the absence of either express or clearly implied constitutional or statutory authority, and the cases in which such authority exists constitute the exception and not the rule.

In support of the first of these propositions I attract attention to the case of Milyard vs. Thatcher (2 Town Reports, 81), wherein it was held that the acceptance of the office of town clerk vacated the office of jurat of the corporation of Hastings, although the office of clerk was inferior to that of jurat, the jurats sitting as judges of a court of record. Mr. Justice Buller, one of the most learned and eminent of the judges of the English bench, in delivering the opinion in that case, used the following language:

> Now, if the offices be incompatible, his being a jurat before is no objection to his election; and if they be incompatible, the election to the latter office is good, because the acceptance of the second vacates the first office. * * * The case of The King vs. Sir W. Trelawney, so far as the question was entered into, is an authority. There the court did not distinguish between a superior and inferior office; but Lord Mansfield expressly said that "if the two offices were incompatible, the acceptance of the latter would imply a surrender of the former."

Mr. Justice Buller further, in the opinion in that case, said:

> If two offices can not be held by the same person at the same time, the acceptance of the latter office vacates the former.

In The King vs. Pateman (2 Durnf. and East, 777), Lord Chief Justice Kenyon said:

> If an alderman be also a magistrate, and the town clerk act ministerially under him, then, indeed, these two offices can not be held by the same person. Now, here is a question whether the town clerk's accounts are not allowed by the alderman. If they are, I think the two offices are incompatible, and this information should be for the purpose of trying that fact.

In The King vs. Tizzard (9 B. and C., 418), Mr. Justice Bailey gives the following as one definition of incompatible offices:

> The two offices are incompatible when the holder can not in every instance discharge the duties of each.

Will it be contended that a person acting as governor of the State can at the same time act as senator of the State, especially if the legislature is in session at the same time, and exercise in every instance the duties of both? Certainly not.

And further says Mr. Justice Bailey:

> The acceptance of the second office therefore vacates the first. So a man shall lose his office if he accepts another office incompatible.

Can it be said that any man can in every instance discharge the duties of both governor and State senator, much less those of governor, senator, and speaker of the senate?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me for a moment? Does the Senator in his statement of the impossibility of the governor in every instance exercising the office of senator refer to the physical impossibility? Is that what the Senator means; that he can not physically perform the duties of the office?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think that is what the judge meant, so far as that is concerned. A physical impossibility; that, however, may be but one element in determining incompatibility.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether he is contending now that Mr. Watson was not a senator from the time he took the oath of office of governor? Is the Senator contending that he lost his office as senator?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Wisconsin will see before I conclude precisely what I am contending for upon that subject. I shall evade nothing. I have nothing to keep back in discussing this question. I have fixed opinions in regard to it, and I shall present them to the Senate as fully, fairly, and frankly as I am able, and in the course of my remarks I will answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin fully.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to ask the Senator, in connection with this point, if he does not contend that Mr. Watson absolutely resigned or vacated the office of senator by taking upon himself the duties of governor, what relation those authorities have to the case which hold that such must be the result where the offices are incompatible?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator will see as I proceed precisely what application those authorities have to this particular case. They are directly applicable, as I shall endeavor to show, whether the office of speaker and senator became absolutely vacant, or whether the right to exercise the same was held in abeyance and suspended.

Mr. VILAS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's argument.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no objection to interruptions.

The English authorities to which I have attracted the attention of the Senate, and others of like nature, have frequently been cited in the American courts and the doctrine therein asserted approved, as will be seen from the American authorities which I will cite.

Chief Justice Appleton, in Stubbs vs. Lee (64 Me., 195), decided in 1874, in discussing what constitutes incompatible offices, and also the effect of the acceptance of an office incompatible with one already held, referred to the common-law doctrine, and citing the foregoing English authorities, says:

> "The offices in question must be regarded as incompatible. I think," remarks Bailey, J., in The King vs. Tizzard (9 B. and C., 418), "that the two offices are incompatible when the holder can not in every instance discharge the duties of each. * * * The acceptance of the second office therefore vacates the first. * * * So a man shall lose his office if he accepts another office incompatible; as if one be under the control of the other; as if the remembrancer of the exchequer be made a baron of the exchequer." (5 Com. Dig., tit. "Officer," K., 5.) The appointment of a person to a second office incompatible with the first is not absolutely void, but on his subsequently accepting the appointment and qualifying the first office is ipso facto vacated. (The People vs. Carrique, 2 Hill, 93.)
> A vacancy may arise in an office from an implied resignation, as by the incumbent's accepting an incompatible office. (Van Orsdale vs. Hazard, 3 Hill, 243.) The acceptance of the office of constable of a town by a person holding at the time the office of justice of the peace is of itself a surrender of the latter office. (Magie vs. Stoddard, 25 Conn., 565.)

It is not necessary that there should be any adjudication by the legislature, by a judicial court, or by any other tribunal; it is ipso facto vacated. If there is any question of fact as a matter of course necessary to be found, then that is a different question. Here there is no question of fact in dispute.

Mr. Justice Appleton, in further discussing this question in case supra, says:

> Where one has two incompatible offices both can not be retained. The public has a right to know which is held and which is surrendered. It should not be left to chance or to the uncertain and fluctuating whim of the office-holder to determine. The general rule, therefore, that the acceptance of and qualification for an office incompatible with one then held is a resignation of the former is one certain and reliable as well as one indispensable for the protection of the public.
> The defendant, having been appointed and sworn as a deputy sheriff, must be regarded as having accepted that office. By that acceptance he surrendered the office of trial justice, a judicial office incompatible with that of a deputy sheriff. His judicial authority, therefore, as a trial justice was at an end.

Justice Cowen, in discussing the question as to the effect of the acceptance of one office upon the other, in The People vs. Carrique (2 Hill, 97), says:

> This is an absolute determination of the original office, and leaves no shadow of title to the possessor, so that neither quo warranto nor a motion is necessary before any other may be elected. (Vide Millcock on Municipal Corporations, 240, pl. 617; to the same point Lord Mansfield, in Rex vs. Trelawney, 3 Burr., 1616; Buller, J., in Milward vs. Thatcher, 2 T. R., 87.)

Also in Van Orsdale vs. Hazard (3 Hill, 248), the court said:

> A vacancy sometimes arises from a mere implied resignation by accepting an office incompatible with that which is claimed to be vacated.

In discussing this question I shall, while insisting the offices of executive and legislator are, under the American system, incompatible, and therefore could not, in the absence of constitutional or statutory warrant to the contrary, be held or exercised simultaneously by the same person, assume that they may be so held and exercised, either in virtue of constitutional warrant or by statutory permission, in cases wherein such statute does not conflict with the fundamental law.

On this point, therefore, I take it there will not be in this debate any controversy between the majority and minority of the committee.

If, therefore, it can be shown by the opposition that there is in the constitution of the State of Delaware either any express or necessarily implied right guaranteed to the citizens of that State to hold and exercise simultaneously, or to exercise simultaneously, the two offices of governor and legislator, then, while I should hold such guaranty to be in conflict with the general letter and spirit of the rule on that subject under our American system, I would not be disposed to deny the simultaneous exercise of such right to the citizens of that State. I, however, not only most emphatically deny that any such right exists, either expressly or inferentially, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, but I confidently lay down the broad propositions, first, that the simultaneous exercise of the two offices—those of governor and State senator—is directly, positively, and absolutely prohibited in the State of Delaware by certain express specific provisions of the Delaware constitution.

And not only so. But, second, that numerous other provisions of that constitution, considered separate and, apart from the direct express clauses to which I have referred, and even were these express inhibitory clauses entirely omitted, clearly indicate that it was the opinion of the framers of that constitution that the offices of executive and legislator are incompatible and should, therefore, not be exercised simultaneously by the same person, and that therefore these clauses are in and of themselves, though considered separate and apart from the express inhibitory clauses, a constitutional restraint upon the right of any citizen of Delaware to exercise simultaneously the offices of governor and legislator. If I shall succeed in demonstrating these propositions to the satisfaction of the Senate, then there is an end to this controversy, unless, indeed, it should be held the Senate of the United States is for any reason precluded and estopped from determining that question for itself, and to that proposition I will come later on.

I shall first attract attention to those clauses of the Delaware constitution which, it seems to me beyond all question, expressly inhibit a citizen of the State of Delaware from the exercise of the offices of governor and State senator at the same time, and then I shall proceed subsequently to call attention to those various other provisions of the Delaware constitution, which although not directly or expressly, but by clear implication, declare the incompatibility of the two offices, and against the right to a simultaneous exercise of the two by the same person.

CLAUSES OF THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION WHICH EXPRESSLY INHIBIT THE SIMULTANEOUS EXERCISE OF THE OFFICES OF GOVERNOR AND LEGISLATOR BY THE SAME PERSON.

Section 12, Article II, of the Delaware constitution provides, among other things, as follows:

No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State, or the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia, holding no disqualifying office, shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.

While section 5 of Article III, is as follows:

SEC. 5. No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States, or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

What, then, is the fair, reasonable, and, in fact, only justifiable construction of this first clause? Reading only the words, but yet all the words, which relate to the question under consideration, it would read as follows:

No person holding any office under this State shall during his continuance in office be a senator.

This language, and it is the precise language of the constitution applicable, is express, plain, direct, certain, and entirely free from any ambiguity. It declares in direct and unambiguous phrase that no person holding any office under the State of Delaware shall be a senator. That is to say, no person exercising any office under the State of Delaware shall simultaneously exercise the office of State senator.

There is no limitation upon the language used. There is nothing in, about it, or connected with it that would indicate for one moment that it was only intended to apply to such governors as might be elected by the people, and that it should not apply to such who became governors to fill a vacancy in virtue of the constitutional provision I have quoted. The office of governor is an office under the State of Delaware within the meaning of this constitutional phrase. No one, it would seem, would deny that proposition. Nor will it be denied—upon the contrary, it must be conceded—that it is directly admitted by counsel in opposition to the claims of Mr. Du Pont in their printed briefs, whether conceded or not by the minority of the committee, that Watson was, on the 9th day of May, 1895, governor of the State of Delaware, the governor in every sense of the term, exercising all the functions of the office, performing its every duty, exercising its every prerogative, entitled to its name and all its emoluments, neither cramped, nor limited, nor circumscribed by any condition, qualification, or limitation whatever—the governor just as much and for every purpose as though he had been elected by the people, instead of having succeeded to the office in virtue of the constitutional provision as speaker of the senate.

If, therefore, he was and is governor, then, the governorship being an office under the State of Delaware, he was, on May 9, 1895, and still is holding an office under the State, and so holding such office he can not, in the face of the first constitutional provision quoted, be a senator or exercise any of the functions of a senator during his continuance in the office of governor.

Mr. HILL. That is what the Senator claims is the express prohibition?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is one of the express prohibitions. I will come to another in a moment.

Strength is given to this construction by the clause excepting from this inhibition—the attorney general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia holding no disqualifying office.

Persons holding these offices specified in the exception are by this provision permitted, while holding such offices, to be a senator or representative in the general assembly of the State of Delaware. This exception therefore adds strength to the prohibitory clause, which applies directly to the person holding or exercising the office of governor.

There is in this clause nothing to justify the contention of the views of the minority that it only relates to the "regular elective term of the offices therein named."

What term, or word, or sentence in this clause of the constitution, or in any other clause, can the distinguished Senators who have presented the views of the minority of the committee point to as in any manner limiting these inhibitions to persons only who are holding office under the State by virtue of an election by the people?

I quite agree, Mr. President, with the statement of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] in the views of the minority to the effect that incompatibility, in legal terms or effect, such as to oust a man from one office and confer upon him another, is not derived from general considerations resting in nubibus. With that proposition I have no quarrel, but I insist when a clause in the fundamental law of a sovereign State asserts in plain, unqualified, unrestricted, unconditional, and unambiguous terms that a person holding office under such State shall not—under certain conditions specified—be a senator or representative of that State, it is not and can not for one moment be properly characterized as a general consideration resting in nubibus. On the contrary, such a phrase, so far from being shadowy, vague, meaningless, uncertain, or resting either in the imagination or in the clouds, is an absolute prohibition, not open to construction, and which neither courts, nor juries, nor State legislatures, much less the Senate of the United States, are at liberty to disregard.

So much for the first clause of the constitution quoted—that is, section 12, Article II.

But in complete consonance with this provision and in perfect harmony with its spirit and purpose and indeed identical with its very letter in a reversible form and in its application, is the second clause of the Delaware constitution, to which I attracted attention—that is, section 5, Article III. This is the other express prohibition, I will state to the Senator from New York, to which I had reference.

Mr. HILL. There are two?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Two.

This provision, section 5, Article III, is as follows:

That no member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

While a senator who is speaker of the senate is by the clause in the fourteenth section of Article III, quoted by me a few moments ago, made eligible to become the governor of the State, eligible to take the oaths of governor and to enter upon the exercise of the office, it is clear the moment he takes the gubernatorial oaths and enters upon the exercise of the office of governor he must, in virtue not only of section 12, Article II, which declares that no person holding any office under the State of Delaware shall, during his continuance in office, be a senator or representative, but in virtue also of section 5, Article III, which declares that no person holding office under the State of Delaware shall exercise the office of governor, cease to be a senator—that is, he must cease either absolutely, or otherwise his right to exercise the office of senator is held in abeyance and suspended so long as he shall continue to exercise the office of governor.

Mr. VILAS. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Oregon, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to ask the Senator this question: Is there the slightest possibility of his maintaining the second alternative proposition in view of the explicit language of the constitution, assuming that that language means a senator as a person holding an office under the State of Delaware? Is it possible that the second alternative can be maintained in view of this language so constituted as to read no senator of the State of Delaware shall exercise the office of governor.

Mr. GRAY. Of course it must be construed that way.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is nothing whatever contradictory in that. That clause must have a reasonable construction, having in plain view always the evil it was intended to prevent—that is, the simultaneous exercise by the same person of the functions of executive and legislator. The clause should be, or it least reasonably may be, construed to mean simply this: That the executive shall not, while exercising the office of governor, exercise the office of senator. I frankly confess, if this were a case of first impression—not in any wise affected by precedent or usage in Delaware—I should, without any hesitation, hold that the offices of speaker and senator become absolutely vacant on the speaker succeeding to the office of governor. But the two clauses, taken together, are clearly open to the other construction.

Mr. VILAS. Does the Senator from Oregon then maintain that it is possible that the senator can simply be suspended as a senator and become no senator and afterwards again become a senator without an election?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The history of this country is full of instances where the right to exercise an office on the part of a person who holds an office is for a certain time suspended. I can point to numerous instances of that kind.

Mr. VILAS. But I am asking the Senator whether, assuming that his interpretation of this provision of the constitution is correct, that no person holding the office of senator in the State of Delaware shall exercise the office of governor, it is compatible with that reading of it that a suspension of the function of senator only is intended to take place? Is it not an absolute vacation? Does it not absolutely vacate the office of senator?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. To which clause does the Senator refer?

Mr. VILAS. The clause in section 5 of Article III.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Read it.

Mr. VILAS. I will read it now as the Senator from Oregon interprets it:

No person holding the office of senator of the State of Delaware shall exercise the office of governor.

That is the Senator's reading of it. Is it compatible with that reading that there shall be a mere suspension of the office of Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think it is entirely compatible, so far as that is concerned, and entirely consistent with one construction which may very properly be placed upon it. Now, I come back again to the express prohibitions.

Mr. GRAY. Before the Senator resumes, will it interrupt him if I ask him a question? Of course, to read section 5 of Article III under the interpretation put upon it by the Senator from Oregon it would be that no member of Congress and no person holding the office of senator shall exercise the office of governor. That would be the reading that the Senator would make. How does that comport with a subsequent provision which says that in a certain case the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office of governor?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All that the latter clause just read by the Senator from Delaware means is simply to declare the eligibility of the speaker of the senate to become governor. Clearly that is all that that clause means in my judgment.

Twice over, therefore, does the fundamental law of Delaware declare in the most express and positive terms that the dual functions of senator and executive shall not be exercised simultaneously by the same person. That constitution—and I come now to the point of the Senator from Delaware—says to each and every citizen of Delaware, in substance and legal effect, in the most emphatic and unequivocal manner: "You can not exercise the office of governor while you continue to exercise the office of senator; neither can you exercise the office of senator while you continue to exercise the office of governor."

It declares in legal effect to the person who is speaker of the senate: "You, in a certain contingency—that is, in case of the death, removal, resignation, or inability of the governor elected by the people—have a preference right over every other citizen of the State to become governor and exercise that office, a right, however, you can avail yourself of or not at your own option. There is nothing compulsory connected with it."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] suggests to me the question, Who would be governor if he did not accept? I answer, under the constitution, the speaker of the house.

In fact, no compulsory provision, even in a fundamental law, could be made operative against the will of the citizen in so far as holding or not holding office is concerned.

"You can waive it if you please," says the constitution in legal effect, "and continue to be senator and speaker of the senate, notwithstanding your eligibility to become governor, notwithstanding you hold the preference right over every other citizen of the State of Delaware to become governor; but if you avail yourself of this preference right given you by the constitution, and take the gubernatorial oath, and enter voluntarily, as you must if you enter at all, upon the exercise of the office of governor, then, that moment, you cease to be senator, your right to exercise the functions of either senator or speaker of the senate is at once gone, or at least held in abeyance and suspended so long as you continue to exercise the office of governor."

Mr. GEORGE. Right at this point I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to ask the Senator from Oregon this very important question: In case the speaker of the senate declined to enter upon the office of governor, as the Senator contends he may, who, then, would exercise the office? I understood the Senator from Oregon to reply that it would fall to the speaker of the house of representatives.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He then would have a preference right to the office of governor over every other citizen of Delaware.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the language of section 14—I hope he will read it—which says expressly that the office shall never devolve upon the speaker of the house unless there be no speaker of the senate, and if he remained speaker of the senate, then there can be no devolution of the office on the speaker of the house of representatives. If the Senator will read the section he will see that express provision.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have examined that section very carefully, and I will discuss all of its various phases before I get through.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator the section before him now? If he has, I would be glad if he would read it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I prefer not to be diverted at this point, but will fully meet the Senator's suggestion as I proceed.

THE RULE OF CONSTRUCTION APPLICABLE TO CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

The rule of construction applicable to the provisions of a fundamental law is that the provisions are to be regarded as mandatory, unless the contrary plainly appears. Where the language of a constitution is plain, we are not permitted to indulge in speculation concerning its meaning; neither are we permitted to inquire as to its wisdom. A constitution is necessarily brief, its language precise, and represents the will and wisdom of the convention and people who adopt it.

The rule with reference to constitutional construction is well stated in the case of New York vs. People (7 N. Y., 9), as follows:

If the words embody a definite meaning which involves no absurdity, and no contradiction between the different parts of the same writing, then the meaning apparent upon the face of the instrument is the one which alone we are at liberty to say was intended to be conveyed. In such a case there is no room for construction. That which the words declare is the meaning of the instrument, and neither courts nor legislature have the right to add to or take away from that meaning.

A MINNESOTA CASE DIRECTLY IN POINT.

This authority was quoted recently by the supreme court of Minnesota in the case of The State ex rel. Childs, attorney-general, vs. Sutton, decided December 12, 1895, and which is directly in point as an authority in the case now under consideration.

In that case John B. Sutton was elected to the office of representative of the Twenty-third legislative district of the State of Minnesota for the term commencing on the first Monday of January, 1895, and ending on the first Monday of January, 1897. Pursuant to such election, he duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such member at the commencement of the session for the year 1895, and in that capacity served until the 2d day of May of that year, when he resigned his office as such member. The legislative session during which he served as a member terminated prior to his resignation. On the 4th day of May, 1895, Sutton was appointed by the governor of the State to the public office of inspector of boilers for the Fourth Congressional district of that State, which office is one of great public importance and responsibility, having been created by an act of the legislature prior to Sutton's election as a member thereof.

His resignation of the office of member of the legislature, it will be observed, and his appointment to this public office by the governor, were both prior to the expiration of the term for which he had been elected State representative. His resignation, however, as representative preceded his appointment by the governor.

Upon his appointment to the office of inspector of boilers he qualified and entered upon the performance of the duties of the office, when a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto was issued to oust and exclude him from further acting as inspector of boilers, upon the ground that he was prohibited by the constitution from holding or exercising such office until the expiration of the time for which he was elected as representative. The clause relied upon by the attorney-general to sustain his contention is Article IV, section 9, of the constitution of the State of Minnesota, and reads as follows:

No senator or representative shall, during the time for which he is elected, hold any office under the authority of the United States or the State of Minnesota, except that of postmaster; and no senator or representative shall hold an office under the State which had been created or the emoluments of which had been increased during the session of the legislature of which he was a member until one year after the expiration of his term of office in the legislature.

The supreme court of that State held that under this constitutional provision Sutton could not hold the office of inspector of boilers, to which he had been appointed by the governor, until the expiration of the full period of time for which he was elected.

The court, in its opinion, said:

In the case at bar it is not necessary for us to speculate upon the intention of the framers of the constitution in adopting the provision in question. A bare reading of this provision suffices to enable us to ascertain and understand its meaning, and we need not search for light through the uncertainties of extraneous interpretation or construction. It is a part of the organic law of the State that no senator or representative shall, during the time for which he is elected, hold any office under the authority of the State of Minnesota. Is there any uncertainty or ambiguity about this language? Has it any of the characteristics which demand a construction to be placed upon it by the judiciary of this State other than that which is transparent from the language itself?

So, here, Mr. President, the constitution of the State of Delaware declares in no less emphatic terms that no member of Congress, and no person holding any office under the United States or the State of Delaware, shall, during his continuance in office, be a senator or a representative.

That same constitution declares again in equally positive and emphatic terms that—

No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

This case is infinitely stronger than the Minnesota case, as in that case the member of the legislature had resigned his office before he accepted the appointment from the governor. He did not attempt to exercise the two offices at the same time. But the court held that the prohibitory clause of the constitution which declared that he should not hold such office at any time during the term for which he had been elected operated. The court said:

The respondent could not nullify the constitutional prohibitory clause during the time for which he is elected by his resignation of the office of representative.

THE MINORITY PROPOSITIONS.

Now, Mr. President, upon what clause or clauses of the Delaware constitution do those representing the minority of the committee base their support of the following propositions, so strenuously asserted by them, that is to say—I now quote the propositions as I understand the minority—

"First. That the dual functions of governor and State senator,' to use the precise language of the views of the minority, "are expressly"—

I call attention to the term used here by the minority—

"Are expressly made compatible and competent by the terms of the Delaware constitution"; and,

"Second. That the provisions of section 12, Article II, and of section 5, Article III, of the Delaware constitution apply only to persons holding the office of governor or any other office under the State who have been elected by the people, and do not apply to a governor or other State officer who has become such to fill a vacancy"?

I state the propositions correctly.

I shall aim to not in the least misrepresent the argument employed by the distinguished Senator from Indiana and those who agree with him.

The first proposition, namely, that these dual functions are expressly made compatible by the terms of the Delaware constitution, and, in fact, the second proposition are sought to be maintained solely—I use the word "solely" with caution and with reference to its precise meaning—maintained solely, so far as the minority report is concerned, upon the asseveration alone that the constitution of Delaware does not provide in terms that the speaker of the Senate, on the death of the governor, shall, to use the language of the views of the minority, "either be or become governor," but only that such speaker "shall exercise the office of governor." It does not provide, it is further insisted, that he shall in such event cease to be speaker or cease to be senator.

I think I clearly and fairly state the position of the minority of the committee.

This, Mr. President, is the whole argument, supplemented by the further statement that the constitution provides that "each house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore," and still further by the clause that a speaker of the senate or house who shall succeed to the governorship, and shall thus exercise the office of governor, shall serve "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

This is the whole of the argument in support of these two propositions, and when resolved into its one constituent element, as when stripped of all extraneous matter, it contains but a single essential element; it amounts simply to this, that a speaker of the senate, or a speaker of the house, who, under the provisions of the Delaware constitution, succeeds to the governorship to fill a vacancy caused by the death, removal, resignation, or inability of a governor, does not become the governor. That is the argument, and that is all there is to the argument in the views of the minority. The constitution, say our distinguished colleagues on the committee, does not say he "shall either be or become governor," but only that he "shall exercise the office of governor." In other words, although he shall perform every function, fulfill every duty, exercise every prerogative of governor; shall "as governor" take on his inauguration the oaths of office prescribed by the constitution for a governor, to the effect that he "will perform the duties of the office of governor of the State of Delaware with fidelity," this being the precise language of the oath; although he shall from time to time as governor give to the general assembly information concerning the State, and as governor shall recommend to their consideration such measures as the governor of the State shall judge expedient, as provided in section 11, Article III, of the constitution; although he shall have power as governor to remit fines and forfeitures, grant reprieves and pardons, as prescribed by section 9, Article III, of that instrument; shall be liable as governor to impeachment for treason, bribery, or any high crime or misdemeanor in office, and subject on conviction to removal from the office of governor; shall be liable, furthermore, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of the general assembly, to be removed from the office of governor for inability, as prescribed in sections 1 and 2 of Article V and section 14 of Article III of the constitution; but not only so, he shall be, and is by the people of the State and of the United States, known as and called the governor of the State; and yet, notwithstanding all these things, according to the argument of our distinguished friends of the minority, he is not the governor, he has never become governor, because, as it is claimed, the constitution does not in so many words say that he shall be governor, or that he shall become governor, only that he shall "exercise the office of governor."

This, Mr. President, is, it is with all due deference respectfully submitted, a refinement of reasoning and logic of the same character as that which attempts to define and draw the distinction between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Why, Mr. President, the distinguished counsel who appeared in opposition to the claims of Mr. Du Pont and filed elaborate printed briefs in opposition to his right to a seat, concede in their briefs that Watson when he took the oaths of office of governor became the governor of the State. They do not claim that he was merely an ex officio, a mere ad interim governor, but that he was the governor of the State and all that is implied by such a designation. On this point I beg to read from pages 35 and 36 of the report of the committee:

IT IS CONCEDED WATSON WAS GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE MAY 9, 1895, AND HAD BEEN SINCE APRIL 9, 1895, IN THE FULL CONSTITUTIONAL SENSE OF THAT TERM.

It is not denied, but conceded by counsel in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont, that William T. Watson was, on the 9th day of May, 1895, and had been since April 9, 1895, governor of the State. In their able and elaborate brief filed in the case (page 30), in a reference to certain statements in the brief of counsel for Mr. Du Pont, we find the following:

"Thus counsel devote thirty pages of their brief (pages 34-63) to a demonstration of the fact that the speaker of the senate, in case of a vacancy in the office of governor, becomes governor of the State. The matter counsel present on this head attests their industry and may interest the curious, but it supports a proposition which we do not contest."

It is conceded, therefore, by those opposing the claim of Mr. Du Pont, that Mr. Watson, on his inauguration as governor, became the governor of the State. He was not merely to exercise the office of governor ex officio; not merely to act as governor in the manner the President pro tempore of the United States Senate would have acted in the case of vacancies in the offices of President and Vice-President under the act of 1792.

And yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding this concession of the able counsel who argued before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that Watson on entering upon the exercise of the office of governor "became the governor of the State," and not merely ad interim or ex officio governor, the minority of the committee in their views seem to rest their whole case on the assumption and contention that he did not become the governor.

The distinction between a person who in one office succeeds to the exercise of the functions of another ex officio, or as an acting officer, and one who succeeds to the office permanently and exercises the office, not in virtue of the office he previously held, but in his own right, is this:

If an office be "appendant," as the expression is in 1 Leon., 32, to another office, the determination of the first office will determine the second. This is where a person holding any office is ex officio entitled to perform the functions of some other office, as was the case, perhaps, of the President pro tempore of the United States Senate under the act of 1792. In such case the right to exercise the functions of the second office ceases upon the determination of the office held in virtue of which he exercises such ex officio functions of the second office. If, however, on the contrary, the nomination or appointment to an office, as it is in the case under consideration, be merely by descriptio personam of one who holds another office by the title of which he is described, and who on a contingency is to enter and fill the other office, he answering the description at the time the contingency arises, designates him as the person who is to fill the office, and when as thus designated he enters into the office he holds it in his natural and not in his official capacity. Consequently in this case of Watson, even in the absence of any affirmative constitutional declaration, he continues to hold the office of governor, if the term continues after his term of senator had expired, his office of governor not being appendant to that of senator. But in this case the Delaware constitution, recognizing this principle, declares in section 14, Article III, not that he shall exercise the office of governor so long as his term of senator shall continue, but "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

This doctrine was clearly enunciated by the supreme court of the State of Oregon, in the case of Chadwick vs. Earhart, 11 Oregon 394.

In this connection and as bearing upon the question as to the capacity in which a person who succeeds to the office of governor while speaker of the senate exercises such office, I attract attention to the second sentence of section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitution. It reads as follows:

If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

One clause, that is, the first sentence of section 14, Article III, provides for a "vacancy happening in the office of governor"—that is to say, a vacancy caused by the death, removal, resignation, or inability of the governor elected by the people—while the second sentence of the same section declares:

*If * * * upon a further vacancy happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.*

A vacancy in what office? Why, clearly, the office of governor of the State. It is the case now where the speaker of the senate is exercising the office of governor. And a vacancy caused by whose death, etc.? Unquestionably by the death of the governor of the State; that is to say, of that governor who was speaker of the senate, and who as such was eligible to become governor on the death of the governor elected by the people, and who on his death took the oaths of office and became the governor of the State, and as such governor and not as speaker of the senate, exercises the office of governor.

The implication is conclusive from the use in this clause of the terms "further vacancy," and from the whole of these clauses of the constitution considered together, that the office of governor is not only exercised but absolutely filled and held by Watson, who was speaker of the senate at the time the first vacancy in the office of governor occurred.

But, Mr. President, the words which define the tenure of office, that is, the time during which a person who, either as speaker of the senate or as speaker of the house of representatives, shall continue to exercise the office of governor, after entering upon such duties in case of a vacancy, that is to say, the words "until a governor elected by the people shall be qualified," demonstrate beyond all question to my mind that such person exercises such office, not as speaker of the senate, not as speaker of the house of representatives, but as the governor of the State. If it were otherwise, then the clause, instead of saying "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified," would have read "until his term as senator and speaker of the senate shall expire," or "until his term as representative and speaker of the house shall expire."

Suppose the governor of the State dies one week prior to the expiration of the term of senator, and of course of speaker of the senate, of the person who then is speaker of the senate, and he succeeds to the vacancy in virtue of this clause of the Delaware constitution. In such case, if the exercise of the office of governor simply devolved upon him as speaker of the senate, and if he, as stated in the views of the minority—I quote—is not the governor—

but that he—I quote again—is and remains and must continue to be speaker of the senate—

then what becomes of his right or power to exercise the office of governor at the expiration of the week when his term of both senator and speaker of the senate shall have expired?

Mr. PASCO. Are there any precedents of that kind in the history of the State of Delaware?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will come to that question later on.

If he exercises the office of governor, not because he is the governor, as contended by the minority, but only because he is senator and speaker of the senate, then it is clear beyond the power of successful contradiction that the moment his term as senator and as speaker of the senate terminates that moment his right and power to exercise the office of governor must also cease. And I ask especial attention to this proposition, and when our friends of the minority come to argue this case I want to know what answer can be made to it.

Such a construction as suggested by the distinguished Senators who have presented the views of the minority, it is respectfully submitted, was never contemplated by the framers of the Delaware constitution, and they used language, moreover, so clear and plain that it left no room for such a construction, by declaring that a speaker of the senate who succeeded to the vacancy should exercise the office, not merely so long as he shall continue to be a senator, not merely so long only as he shall continue to be speaker of the senate, but, in the language of the constitution, "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

This time may come prior to the termination of the term for which he is elected senator and speaker of the senate, or it may not come until a period of many months or, indeed, years after such termination.

Mr. GRAY. Right here, if it will not interrupt the Senator, as he is giving a very interesting exposition of section 14 of Article III of the constitution of Delaware, I should like to ask him if he has observed the peculiar language of the second clause of section 14, which he has just read:

If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office, by his death, removal, resignation.

The words "his death" refer to the death of the speaker of the senate.

Mr. GEORGE. They do.

Mr. GRAY. And to no one else; so that the clause, if it were carried out in full and read as it may be, substituting the person referred to for the pronoun referring to him, it would read thus: "If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office, by the death of the speaker of the senate," then there shall be another provision.

Mr. GEORGE. That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That relates to another matter, I think. What particular clause is it the Senator refers to?

Mr. GRAY. It is the clause the Senator was just reading, or I would not have presumed to have interrupted him.

Mr. GEORGE. It does refer to the speaker.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Delaware claims that it refers to the speaker and not to the governor?

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. We will discuss that a little later on. It, however, clearly refers to the person who, while exercising the office of governor, dies—that is, a governor who became such to fill a vacancy.

Mr. GEORGE. The pronoun refers to the antecedent.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It refers unquestionably, as I have stated, to the death of the person who is then governor and who as speaker of the senate had succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor. It refers necessarily to that person and to nobody else. This is clear from the preceding words of the same clause, "a further vacancy happening in the office." What office? The office of governor; not the office of speaker of the senate. The words "his death," therefore, to which the Senators call my attention, refer to the death of the governor, whatever else he once may have been or then is.

But not only so. It will be found by a reference to the third sentence of section 14 of Article III, which, beyond all question, refers to a person who, either as speaker of the senate or as speaker of the house of representatives, is exercising the office of governor, where the words "the person holding the office" are used, that such person is regarded as the governor. He is described, it will be observed, in that clause of the constitution as not merely exercising the office—phraseology upon which the whole argument of the opposition is based—but as "holding the office."

Our friends of the minority seem to overlook that clause of the constitution or that phraseology.

It is conceded he "exercises the office," because the constitution says so, but here in this clause it decribes him not only as exercising but also as "holding the office."

Mr. PASCO. To which clause does the Senator from Oregon refer?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Section 14, Article III. What office, Mr. President, is he described as holding? He is described in that clause as holding an office. What office is it? What office is it that is referred to by the words "holding the office"? Surely, the office of governor. It can refer to nothing else; that and that only. Can it be said, then—will the eminent lawyers and Senators who have appended their distinguished names to the views of the minority, in which they declare Watson was not the governor, that he never became the governor of the State of Delaware, insist a person who in virtue of these specific and express provisions of the Delaware constitution to the effect that he both holds the office of governor and exercises the office of governor, is not, never was, and can not be governor?

VARIOUS PROVISIONS OF THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION WHICH CLEARLY INFERENTIALLY DECLARE THE INCOMPATIBILITY OF THE OFFICES OF GOVERNOR AND LEGISLATOR.

I now, Mr. President, pass for the present from the consideration of those clauses of the Delaware constitution which in express terms interdict the dual exercise of executive and legislative functions, and beg to attract the attention of the Senate to various other provisions of such constitution, which, standing alone, even were the express prohibitory clauses eliminated, show in the clearest possible manner, not only an entire absence of any recognition of right upon the part of the Delaware citizen to exercise simultaneously the offices of executive and legislator, but which by what might be properly termed express inference clearly deny such right. These various provisions, considered separately and in conjunction with each other, indicate in the strongest possible manner the absolute incompatibility of such offices. For instance, it is provided in section 14, Article VI, as follows:

The governor may for any reasonable cause in his discretion remove any of them—on the address of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the general assembly.

If it be true, therefore, as contended by the minority of the committee, that the same person can simultaneously exercise the office of governor and senator, then he, as senator, can, by his vote, help to make up the two-thirds vote in the senate, which vote alone gives him jurisdiction to remove any of the judges in the State. In other words, if he, while exercising the office of governor can not exercise the office of senator, and without his vote a two-thirds vote of all the members of each branch of the legislature can not be had in an address to the governor, then he as governor has no power or jurisdiction under the constitution of the State to remove a judge for any cause whatever; while upon the other hand if, as contended by those representing the minority of the committee, he can, while exercising the office of governor, at the same time exercise the office of senator, then his vote as senator may turn the tables and make up the necessary two-thirds of the members of the two houses on which vote alone he, as governor, acquires jurisdiction to remove the judges.

Will it be said for one moment there is no incompatibility here? Can it be contended for a single instant that the framers of the Constitution ever intended that such dual powers as these, so unreasonable, so contradictory, should be vested in one and the same person?

But again. We find in section 11 of Article III that the governor—shall from time to time give to the general assembly information of affairs concerning the State, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge expedient.

If the theory, therefore, of the minority be correct, then we have the strange anomaly in the political organization of the State of Delaware of permitting a governor to vote in the senate of the State in favor of measures which he, as governor, deemed expedient to be enacted into laws, and which he, as governor, had recommended to the senate should be passed.

But not only so. We find in section 12 of Article III that the governor of the State may, in case of disagreement between the two houses in respect to the time of adjournment, adjourn them to such time as he (the governor) shall think proper, "not exceeding three months."

Consequently, if, as contended by the distinguished Senators of the minority, the governor can also be senator at one and the same time, and exercise both offices simultaneously from the same chair and in the same chamber, then the prerogative is conferred upon him by these dual powers, by his vote in the senate, to create a disagreement between the two houses, which fact alone would give him jurisdiction as governor to adjourn the general assembly to such time, not exceeding three months, as he might deem proper.

But again: The constitution of the State of Delaware provides that the governor may be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, while section 1 of Article V provides that "all impeachments shall be tried by the senate," and that "no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of all the senators."

If, then, the governor can, while exercising such office, also exercise the office of State senator, he would, in case of impeachment by the house of representatives, be eligible to a seat as a senator, and would therefore sit in judgment on himself, would be one of the judges in his own case, and by his vote might defeat a two-thirds vote in the senate, and in this manner secure for himself a verdict of "not guilty as impeached."

Mr. GRAY. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly. I should like to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad the Senator wants to hear me. I would ask him in regard to this argumentum ab inconvenienti, which is always one that must be taken with some grains of allowance——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is not the character of argument I am making now.

Mr. GRAY. Well, whatever you choose to call it. We will leave off the Latin, and call it an incongruity which the Senator has discovered in the constitution of Delaware, under the contention of the minority of the committee. That, perhaps, is better. I would ask the Senator if there is any greater incongruity in the case he supposes than would have existed under the law of the United States of 1792, providing for the succession to the Presidency, where there was neither a President nor Vice-President of the United States, that law having, as the Senator well remembers, provided that in that case, there being no President or Vice-President, the President pro tempore of the Senate should act as President of the United States; yet all the inconveniences or incongruities—if the Senator likes that word better—would have happened in the case of a President pro tempore of the Senate acting as President of the United States that he has enumerated in the case of a speaker of the senate of Delaware acting, under our contention, as the governor of the State, for I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1886, when that law was abolished, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, speaking through its then chairman, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], urged upon the Senate, as one of the reasons why the law should be changed, that it was exceedingly incongruous and inappropriate that the President pro tempore of the Senate should succeed to the office of President of the United States, or should act as President, because he would still be Senator, would be capable of sitting upon an impeachment, would be capable of representing his State, thereby giving it an undue advantage, and exercising all the duties that belong to the office of Senator, though he was then acting as President of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I frankly admit, Mr. President, that what the Senator from Delaware states is substantially correct; that in that case there would be the same incongruities, if that be the proper term I prefer incompatibility, but I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that in that case the contingency contemplated and provided for was so remote, by the very terms of the Constitution of the United States and the law of 1792, that there was scarcely any possibility, much less any probability, whatever that it would ever occur, and, as a matter of fact, it never did occur in the whole history of our Government.

Mr. GRAY. It came very near occurring.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. While I agree with the Senator in the main on that proposition, as to the similarity of the two cases, the Senator will agree with me, I trust, that the language of the law of 1792, by which the President pro tempore of the Senate might act as President of the United States, is entirely different from the corresponding language of the constitution of the State of Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. It is the same in substance.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Scarcely; the language of the act of 1792 was that the President pro tempore "should act."

Mr. GRAY. Yes; and the language of the constitution of Delaware is that the speaker of the senate "shall exercise the office."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the difference.

Mr. GRAY. I would ask the Senator, further, if he will indulge me so far, whether it was ever suggested in argument in the Senate or elsewhere that those incongruities to which I have referred, or inconveniences, were the reasons why the office of President of the United States could not be exercised by the President pro tempore?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not know how that is; it may not have been; I do not now remember. I have conceded, I think, all the Senator desires I should concede in reference to the point he makes.

Mr. GRAY. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But my answer, as I said before, is that under the Constitution of the United States and the act of 1792 the contingency provided for was so remote and removed so far away, being in the third degree, that it virtually does away with the point implied in the suggestion of the Senator.

Coming back again to that provision of the Delaware constitution which provides that the governor of the State may be impeached, I take it that it will be admitted by the minority and by those who oppose the seating of Mr. Du Pont that the speaker of the senate who succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, whatever you may call him or however he exercises the office, is subject to impeachment. I will assume that that is conceded, in fact it can not well be denied.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator whether the acting governor would not be subject to impeachment as senator?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That depends on the constitution of Delaware on that subject. I think not, however. I think there is no such provision in the constitution applicable to a senator, but possibly there may be; I have not examined as to that. Has the Senator the constitution before him?

Mr. VILAS. "The governor and all other civil officers under this State shall be liable to impeachment," the Delaware constitution says.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he can imagine for what a senator who had taken the oath of office as governor and was acting as governor could be impeached and what the process would be?

Mr. VILAS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Oregon or trespass on his good nature, but I was asking whether a senator could be impeached while exercising the office of governor and while he was holding an office under the State.

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps he might be if he were not a United States Senator while he was a State senator.

Mr. VILAS. Probably that is the best answer that can be made.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will answer the Senator—the question is not a difficult one to answer. Whether a State senator of the State of Delaware can be impeached or not is a question, in the first place, which, as it seems to me, is entirely foreign to the question under consideration, but the query, whether he can or can not be impeached depends entirely on whether there is anything in the constitution of Delaware providing for the impeachment of members of the Delaware legislature.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to read the clause of the constitution of Delaware which refers to it? Article V, section 2, provides that—

The governor, and all other civil officers under this State, shall be liable to impeachment for treason, bribery, or any high crime or misdemeanor in office.

Mr. VILAS. I supposed that was so. If the Senator will allow me to make this suggestion, he will see the force of what my question was. If a senator of the State is subject to impeachment, all the evils which the Senator from Oregon has suggested in the case of impeachment of the speaker of the senate, acting as governor, will apply to any case of the impeachment of a senator, for he would then sit in his own case.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me one word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I will state that the constitution of Delaware says, "The governor and all other civil officers shall be liable to impeachment," but it does not say that a senator can be impeached as a senator while he is acting as governor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No, it does not.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is where the constitution is defective.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Oregon was arguing that the acting governor could not be a senator, because in the case of his impeachment he would be sitting as a judge in his own case. It would be precisely so if a senator is impeached not as speaker or acting governor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether a member of the legislature, either of the senate or the house, of any State of the Union, or of the United States of America, is an officer of the Government? We are not considered as officers of the Government; we are not called officers, and can not be impeached as officers, though we may be removed.

Mr. GRAY. I will say to the Senator from Ohio, the whole case of the majority of the committee falls if a senator is not an officer.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not for one moment, as by express provision the governor is such civil officer, but as to whether a member of the Delaware legislature is so as to subject him to impeachment, as very properly suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], may be a matter of considerable doubt.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that this is a good point to let the Senator from Oregon go on with his argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If I may be permitted, I shall proceed to call attention to other and further provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware which, by what I would call express inference, inhibit the exercise of the dual offices of governor and legislator by the same person at the same time.

Does the Senate believe that the exercise by the same person simultaneously of offices so incompatible as those to which I have attracted attention, involving the exercise of functions so utterly conflicting and antagonistic to each other, and so repugnant to every sense of public propriety, was ever intended by the framers of the Delaware constitution to be exercised by the citizen of that State?

But still further. Section 7 of Article II provides that each house may, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, while section 14, Article III, provides that the governor shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature.

Hence it is if the governor can exercise legislative functions while exercising the office of governor, his vote in the senate may make up the two-thirds necessary to expel a senator, while his vote in the senate may defeat a two-thirds vote necessary to remove him as governor for inability.

But still more absurd is the theory of this right of dual exercise of functions rendered when we consider section 16 of Article II of the Delaware constitution,

That article provides that in case of a vacancy in the office of State treasurer in the recess of the general assembly, either through omission of the general assembly to appoint, or by the death, removal out of the State, resignation, or inability of the State treasurer, the governor shall fill the vacancy by appointment to continue until the next meeting of the general assembly.

It would be absolutely preposterous, a flagrant invasion of every sense of governmental propriety, to permit a governor in such case to act as a legislator and thus by his vote, and what is infinitely more potent, by his executive influence in the senate, defeat the election of a State treasurer, thus enabling him to appoint a man of his sole choice to that office.

Is there no incompatibility there? Does this Senate believe that the men who framed the constitution of the State of Delaware ever intended that the governor of the State should have the power to give the controlling vote in the legislature, defeating the election which rightfully belonged to the legislature, of the treasurer of the State, who is to handle the exchequer, and by virtue of that act acquire jurisdiction to appoint a creature of his own to that position?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to suggest there——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I would rather not. I prefer to go on. The Senator will have full opportunity to answer all these conundrums when I get through.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Of course I do not wish to interfere with the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But still another clause in the constitution clearly indicates the incompatibility of the two offices of governor and legislator.

Section 1 of Article III of the constitution provides as follows:

> The supreme executive powers of the State shall be vested in a governor.

While, therefore, the constitution designates the speaker of the senate as an eligible person to fill the office of governor, and as the person to fill it in the event of a vacancy, it is clear he can not, and does not, fill the office as senator, or because of the fact that he is the speaker of the senate, for the reason that the supreme executive powers of the State are, by the constitution, vested in a governor, and not in the speaker of the senate.

But there is a still further and most conclusive reason why it was never intended by the framers of the Delaware constitution that the same person should exercise simultaneously the offices of governor and senator. There is a clause in section 14, Article III, of the Delaware constitution, which reads as follows:

> If upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution, the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly, who shall immediately proceed to elect, by joint ballot of both houses, a person to exercise the office until a governor, elected by the people, shall be duly qualified.

It will be observed precisely the same phraseology is used here—that is, "shall exercise the office"—that is used in the case of the speaker of the senate. The language used in the case of the speaker of the senate is, "shall exercise the office," while in the case of the secretary of state it is, "if * * * there be no other person who can exercise said office * * * the secretary of state shall exercise the same"—that is, the office of governor.

So the language is in substance and effect precisely the same in the two cases, as all must agree.

It follows, therefore, if the speaker of the senate, who in case of a vacancy exercises the office of governor can, as claimed by the minority of the committee, still continue to exercise the office of senator and speaker of the senate, then also the secretary of state, who succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, can also continue to exercise the office of secretary of state. But considering the respective duties of executive and secretary of state, can anyone for one moment but believe that the two offices are in all respects so utterly incompatible, the functions of each are so absolutely variant from those of the other as to render the proposition that they can be held and exercised simultaneously by the same person little else than absolutely and ridiculously absurd. No lawyer taking an account of the respective functions of the two offices, the duties of the one intended to be as they are in a great measure a check on the action of the other, can believe for a moment that it was ever intended by the men who framed the Delaware constitution, that one person should at one and the same time be both governor and secretary of state, and yet, as we have seen, he succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor under precisely similar constitutional provisions as does the speaker of the senate. If the one can exercise the functions of both offices at one and the same time, then it necessarily follows the other can also do so.

NO SUPPORT IS GIVEN TO THE THEORY OF THE MINORITY BY THE USE OF THE WORDS "may choose" AND "SPEAKER pro tempore" IN SECTION 14 OF ARTICLE 3 OF THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION.

The minority of the committee seek to draw an argument in support of their contention that the speaker of the senate while exercising the office of governor does not become the governor, but remains senator and speaker of the senate, and as such, and not as the governor, exercises ex officio the office of governor, from the following provision in section 5 of Article II of the Delaware constitution relating to the election of a speaker pro tempore. This clause reads as follows:

> Each house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore.

The distinguished Senator from Indiana, great lawyer, distinguished in his profession, as we all concede him to be, sees in this clause not anything express, it is true, but what he designates a plain implication that there is no vacancy created in the office of speaker when the speaker succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor. No attempt, however, is made by the Senator to sustain this claim by any argument whatever. No suggestion even is offered in support of the proposition. The claim is simply made dogmatically; that is all.

The reasons for such a claim and the argument in support of it will perhaps come when the author of the proposition comes to address the Senate. Perhaps, however, from the fact that an argument in support of this proposition was advanced by counsel in their printed briefs filed with the committee in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont to a seat, I may be permitted to anticipate the argument that will probably be made, and answer it now.

Counsel in their printed brief base this claim on the use of the words "may choose" and "pro tempore," which occur in the clause of the constitution quoted. It is insisted the use of the words "may choose," in the latter part of such clause, simply implies a discretion in, and not a duty upon, the part of the senate to elect a speaker pro tempore in such a case; and that the use of the terms speaker pro tempore carries with it an implication of the contemporaneous official existence of another speaker a permanent speaker.

Mr. PLATT. In what clause of the constitution is that provision?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In section 5 of Article II.

I do not concede either of these propositions as a result of a proper legal construction of such provision, even if this provision stood alone, and the difficulty is much greater in reaching such a conclusion when considered, as the clause must be, in connection with other clauses of the constitution.

In response to the first suggestion that the use of the words "speaker pro tempore" carries with it any implication of the contemporaneous existence of another speaker, a permanent speaker, it is sufficient to attract attention to the innumerable American precedents of the election of a speaker pro tempore when there was no regular speaker. A speaker pro tempore is simply a speaker for the occasion, for the time being. There may or may not be another speaker in existence at the same time. Therefore, no argument in opposition to the theory for which I am contending can be drawn from the use in the provision quoted of the words "speaker pro tempore;" nor upon the other hand does the use of the words afford any argument in support of the theory of the minority of the committee.

While it is conceded if the framers of the Delaware constitution intended that the accession of a speaker of the senate to the exercise of the office of governor should create an absolute vacancy, then they might with propriety have provided for a permanent speaker. The fact, however, that they did not do so can not by any means be regarded as conclusive that such was not their intention. If, however, it was the intention of the framers of that constitution that the office of senator in such case should not become absolutely vacant, but that the right of the governor to exercise the office of speaker of the senate and senator while exercising the office of governor should be held in abeyance, be absolutely suspended during the time he should continue to exercise the office of governor, then the provision for the election of a speaker pro tempore was eminently proper; while the very fact that such provision was made ought to have great weight in that direction, if it is not indeed absolutely conclusive upon the question, that the framers of that instrument never intended that the dual functions of senator and governor, much less the treble functions of governor, senator, and speaker of the senate, should be exercised simultaneously by the same person, but that on the termination of the exercise of the office of governor the person so exercising such functions might resume his seat as senator and speaker of the senate. This is the most to be deduced from the use of the words "speaker pro tempore" in any view to be taken from such use in this connection.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to a fact under the constitution of Delaware. Has he noticed that his supposition as to the construction of the provision for a speaker pro tempore, namely, that the speaker might return to the speakership after the operation of his exercise of the office of governor, is without foundation and can not be sustained, since by the provisions of the constitution in relation to elections the office of speaker, with the right to preside in the senate, must always expire before he ceases to exercise executive authority? Under those circumstances would there be any necessity, on the idea of suspended duty, to elect a speaker pro tempore?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There would be a necessity so long as——

Mr. GEORGE. Not upon the idea that he was going to come back and take his seat, because he never could come back and take his seat.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not in the event that the exercise of the office of governor continued beyond the expiration of his term as senator.

Mr. GEORGE. It always does under the constitution of Delaware. It always extends beyond his term of speaker.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That, to my mind, if it be so as a matter of fact, is one of the most conclusive arguments that could possibly be advanced, that the speaker of the senate, when he succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, exercises that office not ex officio as senator, not ex officio as speaker of the senate, but as the governor of the State of Delaware. Besides, either the Senator from Mississippi, or the Senator from Indiana, who prepared the views of the minority in this case, is in error, for the latter cites as an argument in support of such views the fact—I quote from his printed views—that "Three persons, upon each of whom at different times devolved, under this clause, the exercise of the office of governor—John Sykes, Jacob Stout, and Caleb Rodney—speakers of the senate, who temporarily exercised the executive authority as such speakers, after they had exercised the office of governor ad interim returned to the senate and served out the terms for which they had been elected as senators in the senate."

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to answer that question right now?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I prefer to go on.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; but there is a very conclusive answer to that in the constitution of Delaware.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. So far as the use of the words "may choose" in this provision is concerned, it is clear under the well-settled rule that the word "may" as thus used should be construed "shall."

The rule is, said the court in Rex vs. Inhabitants of Derby (Skinner, 370), and in Rex et Regina vs. Barlow (2d Salkeld, 609), "where a constitution or a statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good, the word 'may' is the same as the word 'shall.'"

This rule has been followed both in England and the United States without any respectable dissent.

A statute of Illinois reads as follows:

> The board of supervisors may, if deemed advisable, levy a special tax, etc.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in construing this statute in the case of Supervisors vs. The United States (4 Wall., 435), opinion by Mr. Justice Swayne, said:

> The conclusion to be deduced from the authorities is that where power is given to public officers in the language of the act before us, or in equivalent language, where the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise, the language, though permissive in form, is in fact, peremptory.

So again, in Steines vs. Franklin Company (48 Mo., 167) the court held that when a statute provides that the county court "may" submit the question to the voters before incurring certain expenses, it must do so.

And again, in Mitchell vs. Duncan (7 Fla., 13) it was held that the word "may" should be construed as "shall" where a statute directs the doing of a thing necessary to the ends of justice.

Again, in People vs. Brooklyn (22 Barb., 404) it is held that the word "may" will be construed as "shall" where the good sense of the entire enactment requires it.

While in the case of Mayor vs. New York (3 Hill, 612) the supreme court of that State said:

> Where a public body or officer has been clothed by statute with power to do an act which concerns the public interest, or the rights of third persons, the execution of the power may be insisted on as a duty, though the phraseology of the statute be permissive merely.

Surely the public interests, as well as the rights of third persons, require—absolutely demand—that a new speaker be elected, either permanently or pro tempore, when the speaker leaves the senate and enters upon the exercise of the office of governor.

There is no support, therefore, it is respectfully submitted, to be drawn from this provision of the Delaware constitution in favor of the theory set up by the minority of the committee.

A DIFFERENT DISABILITY IS APPLIED TO PERSONS INVOLVED IN ARMY AND NAVY CONTRACTS FROM THAT APPLIED TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS AND PERSONS HOLDING OFFICE UNDER THE UNITED STATES AND THE STATE OF DELAWARE.

It is contended by those opposing the seating of Mr. Du Pont that the following clause in section 12, Article II, of the Delaware constitution can not by any reasonable or fair construction amount to a provision that the seat in the senate held by Watson when he succeeded to the office of governor shall not be subject to occupation by anyone during the time Watson exercises the office of governor. It is claimed by the opposition that at most it could only amount to a personal disqualification, leaving the seat absolutely vacant and subject to be filled by another senator to be chosen at a special election by the electors of Kent County. This provision reads as follows:

> SEC. 12. * * * No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia holding no disqualifying office shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.

Counsel, in their printed argument in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont, filed with the committee, seek to draw an argument in opposition to the theory that the right to exercise the office of senator can be and is held in abeyance, suspended, during the continuance of the exercise of the office of governor, by placing persons concerned in army or navy contracts under precisely similar disabilities with members of Congress, and persons holding office under the State of Delaware or the United States, and then they conclude, if this provision means not, that the office of senator becomes absolutely vacant when the speaker of the senate enters upon the exercise of the office of governor, but simply that it shall, during such exercise of the office of governor, not be subject to occupation, then it must also mean that in the case of an army or navy contractor his seat will not become absolutely vacant, but simply that it would not be subject to occupation.

In other words, the claim of the opposition is—and just what it would amount to, even were it well founded, is a matter somewhat obscure—that if the office is simply in abeyance, suspended, in the one case, then it is also in the other; that is, if it is simply held in abeyance and suspended in the case of a member of Congress, or in the case of a person holding office under the United States or under the State of Delaware, then it is simply suspended precisely to the same extent in the case of a person involved in an army or navy contract.

This, Mr. President, it is submitted, is a grave misapprehension and misconstruction of the clause in question. The clause does not place army and navy contractors in precisely the same category with members of Congress and persons who hold office under the State of Delaware or the United States. It does not apply precisely the same character of disability, or at least while there is no doubt whatever as to the character of the disability applied to persons concerned in army and navy contracts, there is perhaps room for doubt as to the character of the disability applied to members of Congress and those holding office under the United States or the State of Delaware.

In the case of the member of Congress and persons holding office under the United States or the State of Delaware, the language is, "shall not during his continuance in Congress or in office be a senator or representative;" while the language of the constitution applicable to the army and navy contractor is, "No person concerned in any army and navy contracts * * * shall be a senator or representative." It does not say in this latter case "no person concerned in army or navy contracts * * * shall during his continuance in his contract be a senator or representative."

The distinction between the two clauses, or rather between the two applications of the same clause of the Constitution—that is, in its application to members of Congress and persons holding office under the United States or the State of Delaware on the one hand, and to those concerned in army or navy contracts on the other—is clear, distinct, and well defined.

In the case of a person concerned in army or navy contracts, it is clear beyond all question that the seat becomes absolutely vacant, and there is no room whatever for holding that it is simply held in abeyance or suspended during the continuance of his contract; while in the case of the member of Congress and of the person holding office under the United States or the State of Delaware, the clause may be and is open to two constructions—the one being either that the office becomes absolutely vacant, or, if not this, then it is clear beyond all question that the right of the person to exercise the office is held in abeyance and suspended so long as he continues to be a member of Congress, or to exercise an office under the United States or under the State of Delaware. It is, moreover, quite immaterial which of these two constructions is adopted as to the latter class of persons, as either one must result in the seating of Mr. Du Pont.

WHAT ARE THE PRECEDENTS, AND WHAT HAS BEEN THE USAGE IN THE STATE OF DELAWARE? THEY ARE BOTH OVERWHELMING IN SUPPORT OF THE THEORY OF THE COMMITTEE.

But the distinguished Senator from Indiana, in his views of the minority of the committee, after having laid down the broad proposition and attempted, as I think, vainly to prove it, that a speaker of the senate who succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, as did Speaker Watson in the case under consideration, does not become the governor, is not the governor, but still senator, still speaker of the senate, exercising the office of governor ex officio, or ad interim as he designates it, introduces in its support what he claims to be the contemporaneous construction of the Delaware constitution on this point by the government and people of Delaware. He says—I quote from the views of the minority—

"If this interpretation of the constitution of the State were at all doubtful, it is abundantly sustained by practical contemporaneous and continuous construction in the actual administration of the government of Delaware."

It is conceded by me if this question is by the terms of the constitution left in any doubt, then the construction placed upon the instrument by the departments and people of Delaware could be properly invoked for the purpose of shedding light on the question.

To this proposition of the views of the minority I reply—

First. The provisions of the constitution, as I have endeavored to show, to the effect that the two offices can not be simultaneously exercised by the same person are clear, plain, positive, unambiguous, nothing being left to construction, although the question as to whether the office becomes absolutely vacant, or only its functions suspended during his continuance in the office of governor may be open to construction; and Second. The facts quoted in the views of the minority for the purpose of showing usage and precedent, so far from vindicating the construction of the views of the minority, prove precisely the reverse.

That I may in no manner misrepresent the statement and views of the minority of the committee on this point, I quote in full from their views all that is said on that subject:

If this interpretation of the constitution of the State were at all doubtful—

Referring to the interpretation placed on it by the distinguished Senator who wrote the views of the minority—

it is abundantly sustained by practical, contemporaneous, and continuous construction in the actual administration of the government of Delaware. Three persons, upon each of whom at different times devolved, under this clause, the exercise of the office of governor (John Sykes, Jacob Stout, and Caleb Rodney), speakers of the senate, who temporarily exercised the executive authority as such speakers, after they had exercised the office of governor ad interim, returned to the senate and served out the terms for which they had been elected as senators in the senate. No suggestion was made that they had vacated their office as senators or had become governors of the State of Delaware by reason of the temporary exercise of executive duties imposed upon them by section 14, Article III, of the constitution.

Suppose these three persons did, Mr. President, after they ceased respectively to exercise the office of governor, return to the senate and serve out the terms for which they had been elected as senators, what does it prove? Does it prove that they had the right while exercising the office of governor to exercise the office of senator? Does it prove that there can be a simultaneous dual exercise of these two incompatible offices by the same person? Most assuredly not. On the contrary, if these three speakers of the senate did not, while exercising the office of governor, exercise or attempt to exercise the office of senator or speaker of the senate—and it is conceded they did not—then, in so far from being a precedent or establishing usage in favor of the construction contended for by the minority of the committee, it is just the reverse. The very precedents cited by the distinguished Senator from Indiana sustain and support the construction for which I am contending; that is, that while so exercising the office of governor he shall not be a senator in the sense that he would be entitled to exercise the functions of a senator, but, on the contrary, while so exercising the office of governor, his functions as senator are held in abeyance—absolutely suspended.

The very fact, therefore, that these three persons cited in the views of the minority refrained from any attempt to exercise the office of senator or speaker of the senate so long as they continued to exercise the office of governor, and when they ceased to exercise the office of governor resumed the exercise of the office of senator, proves as a precedent, if permitted to control, just two things:

First. That the office of senator does not become absolutely vacant on the speaker of the senate entering upon the exercise of the office of governor; and

Second. That on the speaker of the senate entering upon the exercise of the office of governor his right to exercise the office of senator and speaker of the senate for and during the time he continues to exercise such office of governor is held in abeyance—absolutely suspended.

This only is what is established, if anything, in the way of usage and precedent by the three cases upon which the minority rely. These precedents, however, as it is plain to be seen, so far from sustaining the position of the minority, are in direct line with and in support of my contention and the contention of the majority of the committee.

But not only so, Mr. President. I shall now proceed to show that in addition to the three cases cited in the views of the minority, the precedents for the last one hundred years have been uniform and overwhelmingly against the construction contended for in the views of the minority, and in favor and in support of the contention of the majority of the committee, and for which I am now contending, and to this I now attract the attention of the Senate.

Since 1792, nine speakers of the senate and one speaker of the house of representatives have succeeded to the office of governor of the State of Delaware, pursuant to the provisions of section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitutions of 1792 and 1831. Four of these were under the constitution of 1792, and six under the constitution of 1831. The constitution of 1831, with a slight amendment which does not affect this case, is the present constitution of the State of Delaware.

A critical examination of the record discloses the fact that in not one of these ten cases cited has any person who has succeeded to the governorship of the State of Delaware in the last one hundred and four years in virtue of this section 14—and so far as this question is concerned the constitutions of 1792 and 1831 are substantially similar—whether speaker of the senate or speaker of the house of representatives, taken any part whatever during his continuance in the exercise of the office of governor, in the proceedings of the senate or of the house of representatives, with the single exception of the present governor of the State of Delaware, Mr. Watson, and he only for a portion of one day and for a single purpose to defeat the election of a United States Senator.

During the one hundred and four years that have elapsed since the adoption of the Delaware constitution of 1792, although ten persons have succeeded to the office of governor to fill vacancies under the same or a similar provision of the constitution as that under which Mr. Watson succeeded, Mr. Watson is the only one in all that time who has attempted, while exercising the office of governor, to exercise the functions of senator, the other nine never having attempted to exercise the office of senator while continuing in the exercise of the gubernatorial office.

These several accessions to the exercise of the office of governor from the speakership of the senate and of the house were scattered along at different periods during the last one hundred years, as follows:

Daniel Rogers, speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor Gunning Bedford, who died September 30, 1797, ninety-eight years ago last September.

James Sykes, speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor Richard Bassett, who had created a vacancy in the office of governor by the acceptance of a judicial appointment under the United States.

In January, 1820, Jacob Stout, speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor James Clark, who died that month.

In April, 1822, Caleb Rodney, speaker of the senate, succeeded John Collins, who died in that month.

In June, 1823, Charles Thomas, speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor Joseph Haslet, who died in office.

These successions were all under the constitution of 1792.

On May 12, 1836, Charles Polk, then speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor Caleb P. Bennett, who died May 9, 1836.

On March 5, 1846, Joseph Maull, speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor Thomas Stockton, who died March 2, 1846.

On May 6, 1846, William Temple, speaker of the house of representatives, succeeded Governor Joseph Maull, who died May 3, 1846.

On March 1, 1865, Gove Saulsbury, speaker of the senate, succeeded Governor William Cammon, who died on that day.

While William T. Watson, the present governor of the State, as speaker of the senate, succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor on April 9, 1895, as we have seen, to succeed Governor Joshua H. Marvil, who died April 8, 1895.

Here, then, Mr. President, if precedent and usage are to count for anything in the determination of the case under consideration, and I concede they may, we have the uniform usage and precedents of the government and people of the State of Delaware, running through a period of a whole century, in favor of the construction of the Delaware constitution, to the effect that the two offices of governor and senator of that State can not be exercised simultaneously by the same person, and in only four out of the ten cases was there any attempt upon the part of the governor, who had become such in virtue of the provisions of the constitution in regard to vacancies, to resume the exercise of the office of senator or member of the house of representatives after the termination of their exercise of the office of governor.

Mr. PLATT rose.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut in a moment.

If, then, there were any doubt whatever as to the proper construction of the Delaware constitution upon this question, it would seem that this usage of a century, these precedents scattered along through a period of ninety-eight years, ought to be conclusive upon the subject.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will first yield to the Senator from Connecticut, who desired to ask me a question.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask a question, just for information.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In a moment. I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut first.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wanted to ask whether any of those four senators who went back and resumed the office of senator ever resumed the office of speaker, or whether they just resumed the office of senator. That is all I want to know.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think that does not appear. It does appear that they went back and resumed the office of senator. I think there is nothing in the case that would justify me in stating that they either did or did not resume the office of speaker.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all I wanted to ask.

Mr. PLATT. What I desired to ask the Senator from Oregon was whether there are instances in which the speaker of the senate or the speaker of the house who thus was called upon to exercise the office of governor continued to exercise the office of governor after the term for which he was elected had expired.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Oh, numbers of instances. It has just been stated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], that under the peculiar formation of the government of Delaware that must be so in every case, because the constitution of Delaware provides specifically that when the speaker of the senate or the speaker of the house of representatives succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, he shall continue to exercise the office of governor until a governor is elected by the people.

Mr. GEORGE. And properly qualified.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And properly qualified. Hence it throws over beyond the expiration of the term of senator the office of governor. To this, however, there must have been at least three exceptions out of the nine prior to Watson, otherwise Sykes, Stout, and Rodney could not have resumed their seats, as stated in the views of the minority.

Mr. PLATT. That would depend on whether the person took the office of governor during the last two years of his senatorial term, would it not? Mr. Watson, who takes it during the last two years of his senatorial term, would certainly be required to exercise the office of governor after his term would expire by law.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. They are elected every four years, I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Every four years.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Connecticut is, then, most probably correct, as I believe it is conceded as a matter of history that three persons who had succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor to fill vacancies, did, after their terms as governor had expired, resume their seats in the senate, as stated in the views of the minority.

But, Mr. President, there is another consideration in connection with the phraseology of section 14 of Article III of the Delaware constitution which goes far to dissipate and wipe out the theory that the speaker of the senate, who succeeds in case of a vacancy to the exercise of the office of governor, is a mere ad interim or ex officio governor. No difference, it will be observed, in the tenure of his office of governor is made in the cases where he succeeds to a vacancy created by death or by inability. In either case he is to continue in the exercise of the office "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified." Although the vacancy may be caused by a temporary inability upon the part of the governor elected by the people, rendering him unable to exercise the office, yet if the speaker of the senate in such case take the gubernatorial oath and enter upon the exercise of the office of governor, although the inability of the governor elected by the people may be removed the next week, he can not resume the exercise of the office of governor. His office by virtue of the express provision of the constitution of the State is forever gone. It can never be resumed by him, for the reason that the constitutional provision quoted declares in the most positive terms that the speaker of the senate, who has become the governor, has entered upon the exercise of the office, shall continue to exercise such office, not merely until such inability shall be removed, but "until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

A governor of the State of Delaware may suffer an inability that renders him unable to exercise the office of governor. Pending that inability, which may be but temporary, the speaker of the senate succeeds to the office of governor. The governor elected by the people may be restored to health, the inabillity may be removed within a day after the speaker of the senate has been sworn into office and assumed the office of governor, and yet that governor elected by the people, thus unfortunately stricken temporarily with disability, can never resume the office of governor again, unless he is again elected by the people. Why? Owing to the simple fact that the constitution declares in express terms that the speaker of the senate or the speaker of the house of representatives who succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, whether the vacancy is created by death or by inability, shall continue to exercise the office, not until the inability is removed, but until his successor is elected by the people and duly qualified.

Mr. GRAY rose.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think the matter is important as to any main issue in this argument, but it is interesting, and it has been raised by the Senator from Oregon for the first time so far as I know. Why would it not be competent for the governor, who by reason of his inability had vacated the office, so to speak, the speaker of the senate exercising office during that inability, to resume, upon his restoration to health, the office as a governor elected by the people, as he undoubtedly was?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That would be a stretch, it seems to me, of the language of the constitution.

Mr. GRAY. I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not think the provision is subject to a construction of that kind.

Mr. PLATT. "Until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. "Duly qualified."

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he would not think that he was duly qualified when his disability had been removed?

Mr. PLATT. I think that refers to a governor who shall be elected and take the oath.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Undoubtedly. The suggestion of the Senator from Delaware is an interesting one, but I can not think the provisions subject to such a construction.

Mr. GRAY. I do not insist upon it. It is a point that only occurred to me while the Senator was speaking.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Oregon is going to a new subject now—I do not know whether he has had his attention turned to this subject——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to finish the line of argument I am now on. I will yield to the Senator presently.

Mr. PLATT. All right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In this connection, it is well to contrast this provision in the Delaware constitution with the corresponding provision in the Constitution of the United States. The provision in the latter reads as follows:

In case of the removal of the President from his office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President.

In a case, therefore, where the office of President devolves on the Vice-President in case of a vacancy in the office of President occasioned by "inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office," while there is nothing in the Federal Constitution which in terms authorizes either the President to resume his office on the inability being removed, or the Vice-President in such event to resume his office of Vice-President, it is equally clear there is nothing in such Constitution which either in express terms or by any fair implication declares they or either of them shall not do it. But in the Delaware constitution it is wholly different, inasmuch as it declares that when the speaker of the senate succeeds to the governorship in the event of either the death, resignation, removal, or inability of the governor, he shall exercise such office, not merely until the inability is removed, but until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

There is, moreover, in section 9 of Article VI of the Delaware constitution a clause which can not be regarded as otherwise than a most convincing argument in favor of the theory advocated by the majority of the committee, and for which I am now contending, to the effect that there can not be under that constitution a simultaneous exercise by the same person of the offices of executive and legislator. That section provides that the governor shall have power to commission a judge ad litem to decide any cause in which there is a legal exception to the chancellor, or any judge, so that such appointment is necessary to constitute a quorum in either court.

It is further provided that the commission in such case shall confine the office to the cause, and it shall expire on the determination of the cause.

This same section further provides as follows:

A member of Congress, or any person holding or exercising an office under the United States, shall not be disqualified from being appointed a judge ad litem.

The fact that this exception in favor of a member of Congress and of any person holding or exercising an office under the United States, and permitting such member of Congress or other person holding an office under the United States to be appointed judge ad litem, and to exercise such office while holding or exercising the Federal office, adds strength and conclusiveness to the other provisions of the constitution, which declares that no person holding any office under the United States or the State of Delaware shall, during his continuance in office, be a senator, and which further declares, that no member of Congress or person holding any office under the United States or the State of Delaware shall exercise the office of governor.

But, furthermore, the constitution of the State of Delaware, section 7, Article III, provides, as do most State constitutions, that the governor shall be commander in chief of the army and navy of the State and of the militia, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States. Hence it is, if he is permitted to exercise the offices of governor and senator at one and the same time, then he exercises at once triple independent powers, first, as governor; second, as commander in chief of the army and navy of the State, and third, as legislator.

THE CORRESPONDING CLAUSES IN THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION AND THAT OF THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION CONTRASTED AND CONSIDERED.

In the discussion and determination of the question as to whether Speaker Watson became in fact and for every purpose the governor of the State of Delaware, with no right or power while exercising such office to exercise the office of senator and speaker of the senate, much light comes to us from a consideration of the corresponding clause in the Federal Constitution, and from the construction placed upon it by all departments of the Government, and by all the people of the United States, from the earliest history of our Government to the present time. And that it may be clear that this consensus of construction of this clause in the Federal Constitution may be properly regarded as applicable to the Delaware case, and therefore a proper precedent to be considered and applied, it is well to contrast the phraseology of the clauses in the Federal and Delaware constitutions.

In the Federal Constitution the language is, "the same shall devolve on the Vice-President." That is to say, either the "powers and duties" or the "office" of President shall "devolve on the Vice-President." There is a slight ambiguity in the construction of this clause, creating a doubt as to whether it is the "powers and duties" or the "office" which devolve on the Vice-President. But this is quite immaterial, as the meaning in either event is precisely the same.

While the language of the Delaware constitution is "shall exercise the office."

It is submitted the legal construction and effect of these two clauses are precisely the same. One says either the "office" or "the powers and duties" of the office shall devolve on the Vice-President, while the other says the speaker of the Delware senate "shall exercise the office"—that is, the office of governor.

It follows clearly, therefore, that what may be regarded as a controlling precedent in the one case should also be so regarded in the other in so far as the effect of these two particular clauses of the two constitutions is concerned.

It will not be denied that it has been decided and held by every department of the Government, and this decision recognized and acquiesced in by all the people of this country, that when a Vice-President succeeds a deceased President, he is not merely an ad interim President, he does not exercise the powers or perform the duties of President ex officio as Vice-President, but becomes the President in every constitutional sense of the term, with the one single exception—that relating to the duration of his term of office. Did not the House of Representatives in the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, and did not the Senate sitting as a high court of impeachment in his trial, recognize him, not merely as Vice-President performing ex officio the powers and duties of President, not merely as an ad interim President, but as the President in every constitutional and other sense of the term? If it be true, therefore, that Tyler, Fillmore, Johnson, and Arthur, on the deaths respectively of Harrison, Taylor, Lincoln, and Garfield, became respectively the President of the United States in every sense of that term, then it is equally clear that Speaker Watson, on taking the gubernatorial oaths of office, became the governor of the State of Delaware in every constitutional sense of that term.

Mr. PLATT. It has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that he does become President.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly. I said that it had been so decided by all departments of the Government, which of course includes the judiciary.

PROPOSITIONS ESTABLISHED.

Now, Mr. President, I believe I have demonstrated beyond the power of successful contradiction, and to their refutation I challenge the best efforts of the opposition, the following propositions:

First. That at common law no person shall exercise simultaneously two incompatible offices;

Second. That under the American system legislative and executive offices are incompatible, and can not be exercised simultaneously, unless expressly or by clear implication authorized, either by the fundamental law, or by a statute authorized by the fundamental law, and that such instances in America are the exception and not the rule, and no such exception exists under the constitution or laws of the State of Delaware;

Third. That the simultaneous exercise of the dual functions of executive and legislator is not only not authorized, either expressly or inferentially, by the Delaware constitution, but, on the contrary, by the express provisions of the constitution of that State, expressly inhibited;

Fourth. That in addition to these express prohibitory clauses in the Delaware constitution, and though they were eliminated from that instrument, there are various other clauses which by plain and necessary inference prohibit the simultaneous exercise of the offices of governor and State senator by the same person on the ground of the clear incompatibility of the two offices;

Fifth. That both at common law and under the American system the acceptance of an office by a person holding or exercising one, the duties of which are incompatible with those of the one accepted, is, in law, ipso facto a resignation of the office so held, and under certain circumstances a resignation of the right to exercise the functions of the former while exercising those of the latter, and no finding or judgment is necessary in a case where the facts are conceded, either by a legislative body, a judicial court, or any other tribunal, in order to vacate such office or establish such suspension;

Sixth. That when William T. Watson, as speaker of the Delaware senate, took the gubernatorial oaths and entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, he became the governor of the State in the full constitutional sense of that term, and not merely governor ex officio or ad interim as speaker of the senate, and his acceptance of such office was ipso facto a resignation in law, either absolutely of his office as senator, or at least of his right to exercise the office of senator, so long as he exercised the office of governor;

Seventh. And furthermore, as there is no fact in dispute necessary for the Delaware senate to pass upon, all the facts being open, public, notorious, and matters of public record, and of which all departments of the government will take judicial notice, besides being conceded by all parties to this controversy, there was nothing left for the Delaware senate to pass upon, any more than there would have been had William T. Watson been executed in pursuance of a judicial record, of which all would take judicial notice, sentencing him to be hanged;

Eighth. That the simultaneous exercise by the same person of the dual functions of the offices of governor and legislator, being not only expressly prohibited by certain provisions of the Delaware constitution, but also by various other provisions of that instrument plainly inferentially prohibited, William T. Watson, while exercising the office of governor of the State of Delaware, had no right or power to exercise the functions of either State senator or speaker of the senate, and hence his acts in entering the joint assembly of the members of the Delaware legislature on May 9, 1895, and voting for a United States Senator were ultra vires, wholly illegal, prohibited by the Delaware constitution, as also by the act of Congress of July 25, 1866, providing the manner of electing United States Senators, and therefore void; and Ninth. And as a necessary logical result of the foregoing eight propositions, there were but 29 legal votes in the joint assembly May 9, 1895, and the claimant, Henry A. Du Pont having received 15 of such votes, was duly elected Senator for the full term of six years commencing March 4, 1895.

HAS THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES THE RIGHT TO INQUIRE WHETHER GOVERNOR WATSON HAD THE RIGHT WHILE EXERCISING THE OFFICE OF GOVERNOR TO EXERCISE THE OFFICE OF STATE SENATOR AND VOTE FOR A UNITED STATES SENATOR?

This brings me, Mr. President, to a consideration of the question, Has the Senate of the United States the right, on the open, notorious, publicly and universally conceded facts of this case—namely, that William T. Watson, on April 9, 1895, while senator and speaker of the Delaware senate, succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor to fill a vacancy created by the death of the governor of that State, and the further fact that while exercising such executive office he entered the joint assembly on May 9, 1895 and cast the controlling vote for United States Senator—to inquire into the right of said Governor Watson to enter such joint assembly and into the legality of his vote therein?

The minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections insist we have no such right. It is insisted by such minority and by those indorsing the views of the minority that, notwithstanding these conceded facts, the United States Senate is foreclosed and precluded from inquiring into or passing upon this question. And this contention, it must be remembered, if good at all, must be good or not at all on the assumption that our claim as to the illegality of the presence and vote of Governor Watson in the joint assembly May 9, 1895, is well founded. Such contention can not proceed on the hypothesis that the claim of the majority of the committee as to that question is not well founded. The question now presented is not which claim—that of the majority or minority of the committee—is right or wrong. The question is, Has the Senate of the United States the power, under the constitutional grant to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, to inquire into and determine this question for itself? The minority of the committee say: No; this Senate has no such right.

If such, Mr. President, is the law of our being, if such a limit as this is to be placed upon the grant of power that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, then, indeed, does the Senate of the United States stand helpless as a child, wholly impotent either to protect itself against the admission to, or the exclusion from a seat in this body of a person either notoriously universally admitted to never have been elected on the one hand, or universally conceded to have been legally elected on the other. The announcement of such a doctrine may well awaken the surprise of Senators, and in support of such a theory it would seem that other and stronger reasons should be adduced than are vouchsafed in the views of the minority of the committee.

I shall now, Mr. President, endeavor to show, so far as I may, that this contention upon the part of the minority of the committee is not well founded, and can not for one moment be successfully defended or sustained.

And in the first place, that the precise question at issue may not be befogged by extraneous matter, and that there may be no misunderstanding of the position of the committee as represented by the majority, or of the position of the minority as represented in their printed views, I shall submit the following propositions; which I respectfully insist prescribe the true constitutional and legal rules on the subject now under consideration, and which are applicable to the Delaware case:

First. That the Delaware senate has the right, as has the Senate of the United States, to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

Second. In a case where the Delaware senate has inquired into and rendered judgment, either expressly or constructively, upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of a member, and he has been inducted into office, no fact or condition subsequently intervening which in law may operate, either to disqualify such incumbent or to make vacant a seat, or to permanently or temporarily suspend and hold in abeyance the right to exercise such office, such judgment having been uninfluenced by fraud—such adjudication of the Delaware senate, in so far as the facts involved are concerned, is conclusive, is binding on the Senate of the United States, and can not be inquired into here.

Third. The United States Senate, however, is not concluded in any case from inquiring into the right of a member of the Delaware senate to vote for a United States Senator where the State senate has never either actually or constructively rendered judgment as to such right. It is only concluded where there has been either an actual or constructive adjudication and such judgment has been either actually or constructively rendered.

Fourth. The exclusive power of the Delaware senate to inquire into the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members does not extend to or confer an exclusive power upon that body, either to pass upon a constitutional disqualification of a member, as a result of a fact conceded by all, namely, that such member as speaker of the senate has in virtue of a clause of the Delaware constitution succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor, or to determine exclusively, or in a manner to be binding on the Senate of the United States, as to whether the seat in the Delaware senate occupied by Watson when he succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor was or was not subject to occupation temporarily or permanently, either by Watson or by anyone else. Both these questions, whether the Delaware senate adjudicates and renders judgment therein, either actually or constructively, or not, are open questions here, to be inquired into and determined for itself by the Senate of the United States, under the constitutional grant of power to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

These four propositions, Mr. President, I assert as sound in law and logic, and directly applicable to the case now under consideration.

It is claimed by the minority of the committee that the questions as to the elections, returns, and qualifications of William T. Watson to a seat in the Delaware senate was, in January, 1893, two years and four months before he, as speaker of the senate, succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor constructively, if not actually, passed upon in his favor by the Delaware senate, and he then took his seat as senator, was elected speaker of that body, and continued, with only occasional absences, to exercise the offices of state senator and speaker of the senate until April 9, 1895.

This is all conceded by me. As to this, therefore, there is no contention. It is admitted by the majority of the committee and by all parties to this controversy.

It is contended, furthermore, by the minority of the committee in their views, that Watson's right to a seat having been thus passed upon by the Delaware senate in 1893, and such senate never having afterwards passed judgment of disqualification on the admitted facts of his having succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor, the hands of the United States Senate are tied; that the Senate is by the adjudication of the Delaware senate in 1893 precluded from inquiring into the fact as to Watson's right to exercise the office of senator in May, 1895, while exercising the office of governor. This proposition I emphatically deny.

It is furthermore claimed by the minority, as a matter of fact, that the Delaware senate did, while Watson was exercising the office of governor, adjudicate as to his right to exercise the office of senator while exercising the office of governor. This I also emphatically deny. And upon this question of fact I insist the testimony that can legally and properly be considered is overwhelming and conclusive against any such claim.

Before proceeding to the consideration of this question of fact, however, I will endeavor to show that in no event, whether the Delaware senate did or did not pass upon the question as to the right of Governor Watson to a seat in the joint assembly, is the Senate of the United States concluded from inquiring into and passing upon this question. The exercise of this right, Mr. President, upon the part of this body is in no sense any invasion of the exclusive right of the Delaware senate to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. This power to judge extends only to the filling of seats subject to occupation. It is a power limited and controlled by several constitutional limitations, and, first, by the constitutional provision determining as to the number of seats to be filled; and second, by other provisions of the same constitution, declaring either expressly or inferentially, or both, that a certain person, member of the senate, shall, upon the happening of a certain contingency while he is such senator, no longer exercise such office as senator, or that upon the happening of a certain contingency, as, for instance, a senator succeeding to the exercise of the office of governor to fill a vacancy, the seat held by him as senator shall not, while he continues to exercise the office of governor, be subject to occupation either by him or anyone else.

To permit the Delaware senate to do this, under its conceded exclusive power to judge of the qualifications of its members, would be to permit a no more flagrant exercise of power than would be the case if permitted to determine that the senate of the State of Delaware shall consist of ten members when the constitution declares it shall consist of but nine.

Mr. PLATT. I thought the Senator conceded—I do not know that he did—more than I should be willing to concede as to how far the Senate was concluded by the action of the State legislature in passing upon the qualifications of a senator. I wish to know whether the Senator goes so far as to hold that if the legislature of Delaware had admitted a senator who confessedly was only 21 years of age, and passed upon his election, qualification, and return, and seated him, we would not be permitted to inquire whether such senator was or was not 27 years of age?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I shall discuss that very question. I hold nothing of the kind; but I do concede now, I will say to the Senator—because I propose to argue this case precisely as I understand it and the law applicable to it—that although there is a provision in the Delaware constitution which states that a person, in order to be entitled to a seat in the Delaware senate, must be 27 years of age, if the Delaware senate should admit a person claiming a right to a seat in that body, after having adjudicated upon the question of fact as to his age, and there was nothing on the face of the record to show what his age was, then the decision of the Delaware senate would, in my judgment, in the absence of fraud practiced on the senate, be conclusive on the Senate of the United States as to that fact.

Mr. PLATT. I would not concede that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It would be conclusive, in my judgment on the judicial tribunals of the country, and on every other tribunal. I shall answer the question more fully, however, and define my position more at length, a little later on. I may say here now, however, if, on the contrary, the senate of Delaware should, by resolution, for instance, declare that, "whereas Richard Roe has to-day applied for a seat in the Delaware senate from the county of Kent, said Richard Roe being of the age of 20 years, and while that is not just what is called for by the constitution, we think there ought to be no vacancy in the senate from the county of Kent, therefore we admit him," and he is admitted, I say that is an adjudication which would be absolutely void and would not conclude anybody.

Mr. PLATT. I can not concede so much as the Senator does.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I concede that much, believing it to be a sound doctrine, and the well-settled rule of law on this subject.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose there is a dispute about the age, would we have the power to decide then whether the senate of Delaware decided correctly or not?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am very clear upon that point. My opinion is upon the question of fact as to the age of an applicant that the Delaware senate is the exclusive judge, subject to the conditions I have stated, but if they, in determining that fact, show on the face of their judgment that the party was not entitled to a seat, then it is an open question, and concludes nobody.

Mr. PLATT. Suppose, males only being qualfied for a seat in the legislature of Delaware, they chose to admit a woman, would the Senate of the United States be concluded by that?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is a case within the exception I cited. It would appear on the face of the record, and such a judgment or finding of fact declaring a woman a man would not be conclusive in any tribunal.

Suppose there were a clause in the Delaware constitution declaring in express terms that in the event of the speaker of the senate succeeding to the exercise of the office of governor, so long as he continues to exercise the functions of governor neither he nor anyone else shall exercise the office of senator vacated by him, and that during such period the senate of the State of Delaware shall consist of but eight members, would it be contended for one moment in such case that, notwithstanding such a provision, the Delaware senate possessed not only the right and power, but the exclusive power, to admit the governor to a seat in the senate, and that such act would be binding on the Senate of the United States?

But, Mr. President, although the Delaware constitution does not say this in the precise terms I have just stated, it is insisted by the majority of the committee—and I now confidently insist it means precisely that, nothing more, nothing less—hence it is a question arising not out of any disputed facts concerning the right of a person to a seat, in which case I concede the judgment of the State senate as to the facts found, nothing more, however, will be binding upon the United States Senate, but one arising out of the construction of the fundamental law of the State, and upon a state of facts in reference to which there is no dispute; hence it is a question not within the exclusive control of the Delaware senate in the exercise of its power to judge as to the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

The exclusive power of the Delaware senate to judge as to the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members does not include the right or the power to determine as to the number of persons the senate shall consist of, either permanently or temporarily. That is a question to be determined either by the fundamental law or the statutes of the State, or both; and if upon this question there is any doubt, or, indeed, even if it is one free from doubt, and the senate decides either way, in the former case, or in the latter, directly contrary to the plain mandate of the law determining the number, then, in either event, the judgment of the State senate is not conclusive on the United States Senate, much less is this body concluded, when, as in the case under consideration, as I shall presently show, there has been no adjudication whatever, either actually or otherwise, upon the part of the Delaware senate.

In other words, any judgment of the Delaware senate, either actual or constructive, as to the right of a person to sit to be conclusive on this body, must relate to a seat in the senate subject to occupation, and the determination of this question as to whether a seat is or is not subject to occupation, either permanently or temporarily, is one depending on a proper construction of the fundamental law of Delaware.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the Senator will allow me to proceed. I shall answer any question later. I wish this part of my argument to be connected.

Hence, it is a question not within the exclusive power of the Delaware senate to determine. And whether the province of determining it is or is not assumed by such State senate, or if assumed, no matter what may be the character of the decision, it is not binding on the United States Senate. It is not binding in such a case any more than would be a decision of the Delaware senate seating a tenth person as a member of that body when the constitution declares emphatically that the membership shall be but nine. The power given to the State senate by constitutional provision to judge as to the qualifications of its members is to judge of the qualifications of persons who apply for admission to seats, which seats are provided for by the constitution of the State and not by the judgment of the senate.

This power to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of members does not include the power to admit a claimant to a seat not subject to occupation under the constitution of the State. Any such judgment by the Delaware senate would be a mere brutum fulmen, an act in all respects ultra vires, absolutely void, and in no respect binding on the United States Senate.

Furthermore, if any question of fact is involved in the claim of a person to a seat in the State senate, and this question of fact relates to any one of the four constitutional qualifications of a Delaware senator, it is the exclusive province of such senate to determine such question of fact within the rule and subject to the limitations I have stated, and such determination, I concede, would be binding on the Senate of the United States. But beyond this this body is not bound. If after finding certain facts, which finding is binding here, the Delaware senate in seating a member misconstrues the fundamental law, or in any sense passes upon a question of constitutional or statutory construction as to the right either of a seat to be filled at all or to be filled by a particular person, when under the facts found concerning him he is by the constitution excluded from exercising the office of senator, then such judgment of the State senate is not conclusive, is not binding upon this body.

I come now to the question suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. For instance, the constitutional power of the Delaware senate to judge as to the qualifications of its members does not empower that body by its judgment to admit a member who, it is conceded by all the facts found or admitted, does not possess a certain qualification required by the constitution of the State. Such a judgment is not binding on this body.

For instance, the Delaware constitution provides that a person to be eligible to a seat in the senate of that State must be 27 years of age. If the Delaware senate adjudicates upon this question and admits a claimant to a seat, nothing appearing to the contrary, such judgment, it is conceded by me, is binding as to the fact of the member's age, though, as a matter of fact, he may be but 20 years of age, the presumption being, nothing appearing to the contrary, that he was of the required age. But suppose in such a case the finding spread upon the journal of the senate is to the effect that the claimant is but 20 years of age, but to the end that there might be no vacancy and the senate may have its full membership, he is admitted by the senate and gives the casting vote in the election of a United States Senator, will it be seriously contended that such adjudication, such a judgment, void on its face, could preclude the United States Senate from inquiring into his right to vote for a United States Senator?

My friend from Connecticut would perhaps go a step further than I do, and say that in any event, whether it appears on the face of the judgment or otherwise, the Senate would not be precluded. He may be right. I quite agree, as I have already stated, such judgment could be attacked here in a proper case for want of jurisdiction appearing on its face. And I think I should also go so far as to hold it might also be attacked if it could be shown a fraud had been perpetrated upon the State senate; otherwise I should regard the adjudication of the legislative body of the State conclusive as to all the facts.

As bearing upon this phase of the case, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the following American authorities, which, it seems to me, are directly in point:

AUTHORITIES.

In Prouty vs. Stover (11 Kans., 235) the validity of the election of a State printer by a joint assembly of the Kansas legislature was assailed. The question arose whether the action of the State senate, admitting and retaining certain senators, was made conclusive of their right to sit in the senate and vote in the joint assembly by the constitutional provision which made each house "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." This action of the senate practically construed the law of Kansas to recognize certain seats in the senate as subject to occupation. It was claimed that this was conclusive on the courts. But the court held that the power of the senate to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members did not include the power to conclusively construe the law to recognize the seats as subject to occupation, or to admit or retain the occupants of those seats. Judge Brewer, now the distinguished associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

Defendants claim that this court can not look beyond the action of the house to inquire whether ersons admitted as members were legally entitled to seats. Aicle 2, section 8, declares that each house "shall be judge of the eelections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." Its determination is not the subject of repeal or review. It is final and concludes everyone. But what is included in this power? Does the power to judge of the qualifications of its members include the power to increase such membership? Can it enlarge its members without limit? Is it, like an academy of science or a lodge of Odd Fellows, capable of indefinite expansion? If like law fixed the number of senators at twenty-five, could those twenty-five admit twenty-five more, on pretense of judging "of the elections and qualifications of its own members," and thus create a senate of fifty members? If this power exists, how easily could a partisan majority secure to itself a two-thirds vote, by simply admitting new members. To create a representative or senatorial district requires a law—the consent of both houses. Neither house, by itself, can create a district and then admit someone to represent it. The district must exist before it can be represented.

In State vs. Francis (26 Kans., 724) it was contended that a certain act of the legislature had failed to receive a constitutional majority of votes, and was, therefore, void.

The question was whether four of the representatives whose votes were decisive in favor of this act, in the house, were lawful members of that body. The house of representatives, by its action admitting and retaining these four members, had construed the law and constitution to recognize their seats as subject to occupation at the time. The court overruled this construction, held that there were no seats in the house for these four representatives, and declared the act in question to be void. The court said:

Therefore, whenever the house of representatives consists of more than 125 members, some of such members must be there illegally. Such was the case in 1879. The house of representatives at that time consisted of 129 members. Four of these members, to wit, the 4 from Rooks, Rush, Harper, and Kingman counties, who were not provided for by law, and who were the last members admitted to seats, were not entitled to their seats. And the act in controversy was passed only by the assistance of their votes. Except for their votes, or at least three of their votes, the act would not have received a constitutional majority of the votes of the members of the house; and, not counting their votes, the act did not receive a constitutional majority. Now, we do not think that their votes should be counted, and, therefore, we think the act in controversy must be held as not having passed the house of representatives, and as void.

Ih Yard vs. Meeser (44 Penn. St., 341) the common council of Philadelphia, which was invested with the power to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, had construed the law to recognize two seats as subject to occupation by representatives of the Fifth ward, and had admitted a second member from that ward. The court, in an action to restrain the payment of the salary of the second councilman from this ward, overruled the construction given to the law by the common council, held that the law did not recognize the second seat, and declared that its occupant was not a lawful member of the common council. The court said:

This court has no authority to judge whether the election was regularly conducted or not, for that duty is assigned by law to the councils. Our duty must be confined to the decision of the question whether there was an office or vacancy to be filled.

Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, pages 52–55, says:

It follows, therefore, that every Department of the Government, and every official of every Department, may, at any time when a duty is to be performed, be required to pass upon a question of constitutional construction. Sometimes the case will be such that the decision, when made, must, from the very nature of things, be conclusive and subject to no repeal or review, however erroneous it may be in the opinion of other Departments or of other officers; but, in other cases, the same question may be required to be passed upon again, before the duty is completely performed. The first of these classes is where, by the Constitution, a particular question is plainly addressed to the discretion of some one Department or officer, so that the interference of any other Department or officer, with a view to the substitution of its own discretion or judgment, in the place of that to which the Constitution has confided the decision, would be impertinent and intrusive. * * * But there are cases in which the question of construction is equally addressed to two or more Departments of the Government; and it then becomes important to know whether the decision by one is binding upon the others, or whether each is to act upon its own judgment. * * * But setting aside now those cases to which we have referred, when from the nature of things, and perhaps from explicit terms of the Constitution, the judgment of the Department or officer acting must be final, we shall find the general rule to be that, whenever action is taken which may become the subject of a suit or proceeding in court, any question of constitutional power or right that was involved in such action will be open for consideration in such suit or proceeding, and, as the court must finally settle the particular controversy, so also will they finally determine the question of constitutional law.

This is a case, therefore, if there can be said to be any question open to construction, in which, in the language of Judge Cooley, "the question of construction is equally addressed to two or more Departments of the Government."

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. GRAY. State governments.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It does not say "State governments." It does not say anything about State governments.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will examine it he will see that it does.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is in all respects similar in principle to that class of cases referred to by this eminent jurist wherein action is taken which may become the subject of a suit or proceeding in court. Any question of constitutional power or right that was involved in such action will be open for consideration in such suit or proceeding, and the court must finally settle the particular controversy; so also will they determine the question of constitutional law. Here the Senate of the United States, being called to act judicially under the constitutional grant authorizing it to judge of the elections and qualifications of its own members—and this necessarily involves a construction of the Delaware constitution—hence, it is not bound, it is respectfully submitted, by any judgment of the Delaware senate on that subject.

If, as a matter of constitutional law, the offices of senator and speaker of the senate held by Watson became absolutely vacant when he succeeded to the executive office, any judgment of the State senate seeking to clothe him with power to hold or exercise the office of State senator would be a mere brutum fulmen, an act in all respects ultra vires, for the plain reason it would be a judgment assigning him a seat in the senate which, under the constitution, is not assignable or subject to occupation. Such an act upon the part of the Delaware senate would be something infinitely more in scope and effect than simply to judge of the qualifications of a person to a seat in the senate. It would be to declare a seat subject to occupation which the constitution declares shall not be occupied.

And this view is equally applicable to this case whether the office of senator becomes absolutely vacant on the speaker of the senate becoming governor, or whether the right to exercise the office of senator while exercising the office of governor is merely held in abeyance and suspended. And any such judgment, it is respectfully submitted, is not binding on the Senate of the United States, and can not deprive that body, under its power to judge of the qualifications of its members, of determining whether under the constitution of the State of Delaware the governor of that State can be permitted to hold or exercise the office of senator at the same time he holds and exercises the office of governor.

THE MAINE CASE DIRECTLY IN POINT.

During the investigation of this case, Mr. President, my attention has been called by my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], to a case brought before the supreme court of the State of Maine, and reported in 7 Greenleaf, 483, which it will be found on careful inspection is directly in point, in strong support of the theory for which we contend; that is, that the person exercising the office of governor can not at the same time exercise the office of legislator. The facts and the decision of the court in this case will doubtless be brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Michigan when he comes to address the Senate on this case.

THE CASES CITED IN THE VIEWS OF THE MINORITY NOT APPLICABLE.

The cases cited, Mr. President, in the views of the minority in support of the contention that we are precluded here from inquiring into the right of the governor of Delaware, while exercising such office, to exercise the functions of senator, have, it is respectfully submitted, no application to the case under consideration.

Three cases, and only three, are cited: That of Sykes vs. Spencer, reported in Taft's Election Cases, page 521; that of David Turpie, decided in May, 1888, and those of Clark and McGinniss vs. Sanders and Power (Taft's Election Cases, page 637).

With the doctrine laid down in each of these cases I am not at war; on the contrary, I concede all that can be properly claimed for the principle enunciated in these cases. In none of these cases was there any constitutional question involved such as here.

In none of them was there any question as to whetner a particular seat was or was not open to occupation.

In the case of Sykes vs. Spencer the question was as to which of the two bodies claiming to be the legislature of the State of Alabama was the legislature; while in the Turpie case the question was whether the judgment of the Indiana senate as to the title of two members—Branahan and McDonald—was binding upon the Senate of the United States. In that case there had been an adjudication by the State senate—here there has been none—unseating two members and seating two others in their places. The question involved was one purely of fact growing out of alleged frauds in the election. The senate adjudicated this question of fact. No question as to the right of these two seats to be occupied under the Indiana constitution was involved. Consequently the Senate of the United States very properly held that the judgment of the Indiana senate was conclusive on this body. As showing the clear distinction between the Turpie case and the one we are now considering, I beg to read the following extract from the report of the committee in this case, submitted by me February 18.

THE DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN THE DU PONT CASE AND THE TURPIE CASE.

The question for consideration here is widely different from that presented to this committee in the Turpie case, in the first session of the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. GRAY. From what case is the Senator reading?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am reading from my report.

Mr. GRAY. In this case?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In this case, to show the distinction between this case and the Turpie case. I read from page 20 of the report.

In that case, the Turpie case, there was no statutory, much less constitutional, question involved as to the number of seats in the Indiana senate open to occupation. The rights of two sets of claimants to two different seats confessedly open to occupation were in issue. There was no question, constitutional, statutory, or otherwise, as to their right to be filled, or as to the duty upon the part of the senate to fill them, provided persons having the requisite qualifications were legally elected and returned. It was not only the right, but the duty of the Indiana senate, under the constitutional provisions in that State, to judge as to which set of claimants was legally elected and returned, and whether these had the proper qualifications. In the performance of this duty the Indiana senate held the two sitting members were not entitled to their seats and that the two persons claiming the same were, and the sitting members were ousted and the claimants seated. And this committee and the Senate very properly held that in such case the action of the State senate was conclusive.

Here the question rises to one of infinitely greater importance, involving an inquiry not only as to the qualifications of a person claiming a seat, but the question as to whether, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, there was any seat to be occupied. Argument to show the distinction between the two cases is unnecessary. The mere statement of the difference in the cases carries with it all the argument required.

But still further. In the Indiana case it was not questioned that the senate of Indiana had actually passed upon the question and judged actually of the right of the two claimants who were admitted to the seats to which they were admitted, while here it is clear there was no judgment of the senate of the State of Delaware, either actual or constructive, upon the right of the governor of the State of Delaware to hold or exercise the duties of senator.

Mr. CHANDLER rose.

Mr. GRAY. One moment. I wish to ask a question. If on the theory that there was a vacancy in the senate of Delaware from Kent County by the exercise of the office of governor by Mr. Watson, a person had been elected to fill that vacancy, and had appeared with his credentials, would not that have presented a question which the senate of Delaware in that case would have been competent to pass upon?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It would have presented a case which in the first instance the senate of Delaware would have the right to pass upon, but if in passing upon it they had admitted the person to a seat or had refused to admit him, no matter what the judgment might have been, such judgment would not have been conclusive upon the Senate of the United States, from the fact that it involved a construction of the provisions of the Delaware constitution and not merely a question of fact.

Mr. GRAY. Suppose, then, the question had been between a person coming with such a credential and Mr. Watson, who was exercising the office of governor, and they had decided in favor of Mr. Watson; would that have been a case upon which the Senate of the United States would be competent to pass, under the Senator's theory?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly it would; but the judgment rendered would not be conclusive here for the same reason.

Mr. GRAY. What difference is there between deciding upon the question whether there is a seat open to occupation and deciding upon the question whether there is a person qualified to fill it?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All the difference in the world. The questions are very different. The constitution and the law determine the former while the senate determines the latter.

There are just four qualifications prescribed by the constitution and laws of the State of Delaware upon which the senate of the State of Delaware has a right to act in admitting a person to a seat: First, he must be of a certain age; second, he must own a certain amount and kind of property of a certain value; third, he must be and must have been a citizen and inhabitant of the State for a certain length of time; and, fourth, for the last year immediately preceding his election he must have been an inhabitant of the county from which he was elected. Upon those qualifications, and those only, I contend the senate of the State of Delaware has the right to pass, under the power given it by the constitution of the State to judge of the elections returns and qualifications of its own members. I shall, however, speak upon this feature of the case later on in my argument.

Mr. GRAY. What I meant to ask was whether the whole question is not as to whether A B or C D is qualified to fill it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is clearly not, as I view the case.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask a question of the Senator, simply to ascertain what is his exact position. Does the Senator wish to be understood as denying to the senate of Delaware, in judging of the election and qualifications of its members, the power to construe the constitution of the State?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Delaware senate has a right, and not only a right, but it is its duty, in the first instance, in passing upon the question of the qualifications of a senator, to construe the constitution and laws of the State, but if in doing so it makes a mistake——

Mr. GEORGE. We can correct it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. We can correct it.

Mr. GEORGE. That is it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Undoubtedly; and we are not concluded in any event whether a mistake has been made or not. It is an open question for us. We might reach the same conclusion as did the State senate in a given case or we might reach a different conclusion.

Mr. GEORGE. In other words, the Senator from Oregon believes that the Senate of the United States on a question of law has revisory power over the senate of Delaware?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do; especially where the construction of the fundamental law is involved.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to conclude his remarks to-night?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am rather tired, and I will yield the floor and conclude my speech to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PASCO. With the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire, I should like to call up a bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the motion.

SUBPORTS OF ENTRY AND DELIVERY IN FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1767) to provide for subports of entry and delivery.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that such places in the collection districts in the State of Florida as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time designate shall be subports of entry and delivery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for subports of entry and delivery in the State of Florida."

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITES, HASTINGS AND NORFOLK, NEBR.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 772) to provide for the purchase of sites for public buildings in the cities of Hastings and Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire title to sites in the cities of Hastings and Norfolk, Nebr., on which to erect suitable buildings for the use of the United States post-office and other Government offices in those cities, the cost of the sites, respectively, not to exceed the sum of $10,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STAMFORD, CONN., SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a port of delivery. It will take but a moment, I think.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Stamford, Conn., be, and is heruby, constituted a subport of entry for the customs collection district of Fairfield, Conn.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill constituting Stamford, Conn., a subport of entry."

FACILITIES FOR FEDERAL COURTS IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2053) to provide better facilities for the Federal courts in New York City.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make certain proposed alterations in the post-office building in New York City, and to improve, arrange, and furnish certain rooms therein in accordance with plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. Sixty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary therefor, is proposed to be appropriated for such purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAMPTON ROADS IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 79) directing the Secretary of War to furnish an estimate for deepening the channel from Hampton Roads to the navy-yard at Norfolk, Va., and also for improving the Western Branch of the Elizabeth River.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. WILLIAM LORING SPENCER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the relief of William Loring Spencer. This bill has been read at length and it has been debated. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HILL. Is it a pension bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. HILL. I thought we would take those bills up on a certain day and put them all through.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not the absolute rule. If objection is made of course I shall not press the bill at this time.

Mr. HILL. I do not object.

Mr. BERRY. Is this the same bill which was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. BERRY. What is the amount now proposed?

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee reports an amendment recommending $75.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Loring Spencer, widow of George E. Spencer, late colonel First Regiment Alabama Cavalry, at the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENNSYLVANIA EMERGENCY TROOPS.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 490) to indemnify the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "expended," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the amount to be paid to the State of Pennsylvania under the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $46,345.26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CHARLES COLLEGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill (S. 75) for the relief of St. Charles College be taken up and considered. A similar bill has been passed by the Senate in two former Congresses.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the alleged use and occupation by the United States military authorities for Government purposes during the late war of the college buildings and grounds of St. Charles College, in St. Charles County, Mo., the actual value of such use and occupation, and to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what amount, if any, is equitably due to the college from the United States as the reasonable value of such use and occupation, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the St. Charles College the amount, if any, so found to be due from the United States.

Mr. PLATT. What is the amount appropriated by the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no amount specified in the bill. It is to be determined by an investigation. The amount claimed is some $3,000, I believe.

Mr. PLATT. Who is to make the investigation?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary of War, through the Quartermaster's Department, by which all such investigations are made. This measure has been referred to the Committee on Claims and has been two or three times reported favorably and passed by the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. In the same way?

Mr. COCKRELL. In the same form.

Mr. PLATT. I would rather put in the amount.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator from Missouri state again the amount. Is this a large amount?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. If it is a large amount it ought to be reported back to Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not a large amount.

Mr. PLATT. What is the amount?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not remember exactly now. It has been some time since I looked at the papers. It is, I think, not exceeding $3,000.

Mr. PLATT. I would rather put in $3,000 than make it indefinite.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would not want to put in any amount until I can look and see, but I think there is no objection to limiting the amount. I should like to look at the papers first.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator knows it is objectionable to pass unlimited bills of this sort, but I am perfectly well satisfied with the Senator's explanation that it is not a large amount.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, it is not a large amount. There is no question about that. If it were a large amount I should have insisted myself on limiting it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that if we put in a limitation of the amount it would probably reach that sum.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to the bill.

Mr. PASCO. I will state that this report comes from the Committee on Claims and is a unanimous one. It has been examined by that committee on several different occasions and has passed the Senate at least twice, and it is now reported in the same form as in the last Congress. There was no division in the committee on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did I understand the Senator from Florida to make any different statement from that of the Senator from Missouri as to the amount involved?

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. PASCO. The amount is small. It is not a large amount.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF BONDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BRICE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, after line 37, to insert:

Also, the certain bonds and indebtedness, $172,500 in amount, together with the interest coupons thereto attached, of the county of Santa Fe, Territory of New Mexico, dated March 1, 1882, issued under the provisions of an act of the Territorial general assembly known as the refunding act. Such bonds having been issued in refunding and in lieu of $150,000 of bonds and the overdue interest thereon of said county of Santa Fe, theretofore issued and outstanding, are hereby validated, approved, and confirmed.

It is intended hereby to validate, approve, and confirm any and all laws, proceedings, and bonds relating to the matter necessary to the validation of the said $172,500 of bonds, but no further and for no other purpose; but the United States shall not be held hereby to incur or create any indebtedness.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Ohio please explain the amendment? The bill originally was for $75,000 of bonds to enable them to build a State house which had been destroyed by fire. I think that is all right, but I do not understand the amendment. I could scarcely catch it as it was read. It proposes to validate the issue of $172,500 of bonds.

Mr. BRICE. The Committee on Territories had a full hearing and made a unanimous report in favor of the amendment, and were rather more in favor of the amendment, I think, so far as the equities were concerned, than of the original bill. The validation is of certain refunding bonds that were issued by the county of Santa Fe in lieu of certain other bonds that had been before that time issued in aid of a railroad, and about which there was some controversy arising out of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States since rendered. The validation in the amendment is precisely a similar one to that which was made by an act of Congress in the Southern Dakota case, which was passed by Congress and sustained by the Supreme Court. It is merely a validation of certain other bonds in addition to the bonds that were provided for in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. PLATT. When were those bonds issued?

Mr. BRICE. The first bonds?

Mr. PLATT. The first ones.

Mr. BRICE. There is a full report accompanying the bill. If the Senator desires to look into the matter——

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. BRICE. I will let it be passed over for the present, so that the Senator can examine the report.

Mr. PLATT. That is all right.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if I understood him correctly to say that this is a unanimous report by the committee?

Mr. BRICE. I do.

Mr. BERRY. There is no question about the justice or equity of the bonds?

Mr. BRICE. Absolutely none.

Mr. BERRY. None whatever by the citizens?

Mr. BRICE. I am not prepared to say as to the citizens of the Territory.

Mr. BERRY. Or the county authorities?

Mr. BRICE. I mean to say that the original bonds were issued in pursuance of six successive votes, in the years 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886, of the county of Santa Fe. Some years afterwards, without objection from any citizen of the county of Santa Fe, those bonds were taken up and refunded at a lower rate of interest under a general refunding act of the legislative assembly of that Territory, also without objection. A decision of the Supreme Court rendered some two years ago held that the original act was void because it had not been passed by authority of Congress. This proposed act seeks to validate the original act authorizing those county votes.

Mr. BERRY. Were the bonds issued in aid of a railroad?

Mr. BRICE. They were issued to build a railroad, which was built.

Mr. BERRY. And the railroad was built?

Mr. BRICE. The railroad was built and it is in operation.

Mr. CALL. There does not seem to be any other member of the committee present. I am a member of the committee, and will state that I was present at one of the hearings. I do not remember that there was any one there representing the Territory, although I believe the Delegate was present; but there was nothing said on the part of any one authorized to represent the Territory in opposition to the bill which is now before the Senate. I did not understand, however, that there was an absence of all opposition to it. It seems to me, if my memory is right, that there was some action on the part of the legislative assembly. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if that is not the case? I see the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is now here, who was also present at the hearing.

Mr. BRICE. Does the Senator ask if there was some action by the legislative assembly?

Mr. CALL. Was there not?

Mr. BRICE. None except to validate the bonds to the extent of the power of the legislative assembly.

Mr. CALL. There has never been anything else?

Mr. BRICE. There never has been anything else.

Mr. CALL. No opposition to the payment on the part of the Territory?

Mr. BRICE. No opposition by the people of the Territory or by the commissioners of the county or by the legislative assembly of the Territory.

Mr. PLATT. The money has been obtained on these bonds?

Mr. BRICE. The money was obtained from these bonds, and they are now held by various institutions which paid for them, and the money obtained has been expended. Several times the amount was expended, and the road is in operation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. CATRON, the Delegate from the Territory, was before the committee, and said it was a very proper and just measure and that it ought to be passed.

Mr. BATE. I am a member of the Committee on Territories. I did not hear what transpired in regard to this bill when it sprung up in the committee and the arguments were being made. I was called away to the Committee on Military Affairs, my presence there being necessary to make a quorum. As I said, I am a member of the Committee on Territories, but I did not have a chance to examine the bill and hear the argument, and was not present when the committee took action on it. I was not, therefore, one of the committee to give a unanimous vote. This much I deem proper to say in regard to this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory, and for other purposes."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FERGUS FALLS, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar the bill (S. 717) for the erection of a public building at Fergus Falls, Minn., and put it on its passage now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five"; so as to make the paragraph read:

That the sum of $175,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to line 14, where the same amendment should be made.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, the amount there should be reduced from $200,000 to $175,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, before the word "thousand," strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five"; so as to read:

The site and building thereon, with its appurtenances, when completed, upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 3964) to reorganize the customs collection district of Alaska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. M. BILLINGS.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 190) for the relief of J. M. Billings.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate the sum of $850 to pay the claims of J. M. Billings, of Santa Clara, Santa Clara County, State of California, for money, money orders, etc., stolen from the post-office while he was postmaster of Santa Clara, Cal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIHU ROOT.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 728) to compensate Elihu Root for services rendered by direction of the Attorney-General.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $2,000 to compensate Elihu Root, United States attorney, southern district of New York, for services rendered as attorney for the defendant in the suit of the Yale Lock Manufacturing Company vs. Thomas L. James.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLORIDA SOUTHERN DISTRICT JUDGE.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 477) to repeal section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring the district judge for the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West, may be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, when this bill was reported the other day the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] said it was in accordance with the general practice on the subject not to fix any particular place of residence for the judge. I think the judge ought to be required to reside at a point the least inconvenient to the public. But as the bill has been reported otherwise, I shall not make any point upon it. It seems to me, however, very clear that there ought to be some place of residence fixed for a judge, and it ought to be where it is the most convenient for the people who are suitors in the court.

Mr. HILL. The committee gave very careful consideration to the matter, and they thought that if a man were compelled to live in Florida he was entitled to pick out the spot, and that it should not be established by law.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from New York shows that the committee did not understand the subject at all. Anybody who has ever lived in New York would rather live anywhere in Florida than in the former State.

Mr. PLATT. The very fact that some years ago we passed a statute requiring the judge to live at Key West is the reason why action is now necessary with reference to the residence of the judge. I entirely disagree with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I think we ought not to limit the judge's residence in a district at all. I think he ought to be permitted to choose his residence in the district.

Mr. PASCO. At the time the law was passed I will state that this was simply a court of admiralty, no other business being transacted therein.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. But now its territory extends all over the eastern and northern part of the State as far as Jacksonville.

Mr. PLATT. The provision that the judge shall reside at Key West, so far as I know, is the only statute which requires a judge of any district court to reside in any particular place. I do not think we ought to make exceptions and require the judge in this district of Florida to reside at a particular place any more than in other States. If we should enter upon the practice of passing such statutes, we should have 45 different statutes fixing the residences of judges of the district courts in each State.

Mr. CALL. I am entirely content that the bill shall pass without limitations; but I think the Senator from Connecticut, upon his argument, ought to oppose it. He does not think that the judge ought to be required to live in a place where it is most convenient to the greater number of suitors, but that he should be allowed to select his residence at some inconvenient place.

Mr. PLATT. I assume that the judge——

Mr. CALL. Key West is the place of all others most inconvenient for the judge of that court, and he chose to fix his residence there. It is a needless expense to witnesses and jurors and attorneys. It is for that reason that it is proposed to remove it, because it is at a most inconvenient place. So I thought it would have been better to have fixed it at some other place, either Tampa or Jacksonville, where it would be most convenient to the people of the district.

Mr. PLATT. I assume that a judge will always select a convenient place, especially as he does not get any mileage for travel from his home to the court.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. Let the bill (S. 501) to require the judge of the southern district of Florida to reside in Jacksonville, Fla., be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 5, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 4, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

USE OF UNITED STATES BUILDING, JEFFERSON CITY, MO.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 85) granting to the county of Cole, in Missouri, permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That full permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the county of Cole, State of Missouri, to occupy the United States court room and two jury rooms connected therewith in the United States building at Jefferson City, Cole County, Mo., during the months of March, July, and November, 1896, and March, 1897, for the purpose of holding sessions of the circuit court of said Cole County therein, and that during said occupation concurrent jurisdiction, so far as it is necessary, over said building be, and is hereby, ceded to the State of Missouri and to said county of Cole, so that the sessions of said court in said building and rooms may be, during said period, fully legalized: Provided, That said rooms shall be kept in good repair at the expense of said county of Cole, and at the end of March, 1897, the use of said rooms shall be relinquished to the United States by said county, the premises to be in as good condition as before their occupancy by said circuit court of Cole County: Provided further, That the sessions of said circuit court of Cole County shall in no way interfere with the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized in his discretion at any time to terminate this permit and the possession hereby granted of said premises upon thirty days' notice to the judges of the county court of said county.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has this been reported by a committee?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes; unanimously by the Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTON of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL, NAVAJO COUNTY, ARIZ.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Ariz., to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, be, and are hereby, authorized to issue bonds of said county not exceeding $15,000 in amount, payable in not less than five nor more than twenty years, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, interest and principal payable in lawful money of the United States, interest payable semiannually, and which said bonds shall not be sold for less than par, for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat of said county.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad to have the gentleman from Arizona briefly explain this bill, reserving the right to object.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. The county of Navajo was created by the last legislature of Arizona, and has no public building of any kind. The county from which it was detached has a court-house and public building. This new county desires this building which is proposed by the pending bill for a court-house and jail. They are paying rent now for buildings for this purpose, which costs the county more than the interest on the bonds proposed to be issued. For that reason they simply desire to issue bonds in order to procure funds for the construction contemplated.

Mr. DOCKERY. It involves no charges on the public Treasury?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. None whatever.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 213) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Missouri River between its mouth and the mouth of the Dakota or James River, and across the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Minnesota River, in the State of Minnesota, and South Port, in the State of Louisiana, and across the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers between the mouth of the Illinois and the city of Joliet, in the State of Illinois, and to prescribe the character, location, and dimensions of the same—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1353) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Little Rock, Ark.," approved March 2, 1891—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. 65) to print the annual report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service; when the Speaker signed the same.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER, CHAMBERLAIN, S. DAK.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 636) for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak.

The bill was read. It provides that it shall be lawful for the Dakota Pacific Bridge Company, a corporation now being organized for that purpose under the general corporation laws of the State of South Dakota, or its assigns, to construct under and subject to the conditions and limitations provided, a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, within 5 miles above or below the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., and lay on and over said bridge railway tracks for the more perfect connection of any and all railroads that are now or which may hereafter be constructed to the Missouri River at or within 5 miles above or below the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., or to the river on the opposite side of the same, near the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., and build, erect, and lay on and over said bridge ways for wagons, vehicles of all kinds, and for the transit of animals, and to provide ways for foot passengers, and to maintain and operate said bridge for the purposes aforesaid, etc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GAMBLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FEES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Tenth. Registers and receivers are allowed, jointly, at a rate not exceeding 10 cents per 100 words for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants in all cases, and in all cases where they can secure a competent person to reduce the testimony to writing for a sum less per folio than the sum herein prescribed it shall be their duty to do so."

SEC. 2. That subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to have an explanation. Is this bill reported by any committee?

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ALLEN of Utah) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands has had under consideration House bill 4073, and herewith report a substitute for the same and recommend its passage. House bill 4073 is intended to reduce the fees of registers and receivers for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants in contest cases in establishing homestead rights from the present statutory fee of 15 cents per folio to 10 cents per folio. The committee has deemed it advisable to extend the reduction of such fees to all matters wherein registers and receivers are allowed fees for reducing testimony to writing, because, in the opinion of the committee, the proposed fee is ample for such service.

Section 2 of the substitute bill, if it should become law, will repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Subdivision 12 of said section of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

"12. Registers and receivers in California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Colorado, Idaho, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, and Montana are each entitled to collect and receive 50 per cent of the fees and commissions provided for in the first, third, and tenth subdivisions of this section."

The committee understands that this subdivision became law upon the theory that the cost of living was so much greater in the States and Territories mentioned in said twelfth subdivision that it was necessary to allow the additional fees to be collected within their limits.

The committee believes that the time is past when it is necessary or just that additional fees should be allowed registers and receivers in the above-mentioned States and Territories. These fees, as a rule, must be paid by men who are seeking to build homes, and who, in most cases, are least able to bear the burdens imposed upon them by these additional fees. Everywhere throughout the country, including the above-named States and Territories, the prices of farm products and the products of all labor have fallen greatly, and it seems but just that the fees which are imposed upon the classes above mentioned, in case they become involved in litigation over land and other claims, should be reduced.

Subdivisions 1 and 3, which will be affected by the repeal of subdivision 12 of section 2238, are as follows:

"1. A fee of $1 for each declaratory statement filed and for services in acting on preemption claims.

"3. A commission to be paid by the homestead applicant at the time of entry of 1 per cent and the cash price as fixed by law of the land applied for; and a like commission when the claim is finally established and the certificate therefor issued as the basis of a patent."

The committee reports herewith H. R. 4073 and recommends that it be laid upon the table.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. McMILLIN said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. We can not hear the report. The Clerk reads rapidly, which is well enough, but there is so much noise we can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The House must be in order, and gentlemen must take their seats.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. This seems to be a very proper measure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I understand this report correctly, the bill provides for a reduction of fees all along the line, and for an increase in no case.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. The fees at present are 15 cents per folio for transcribing testimony, except in the States and Territories set forth in the report, and there they are 22 cents a folio. This bill proposes to reduce the fees to a uniform rate of 10 cents a folio.

Mr. McMILLIN. And there is no class of fees raised by this bill?

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. No; they are all reduced.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN of Utah, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I also ask that the bill H. R. 4073—the original bill for which this is a substitute—lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, MOORMAN VS. LATIMER, THIRD DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a privileged report from Committee on Elections No. 3, and ask that it be printed. At some early day I shall ask that it be considered. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BELL] presents the report of Committee on Elections No. 3 in the case of Robert Moorman vs. A. C. Latimer, Third Congressional district of South Carolina. The report will be ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF FRANCIS E. SPINNER.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 17, for the erection of a statue of Francis E. Spinner at the Treasury Department building in Washington.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the General Spinner Memorial Association, which has prepared a bronze statue of Francis E. Spinner, formerly Treasurer of the United States, may be allowed to erect said statue upon one of the approaches or buttresses of the Treasury building in Washington: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the Government and that the statue shall be located and erected according to the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a joint resolution and bill of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 98) directing the Secretary of War to cause Lieut. Col. Jared A. Smith, Corps of Engineers, to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio; and

A bill (H. R. 5161) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1448) to withdraw from the Supreme Court jurisdiction of criminal cases not capital and confer the same on the circuit courts of appeals;

A bill (S. 2169) to regulate mail matter of the fourth class;

Joint resolution (S. R. 76) authorizing Lieut. William McCarty Little to accept a decoration from the King of Spain; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute the medals and diplomas awarded by the World's Columbian Commission to the exhibitors entitled thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate in regard to the "insurrection in Cuba," had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, and other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to obtain practical benefits of great value to the country from the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, the park and its approaches are hereby declared to be a national field for military maneuvers for the Regular Army of the United States and the National Guard of the States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, within the limits of appropriations which may from time to time be available for such purpose, to assemble, at his discretion, in camp, at such season of the year and for such period as he may designate, at this field of military maneuvers, such portions of the military forces of the United States as he may think best, to receive military instructions there. The Secretary of War is further authorized to make and publish regulations governing the assembling of the National Guard of the several States upon the maneuvering grounds, and he may detail instructors from the Regular Army for such forces during their exercises.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are amendments, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULL. I think there are some amendments recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman, does this contemplate the assembling of a portion of the Regular Army for the purposes of drill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. For drill and maneuver also, under orders of the War Department.

Mr. DINGLEY. Only that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to reserve the right to object to this.

The SPEAKER. The right of objection is reserved.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title by striking out the words "the Chickamauga and Chattanooga" and the words "and other purposes." Insert "s" after "park" and the word "military" between "national" and "parks."

Amend the bill by striking out of lines 4 and 5 in section 1 the words "the Chickamauga and Chattanooga." Insert "s" after "park" in the fifth line, "military" between "national" and "parks," "said" between "parks" and "parks," substitute "their" for "its," and in line 6 strike out "a" between "be" and "national," and insert "s" after "field." In line 5 of section 2 substitute "such" for "this," and insert the following proviso at the end of section 1:

"Provided, That the said parks shall be opened for such purposes only in the discretion of the Secretary of War and under such regulations as he may prescribe."

So that section 1 of the bill shall read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That in order to obtain practical benefits of great value to the country from the establishment of national military parks, said parks and their approaches are hereby declared to be national fields for military maneuvers for the Regular Army of the United States and the National Guard of the States: Provided, That the said parks shall be opened for such purposes only in the discretion of the Secretary of War and under such regulations as he may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I only want to ask a single question. Perhaps I will betray my ignorance by asking it, but nevertheless I will ask: Is this a real necessity, for the benefit of the Army, or is it a power granted which will result in much expense and something of pleasure, without resulting in profit to the Army?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No expense will result; and as to the amount of profit I can not speak. This bill was drawn in the War Department and sent to me. The present organization of these national parks constitutes them as parks, without any special purpose beyond the preservation of the parks and adornment; and the War Department was of the opinion that with a large tract of land, like the Chickamauga Park, comprising 7,000 acres of land, with hill and vale and surroundings, it would be a good place to have maneuvers and target practice and everything of that character, in which the Army is necessarily interested; and so, looking into the law, there was doubt whether the Secretary of War had the right to use the park for any other purpose than mere park purposes. The power granted, if this bill passes, simply allows the assembling of the troops at these places.

Mr. CANNON. What I want to ask is, as the Federal policy that now exists is to abandon many posts and concentrate the Army at posts at thickly settled places—take, for instance, Chicago, St. Louis, and so on——

Mr. GROSVENOR. And Columbus.

Mr. CANNON. Columbus; yes. Now, is this an effort, or a beginning of an effort, or a movement, that would take a portion of the Army stationed at Chicago or New York, and once a year, or more frequently, transport them for maneuver and target practice down to Chickamauga, at the right time of the year, and transport them back, and if Chickamauga is the nearest point where they could be maneuvered, and where they could have target practice, and what would be the difference in transportation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has not, perhaps, understood that the bill is changed now from a single purpose, so that it turns all of these parks over to the War Department for that purpose; so of course Gettysburg battlefield would come in, and Shiloh battlefield would come in, and any other military parks owned by the Government. So that of course I assume that if the Secretary of War desired to have target practice or artillery practice he would send them to the nearest place. It is not the purpose to make a post there—nothing of that character. The whole policy of the War Department is to lessen the number of posts and concentrate the troops at large points like Chicago and St. Louis, as the gentleman suggested.

Mr. HULL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that this is no new grant of power; that the Secretary of War has already power to take troops to any point it may be deemed necessary. This bill simply gives the right to use the national military parks especially for this purpose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a bill that I have no interest in.

Mr. HULL. I would also state that the bill in itself can not possibly create an increase of expense, because the War Department can now assemble the troops anywhere it pleases. It simply gives us 10 square miles that is probably the finest field for drill. It turns over all the national parks to the use of the Army for this purpose, so that the troops could be ordered to any one nearest to the regular post.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. I have not the floor. I simply rose to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PICKLER. Who will have charge of these parks during the time of the military drill of the regular troops in them?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The superintendents of the park—the same men that have charge of them now.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the superintendent of the park have charge of the Regular Army?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no. The Regular Army will simply march in there and drill and then march out. But I promised the Chair that I would not occupy much time with this bill and I now withdraw it.

CONFERENCE REPORT, ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter no pay shall be retained, but this provision shall not apply to deductions authorized on account of the Soldiers' Home."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
B. F. MARSH,
J. E. WASHINGTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

M. S. QUAY,
EUGENE HALE,
CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on bill making appropriations for the Army, H. R. 5359.

The net increase of amount appropriated is $2,500.

Amendment No. 1 refers to retained pay, and House agrees to Senate amendment with an amendment to protect the Soldiers' Home.

Amendment No. 2 fixes the number of hospital stewards at not to exceed 100.

No. 3 is verbal, to comply with law.

No. 4 strikes out extra pay for Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, for the reason that the officer in charge is now a colonel.

No. 5 provides that enlisted men discharged by Secretary of War for misconduct shall not have travel allowances.

No. 6 simply makes total comply with amount appropriated.

No. 7 increases the amount appropriated for Apache Indians held as prisoners of war $2,500.

Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 are simply verbal.

J. A. T. HULL,
B. F. MARSH,
J. E. WASHINGTON.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. DE FREEST.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 3852) to amend the record of William H. De Freest was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be directed to amend the record of the War Department in the case of William H. De Freest, late second lieutenant of Company B, First Iowa Cavalry, so as to grant him an honorable discharge: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to give to said William H. De Freest any pay or allowance for any period of time he was absent without leave and not in the performance of military duty, or to such time as he would have been discharged by limitation of time of enlistment or otherwise.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3852) to amend the record of William H. De Freest, having considered the same, report it back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

In the Fifty-first Congress, and also in a subsequent Congress, this committee favorably reported the bill with an amendment, which is incorporated in the present bill. That report, which we adopt, is as follows:

"The said De Freest was second lieutenant of Company B, First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry, and was cashiered by sentence of general court-martial promulgated August 21, 1863, for two instances of intoxication, being found not guilty on some of the specifications. This was done after two years of actual service in the regiment, and however well founded at the time, it answered its purpose so far as the good of the service was concerned, and now after twenty-seven years have passed there seems to be no reason why this soldier should rest under this stigma."

From the evidence on file it is conclusively shown that said De Freest has since the war lived an upright life, and has abstained from the use of intoxicants for the past seventeen years. The merits of his claim are attested to by letters from Samuel J. Kirkwood, late governor of Iowa, and Daniel Anderson, late colonel of the regiment in which said De Freest served during the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suppose the gentleman in charge of the bill will not object to the amendment which we have been in the habit of incorporating into bills of this kind?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill H. R. 6248, the legislative appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the first section of the pending amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the first section of the bill now pending as an amendment would be, if adopted, section 7 of the appropriation bill. I suggest that, for convenience of reference during consideration in the committee, we follow the numbering of the sections as printed in the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman ask for an order that finally, when the bill shall be completed, the Clerk shall be authorized to number the sections consecutively.

Mr. HENDERSON. The original offer of the amendment embraced the changing of the numbering of the sections, but my suggestion now is that by unanimous consent we follow the numbers as they are contained in the amendment itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] asks unanimous consent that in reporting the several sections of this amendment the Clerk follow the numbers as in the printed bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 30th day of June, 1896, all fees and emoluments authorized by law to be paid to United States district attorneys and their assistants, and United States marshals and their deputies, shall be charged as heretofore, and shall be collected, as far as possible, and paid to the clerk of the court having jurisdiction, and by him covered into the Treasury of the United States; and said officers shall be paid for their official services salaries and compensation hereinafter provided, and not otherwise.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, there is a committee amendment which I desire to offer to that section, and which I have handed to the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 strike out "and their assistants" and also "and their deputies," and add at the end of the section:

"Provided, That this section shall not be construed to require fees to be charged against or collected from the United States except as provided by sections 6 and 8 of this act relating to field deputies and their payments."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That amendment comes in at the end of the section, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Section 2 of this bill covers all the judicial districts in the United States. I would like to know from the Chair when it will be in order to offer amendments, whether at the end of the section or as each item is read.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, at the end of the section, as that was the order adopted by the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I was about to make an inquiry similar to that just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It seems to me that it would be more convenient, and that we would get along with more expedition, and avoid contests for the floor for the purpose of offering amendments, if opportunity were offered to present amendments to any particular item of salary as it is read. In that way each item could be voted upon at once. I ask unanimous consent that as each item of salary is read it shall be in order to offer amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that in section 2 of the pending amendment, as each item of salary is read, it shall be in order to offer amendments, and the Chair supposes that when a paragraph is disposed of and we have proceeded to the next the committee can not return.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he modify his request so as to ask for this privilege in addition to the regular rule, because some gentlemen may be temporarily absent under the impression that the right to offer amendments will exist after the section has been read through. With that modification, I have no objection to his request.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the request applies only to salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all there is in section 2.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There may be something else.

Mr. McMILLIN. My suggestion would meet the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

The CHAIRMAN. The request, then, is that in the reading of section 2 by the Clerk it shall be in order for any gentleman to offer an amendment to any salary provided for therein when that item is read, and also at the end of the reading of the section.

Mr. MURPHY. I suggest that the order be changed so as to apply to all the sections as they are read.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. We shall have to object on the part of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will proceed to the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the United States district attorney for each of the following judicial districts of the United States shall be paid an annual salary as follows: For the northern and middle districts of the State of Alabama, each $4,000; for the southern district of the State of Alabama, $3,000; for the Territory of Arizona, $4,000; for the eastern district of Arkansas, $4,000; for the western district of Arkansas, $5,000; for the northern district of California, $4,000; for the southern district of California, $3,000; for the district of Colorado, $4,000; for the district of Connecticut, $2,000; for the district of Delaware, $2,000; for the District of Columbia, $5,000; for the northern and southern districts of Florida, each $3,000; for the northern district of Georgia, $5,000; for the southern district of Georgia, $2,500; for the district of Idaho, $2,500; for the northern district of Illinois, $5,000; for the southern district of Illinois, $4,500; for the district of Indiana, $5,000; for the northern and southern districts of Iowa, each $4,000; for the district of Kansas, $4,000; for the district of Kentucky, $5,000; for the eastern district of Louisiana, $3,000; for the western district of Louisiana, $2,000; for the district of Maine, $2,500; for the district of Maryland, $3,000; for the district of Massachusetts, $5,000; for the eastern district of Michigan, $3,000; for the western district of Michigan, $3,000; for the district of Minnesota, $4,000; for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi, each $3,000; for the eastern district of Missouri, $4,000; for the western district of Missouri, $4,000; for the district of Montana, $3,500; for the district of Nebraska, $3,500; for the district of Nevada, $2,500; for the district of New Hampshire, $2,000; for the district of New Jersey, $2,000; for the district of New Mexico, $4,000; for the northern district of New York, $4,000; for the eastern district of New York, $3,000; for the eastern district of North Carolina, $4,000; for the western district of North Carolina, $4,500; for the district of North Dakota, $3,500; for the northern and southern districts of Ohio, each $4,000; for the district of Oklahoma, $5,000; for the district of Oregon, $4,000; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, $4,000; for the western district of Pennsylvania, $3,500; for the district of Rhode Island, $2,000; for the district of South Carolina, $4,500; for the district of South Dakota, $3,500; for the eastern, middle, and western districts of Tennessee, each $4,000; for the northern district of Texas, $3,000; for the eastern district of Texas, $5,000; for the western district of Texas, $3,500; for the district of Utah, $3,000; for the district of Vermont, $2,000; for the eastern district of Virginia, $3,500; for the western district of Virginia, $4,000; for the district of Washington, $4,000; for the district of West Virginia, $4,000; for the eastern district of Wisconsin, $4,000; for the western district of Wisconsin, $3,000; for the district of Wyoming, $3,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this section by striking out the word "four," in line 15, on page 1 of the printed amendment, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is simply to increase the salaries of the district attorneys for the northern and middle districts of Alabama from $4,000 to $5,000. These officers at present earn between $6,000 and $7,000; they receive only $6,000. They took these offices with the implied understanding that they would receive the compensation now allowed by law. While I am heartily in favor of the general reduction which this bill seeks to attain and am perfectly willing to move in the direction therein indicated, I believe at the same time in paying these officers a reasonable salary. The amount proposed in the bill, it occurs to me, is not adequate in view of the work performed by these gentlemen. In fact, $4,000 is too small a salary for such men as those whom I know it will affect in these two districts. They are men of fine legal ability; they rank with the first lawyers of the State; and I respectfully submit that the amount named in my amendment is but a reasonable salary. I find that many other district attorneys are allowed in this bill $5,000; and I believe that these gentlemen are as much entitled to that salary as others. Our delegation, after consultation among its members, is willing for the sake of retrenchment to submit to the reduction contemplated by my amendment—a reduction of one or two thousand dollars upon the amount those officers now actually earn. In consideration of the work which they perform, we consider that this will be but a reasonable salary. I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRISON] that these officers "earn" in fees more than has been allowed them in the bill as salary is true; but it is true because of the very practice which this bill seeks to abolish—the practice of instituting frivolous prosecutions purely for the sake of increasing their emoluments. It is entirely safe to say that there are not five districts in America where, under a proper administration of the office, either the marshal or the district attorney would have earned anything like the amounts which they have been receiving under the existing system. Not only is that true generally, Mr Chairman, but in this particular case of Alabama there have been monstrous frauds committed down there on the part of officers of these Federal courts within the last two or three years. Some of the persons concerned have been indicted, and some, I believe, have been convicted.

Mr. HARRISON. Not these officers.

Mr. BAILEY. I said "on the part of officers of the Federal courts in Alabama."

Mr. HARRISON. But not the officers affected by this amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. But, sir, these officers have profited by the very frauds which the guilty men have perpetrated.

Mr. HARRISON. Yet you do not undertake to reach those subordinates at all by the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. No, sir; but if I had had my way we would have done so. I think the commissioners are the root of the evil, and I would have sought to apply the remedy there, but the committee in its wisdom believed it best to deal with the district attorney and the marshal first.

Mr. Chairman, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama illustrates a curious phase of office holding. In the last days of the Fifty-second Congress we passed a bill creating an additional marshal and district attorney for the State of Alabama. Up to that time there were three districts, with only two marshals and two district attorneys. Congress passed a bill to create an additional district attorney and an additional marshal. The records of the Judiciary Department disclosed a condition of affairs which induced President Harrison to veto that bill, but the House unfortunately passed it over his veto. Yet after we have provided three officers to do the work which two had performed, it is now proposed to increase the salaries of the three.

I have no personal acquaintance with the district attorneys in Alabama, and I accept the statement of the gentleman from Alabama that they are excellent men and good lawyers, but their services are not worth $5,000. There are not five district attorneys in America whose services are worth $5,000 a year.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to speak for a moment on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The amendment offered on behalf of the Judiciary Committee is submitted as an amendment, and the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is an amendment in the second degree. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. HARRISON was rejected.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 24, section 2, the words "three thousand five hundred dollars" and inserting "four thousand dollars"; so as to make the salary for the western district of Pennsylvania $4,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the principle embodied in the pending bill. I believe that the system of paying the officers of our courts by fees ought to be abolished and salaries substituted in its stead.

I have no interest at all—no personal interest—in the district attorney who now holds office in the city of Pittsburg, in the western district of Pennsylvania. He is not a constituent of mine; he does not belong to my political party, and so the amendment I offer is offered solely from a sense of justice and from no personal consideration whatever.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. What is the proposed amendment?

Mr. DALZELL. I simply want to equalize the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania. This bill gives the attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania $4,000 per annum, and I want to put the western district on an equality. The bill fixes only $3,500, and the amendment proposes $4,000. I think I can show to the committee that it is only justice to the western district of Pennsylvania to equalize the two.

Mr. CANNON. What is the point? Is the eastern district too high or the western district too low? Which way would you proceed to equalize?

Mr. DALZELL. I think the eastern district is about fair—$4,000; but that the western district is too low and ought to be put at $4,000 also. I do not propose to take the time of the committee, and if the Judiciary Committee, or the members of it, are willing to accept the amendment, as I believe they will, I do not see any necessity for consuming further the time of the House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will my friend and colleague permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It seems that there has been a mistake in the adjustment of the salaries by reason of a misapprehension as to the earnings of the district attorneys in the two districts of Pennsylvania for the last year. As a matter of fact, the business of the western district exceeds the business of the eastern district, and I think when the committee comes to consider that fact they will admit they have made a mistake in the preparation of this bill and the adjustments of the salaries, and will allow the increase, at least to the extent asked for by my colleague.

Mr. DALZELL. The western district of Pennsylvania covers two-thirds of the State. The courts are held at four different places. The officers of the court have to travel across the mountains to Erie, to Williamsport, to Scranton, and courts are also held in Pittsburg.

Now, simply to call the attention of the committee to the facts in reference to these salaries, I ask your attention to the report of the Attorney-General for 1874 and 1875, inclusive, and find this state of facts to exist: In 1874 the district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania received $3,455, and the district attorney for the western district received $4,920, or $1,465 more than the attorney for the eastern district. In the year 1875 the attorney for the eastern district received $3,385, and the attorney for the western district $4,635, or $1,240 more than the eastern district. In 1876 the district attorney for the eastern district received $6,080 and the western $5,375, or only $705 less, and so on down through the entire list. The statistics in the report of the Attorney-General of the United States show that in more cases—in the majority of cases—the business is in the western district; in other words, that the business done in the western district exceeds that done in the eastern district of the State. And I appeal to the committee to put these districts at least on an equality. Let the amendment prevail, and let the western district have a salary equal to $4,000 proposed for the other district.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the increase asked for in this salary by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is small, it is true, and it is with very great reluctance that I oppose the amendment. It is also with very great reluctance that I would consent to an increase of a single salary fixed in the bill, for I believe, on the whole, that they are 25 per cent larger now than they ought to be.

The way the change comes of which the gentleman complains, namely, that both the eastern district and the western are not put on the same basis of salary and paid $4,000, I will briefly explain. It is simply because there is more than the difference fixed in the bill in the earnings.

Mr. DALZELL. The earnings when?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. During the last year.

Mr. DALZELL. Take a series of years and how do the earnings compare?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I would like the gentleman to tell me when there was a year that the United States officers made more out of the Treasury than they did last year.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think that applies in the case to which I am referring.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. If the gentleman can show an exception, then he ought to do it.

Mr. DALZELL. I have already shown exceptions.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have not been able to see them. It was conceded, under the advice of the Department of Justice, that the eastern district of Pennsylvania, having in it the great city of Philadelphia, ought to have a slightly larger salary than that allowed to the western district. Of course in that city there is a large admiralty jurisdiction in the district courts of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. That is also the case in the western district.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. How much does it amount to when compared with the eastern district—the city of Philadelphia?

Mr. DALZELL. It is equally great, and there is a larger miscellaneous business.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. How can that be?

Mr. DALZELL. The figures will show the gentleman if he takes pains to examine them.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I have the figures before me, Mr. Chairman, and with the consent of my colleague I will cite some of them.

The report of the Attorney-General shows that on the 1st day of July, 1895, in civil business, there were pending in the Philadelphia courts customs cases amounting to 169; in the western district, 1; internal-revenue cases at Philadelphia, 28, and Pittsburg none. Miscellaneous cases, none at Philadelphia and 8 at Pittsburg.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, will my friend allow me? Is it not a fact that the year before, in the year 1894, there were 950 civil cases pending in the eastern district and 1,785 pending in the western district?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I can not answer my friend.

Mr. DALZELL. I take that from the Attorney-General's report.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does that show anything more than the fact that the western district disposes of its business while the eastern does not?

Mr. DALZELL. I want to support this bill, but I want to be fairly dealt with.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The amount is small, and, as I said before, I resist it with reluctance, but I can not consent to any increase in any single salary in this bill. I will consent to almost any decrease. I resist this because of the bad example there is in it more than anything else.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move as a substitute that each salary be $4,000 to the officers named in section 2.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitute for the section?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in reference to the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania that the committee having charge of this matter have simply made a mistake. I know how difficult it is for committees to admit that fact, but being a member of the Judiciary Committee during the last Congress, and having had the honor to work with my colleagues on that committee on a bill similar to this during nearly the whole of the last winter, I am satisfied that I am correct when I say that there is no reason and no argument why the salary of the district attorney for the western district should be reduced to $3,500. If you take the earnings of that officer for the last fiscal year you will find that the earnings of the district attorney for the western district were $4,520, and the earnings of the attorney for the eastern district were $4,332.40. There is where the committee made a mistake. The district attorney for the western district employed a clerk, as he had a perfect right to do, at $1,200. The district attorney of the eastern district employed a clerk at $208. As a matter of course the net result to the district attorney of the western district was less than the net result to the district attorney of the eastern district, but he was not compelled to make that employment. The next officer may not hire any clerk at all, so that the emoluments and fees earned by the district attorney of the western district are really greater than those earned by the same officer in the eastern district. The committee took the net results instead of looking at the earnings of the office. The question is whether you will strike down an officer who has been earning $4,500 a year to $3,500, rather than to correct a mistake made by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell the House whether or not the earnings of that officer have been largely increased by the very practices which this bill condemns and which it is intended to correct?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that so far as the officers who have held that office are concerned, including the gentleman who is now addressing you, that none of the bad practices have ever prevailed which gentlemen condemn.

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask the gentleman if he did not tell the Judiciary Committee of the last Congress that all of the officers were subject to the same criticism? We had the earnest cooperation of the gentleman when he was a member of the Judiciary Committee, upon the very theory that these offices were all run improperly—of course his own excepted.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am not here to say that I oppose this bill. On the contrary, I am heartily in favor of it. But I am here to correct an error made by this committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I perfectly understand, but my suggestion is that it is not fair to take the earnings of these offices as a criterion, for the reason that those earnings have been largely increased by the frivolous and vexatious prosecutions which have been instituted. If you do so you simply perpetuate a wrong, because you take earnings which have been improperly and, perhaps, dishonestly increased, and using that as a basis you fix a permanent salary upon the basis of fraudulent fees.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, well, that is true as a general thing, but it is not true in this case.

Mr. DALZELL. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas whether, if it is a fact that through a long series of years the earnings of the western district have exceeded those of the eastern district, he thinks it is fair that the salary in the eastern district should be increased $500 over the western district?

Mr. BAILEY. Frankly, I do not, as between those two districts. I think they ought to be equalized, but I think both of them ought to be cut down.

Mr. DALZELL. I have stated what was done in that district, and I have been verified by the report.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We are not complaining that the salary paid to the district attorney in the eastern district is too high, but we are complaining that the salary in the western district is too low. This officer has been earning $4,500 a year for years. There are 2,500,000 people in that district; more than two-thirds of the counties of the State are in the western district. It is bigger in every way than the eastern district. And I say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no reason under heaven why this discrimination should prevail, and the gentlemen on that committee admit it. Of course, they are afraid to make the change in this case from fear of a rush of changes in other districts, and therefore they say they can not consent to it. Now, I think this committee ought to correct this mistake which they admit they have made.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to say, for one, I do not admit that we have made any mistake. When the Attorney-General was before the committee he stated that the salary for the Philadelphia district, because of the greater importance of that port, should be higher than the western district.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It may be he did. That only shows that the Attorney-General does not understand it. I tell you it is wrong. I withdraw my substitute.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just one suggestion. In this eastern district is the great city of Philadelphia, and we all know that in a metropolitan city like that the standard of compensation for the lawyer's services is much higher than in the western district.

Mr. DALZELL. It is exactly the opposite.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Both physically and mentally the standard in the western district will favorably compare with that of the eastern district.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, they say that the standard is higher in the western region than it is in the eastern.

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then how is it that we have here the very best lawyer in the whole western district, who gives up his practice as a lawyer in Pittsburg and gives his whole services for $5,000 a year as a member of Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. If I had not practiced law in Pittsburg for twenty years, I could not have done it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The woods are full of patriots who will serve their country in the western district. [Laughter and applause, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have no doubt of that, and if it is true, as the gentleman says, that that district is full of patriots who would be willing to serve the country, I have no doubt they would take this office at the salary which is fixed; and that in a great city such as Philadelphia, where the standard is higher for compensation, unless it differs from all other great cities, I think the salary should be larger.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Question!

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want it to be——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Illinois that the substitute being withdrawn debate has been exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I make the point of order that that motion is not tenable.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Then I move to reduce the salary in the western district to $3,000.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Regular order! That only shows the gentleman has not examined this question properly. That has already been cut down.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I offer that as a substitute.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want it to be understood in this committee that the Committee on the Judiciary accepts the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] that the committee made a mistake in arranging the salaries of these two districts. They made no mistake. They looked carefully into the work done in both districts, and a majority of the committee fixed the salaries as they thought right. Now, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I want to show this House that no mistake was made.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Excuse me. In the eastern district of Pennsylvania the number of cases terminated there, to which the United States was a party, criminal prosecutions, for the year ending July 1, 1895, was 62; the number terminated in the western district was 32. There is the difference in the amount of work actually accomplished and reported to the Attorney-General from those two districts. Now, again, as to the amounts realized from fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed during the past year, $7,615 was realized in the eastern district and $140 realized in the western district.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly, if I have time.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the committee think it is fair to base this salary upon the results shown by a single year, when exactly opposite results are shown through a series of years?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; but now I want to call attention to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls "opposite results." There has been as much money earned in the western district of Pennsylvania by the district attorney as in the eastern district, but the attorney in the western district has earned it not as a lawyer in court, but largely as a traveling man on the railroads.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman said he would not admit that the committee had made any mistake.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And yet the gentleman has moved to amend his own work by reducing the salary of the district attorney in the western district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I did that because the gentleman would not let me have the floor unless I made some kind of a motion. [Laughter.] So far as the motion itself is concerned, I care nothing for it. Let me say here that I do not care if the House does adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. I do not believe in pursuing a parsimonious policy toward district attorneys. They are men who require special qualifications, special learning, special training. They are worth something to be merely retained as attorneys for the United States, even if they do not try any cases. Every great corporation in this country pays largely to retain the services of an eminent attorney, whether he tries a case or not. The United States ought to be willing to pay a sufficient salary to command the talent of a respectable attorney to represent it in court, without reference to the amount of business he may be called upon to do. But another thing to be considered is, what are the real necessities of the United States in the way of attorneys in the various districts? What amount is it reasonable to pay by way of a retainer in the several districts? When we have ascertained that and put these attorneys upon proper salaries we have done them justice and have gone far to uproot the evil that we have aimed at, for, as I said yesterday and now repeat, the fountain head of all this mischief is in the district attorney's office. Dry up that, and the rest of the trouble soon comes to an end.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I fully agree with every word the gentleman has said in these last remarks of his.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. DALZELL; and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 61.

So the amendment was adopted.

[Applause.]

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 8, page 32, strike out "$3,500" and insert "$4,000."

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, in the general debate upon this amendment, it was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] that a new basis had been chosen whereby the committee had fixed these salaries, that basis being the earnings of the respective districts.

We then met him upon that change of basis and I established conclusively to the satisfaction of the few members who were present that the net earnings of the district of Montana, so far as the district attorney's office was concerned, were higher than in any one of 14 districts that I mentioned and the figures of which appear in the RECORD this morning as a part of my remarks; also, that the gross earnings of the district of Montana were higher than those of any of those 14 districts, while the salary of the district attorney for Montana was fixed lower in this bill than any other except 2 of the entire 14. The gentleman then changed base again and said, in substance: "It is not a question of the net earnings; it is the number of suits finally determined in the district." He then announced to the committee that only 4 cases had been determined in our district. That was undoubtedly an error into which the gentleman fell by inadvertence, for I know that he would not intentionally misrepresent a fact to the committee.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Four criminal cases.

Mr. HARTMAN. But the remark of the gentleman as he made it on the floor and as it appears in the RECORD was that there were only 4 cases determined in that district. Gentlemen around me understood it so, and the RECORD shows it so. Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? The facts are that of all the districts in this Union, more money was involved in the civil litigation in the district of Montana than in any other except 4. Only 4 districts in the entire United States had more money involved in their litigation than was involved in the district of Montana. Again, instead of there having been only 4 cases terminated, the facts are these: There were 30 cases commenced; the amount involved was $376,504.70; the number of cases determined in favor of the United States was 10; the number dismissed or settled was 8, and the total number finally determined was 22. Now, for the purpose of comparison, let us go to the southern district of Illinois, which the gentleman [Mr. CONNOLLY] hails from. I read from the report of the Attorney-General, and I ask the gentleman's attention to it. Instead of 30 suits being commenced in that district there were but 7. No amount except a very trifling one was involved, not sufficient even to be mentioned in the report. The aggregate of judgments obtained was $3,750, and the number of cases finally determined in that district was 7. Total number disposed of by dismissal and otherwise, 26. Amount of money turned into the Treasury $302, against $680 in my district.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to reduce anybody's salary, but if it is the policy of this committee to equalize these salaries, then I propose to offer an amendment to reduce the salary of the attorney for the southern district of Illinois from $4,500 to $3,500. I do not consider the apportionment of salaries in this section at all equitable. Let me call attention to some more of these inequalities. Take the district of West Virginia—and I am proceeding now on the basis laid down by the gentleman from Illinois himself. The district of West Virginia had this enormous number of suits: One; amount involved, aggregate judgments, $50; decided in favor of the United States, 1 suit; judgment in old suits, $10; collected on old suits, $56.89; total number of suits disposed of for the United States, 2; total number disposed of altogether, 3; total amount of judgments, $60; total amount collected, $56.89. Salary, $4,000! [Laughter.] That is the amount of business in comparison with the $375,000 involved in my district; yet the officer in my district is reduced to a salary of $3,500, while this officer in West Virginia, doing that miserable pittance of a business, is regarded as entitled to $4,000. Sir, I do not want to cut down West Virginia, but I want this thing equalized.

Now, let me call attention to another case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HARTMAN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order.

Mr. HARTMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent to be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think I must object; we must get on with the bill.

Mr. HARTMAN. I move to substitute $3,501 in lieu of the amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain that as a new amendment entitling the gentleman to be heard further.

Mr. HARTMAN. I want gentlemen here to hear me in opposition to what this bill proposes. I want to present the claim of Montana in this regard; and I can not do it in five minutes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I hope the gentleman will be allowed a reasonable extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Montana will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTMAN. Now let me call attention to the showing in the eastern district of Virginia: Number of suits commenced, 2 (as against 30 in my district); collections, $40; decided for the United States, 2; collections in old suits, $15; decided against the United States, 1; settled, dismissed, etc., 1; total number disposed of, 3; total judgments, 10; collected, $55. Salary, $3,000!

We did in our district a thousand times as much business as there shown; yet we are put on a level with that State in reference to salary.

Let me go further and take the State of North Dakota, for which also a salary of $3,500 is proposed. Here is the record: Eight suits commenced; collections, $25; suits decided for the United States, 8; total number of suits disposed of, 8; total amount of judgments, $236; collected, $125. And the salary for that service is $3,500, while a salary of $3,500 is proposed for our district, where there are suits involving an aggregate of $375,000.

Every lawyer on this floor knows that when he undertakes to fix the charge to be made to a client for his services he takes into consideration the amount of money involved, the amount of labor necessary to prepare and try the suit, and all the elements which enter into the successful preparation, prosecution, and trial of the suit. So I submit that when the amount of money involved in suits is large (as it will continue to be in our State as long as suits are brought for timber trespass) the services of the attorney ought to be adequately rewarded.

Let me go on further. Here is another splendid illustration of the equality of this bill. The District of Columbia presents the following record, and I ask gentlemen to listen to it: One civil suit commenced; aggregate amount of suit, $287.44; pending, 1 suit (they have not even tried it yet); judgments on old suits, $147; decided for the United States, 1. That is the record of the District of Columbia. And what is the salary? Five thousand dollars. Why? Because of the superior ability of the officers doing the business? No. Because the officer trying those suits undergoes hardships in going from his home to the court-house to attend to them? Oh, no. Then what is the reason?

I want to say that if the District of Columbia is to have $5,000 I want for my State at least $4,000. And, Mr. Chairman, I am going to move to reduce the salary in the southern district of Illinois and in the District of Columbia to $3,500 unless we can get some sort of equalization. I do not refer exclusively to my own State. There are other cases here just as meritorious as mine. I propose to stand by the gentlemen interested in those other districts, and I ask that they stand by me.

Mr. BROWN. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question. On page 62 of the Attorney-General's report there will be found (Exhibit B) a statement showing the number of criminal prosecutions pending in the district and circuit courts of the United States July 1, 1895, and the number terminated. You will find, by referring to this report, that the total number of suits terminated in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, was 4,767.

Mr. HARTMAN. I understand that, and I have made no attack on the criminal record of the District of Columbia. I am simply saying that the idea, to which prevalence was given here yesterday, that there were only four cases in my district is erroneous.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume further time. I do believe that my amendment presents a fair, square, and equitable proposition, and I ask the support of the Committee of the Whole in its behalf.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, there are inequalities in these schedules, but they are in favor of the gentleman's State. With a population of less than 200,000, he asks for his State $4,000, while the great State of Pennsylvania, with fifty times as much population, is satisfied with $7,500 for the two districts. And when was the State of Pennsylvania known to be too modest? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No, sir. The gentleman has had his time yesterday and to-day, and I decline to be interrupted. The gentleman talks about inequalities, when under the bill a population fifty times as large as that of his State receives only double what his State receives. That State, too, has the great city of Philadelphia within its borders, one of the most important ports of entry in the United States. She has also the great manufacturing city of Pittsburg, where they have also admiralty jurisdiction and a large amount of business in it even up into the Alleghany Mountains, and yet the immense business of that State is compared by the gentleman from Montana with his own.

There is another suggestion I would make to the gentleman about determining these salaries. He refers to the District of Columbia. I think the gentleman is in error and has got hold of the wrong statistics when he states that there was but one case in the District of Columbia. He has got hold of something wrong, evidently.

Mr. HARTMAN. I said one civil case.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The United States attorney for the District of Columbia, without any earnings from mileage, earned $47,000 gross during the year 1895, and $31,000 net. And yet the gentleman from Montana complains, with his 160,000 population, and his earnings swelled by mileage, that there is an inequality in the salary there. There is an inequality, I admit, but it is in favor of my friend from Montana entirely; in his favor. It is true that in the returns from the Attorney-General's Office the attorney of the United States for Montana is shown to have earned certain fees. That is true. But, as I said once before on the floor of this House, they have been earned by traveling, at 20 cents a mile, and not by business in the court. They have been able in that way, by piling up the mileage account, to take from the Treasury of the United States a considerable sum of money which was never intended for the district attorneys or the marshals of the United States courts.

If I understood the gentleman from Montana correctly, he threatened to reduce certain appropriations for other districts, and if his increase is voted he will help to increase others. If I stated his position incorrectly, I yield to him now briefly for a correction.

Mr. HARTMAN. I said that in order to equalize the salaries between the United States district attorneys in Illinois and Montana, that if it was decided by the committee not to make the justifiable increase I have asked, that then I would move to reduce the salary of the district attorney of Illinois to $3,500 for the purpose of equalizing them.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes; and also that he would help others to get their increases.

Mr. HARTMAN. Wherever there is an inequality I will vote to rectify it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Exactly; that is just the situation. Above all things, Mr. Chairman, it was my earnest desire that there should be no "divide" here. It is that very spirit that I feared in the consideration of this amendment; it is that very spirit that I now protest against, and protested against it before. If we are to enter into a "combine" here to vote the money out of the Treasury of the United States between our respective States, it will bring about a scandal that will involve every man here who takes a hand in the proceedings. I do appeal now to this committee to stay its hand and to prevent the success of this—"conspiracy," shall I call it? It is hardly a conspiracy, because it is open and avowed; it is an open-day conspiracy, but a conspiracy nevertheless that the gentleman is trying to organize on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Five minutes additional was accorded to the other side; I hope I will have a little more time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will be allowed five minutes additional time.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. As I have already said once on the floor of the House, I foresaw the difficulty that the House was to encounter; and I must make another appeal, and I will continue to appeal to the patriotism and unselfishness of the members of the House on both sides to throttle this conspiracy the very day it comes up and make an end of it. [Laughter.] Yes; laugh, gentlemen! But you have confessed here the conspiracy between you—one of your number has.

I have heard it said by one or more members that "the character of my efficiency among my people will be affected or injured, or impaired in some way, unless I get my share." "My share!" as if there was a share in this bill. That, however, is the burden of the song of the gentleman from Montana, to get "my share," and in the name of correcting inequalities.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman permit me just there?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. If the gentleman will be very brief.

Mr. HARTMAN. I only wish to say that I have made no such statement as that.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Well, the committee heard the statement of the gentleman——

Mr. HARTMAN. Yes; they did hear it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. And if I have misstated the position of the gentleman, the RECORD will show.

Mr. HARTMAN. Yes; the RECORD will show.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not know what statement the gentleman refers to, however, but at all events I do not wish further interruption.

I want to say this, that the efficiency of a Representative on this floor will stand better with his constituents when he stands with his committee to take from the necks of his people the hands of these officers who have been robbing the people and robbing the Government at the same time. [Applause.]

Now, for myself, I care not how low the salaries are, so that they do not affect the enforcement of the law. If the marshal and the district attorney of my district attack me for inefficiency, or for any other cause because I favored the reduction of these salaries or the inauguration of this system, I will pay them for their time, for I shall be sure of a renomination and a reelection.

Now, the true and substantial character that a Representative should cultivate upon this floor is one of unselfishness, one of care and solicitude for the public welfare, for the good of the people of all classes in all parts of these United States, and not to look after the welfare of a marshal or a district attorney. What does it profit me that a man in my district is enabled to take a thousand dollars more out of the Treasury than he earns? I claim credit for having prevented the doing of it, although the thousand dollars would be spent among my own people. While the thousand dollars is being spent among my own people, ten or fifteen or twenty thousand dollars will be wrung out of the Government under some other pretext. Now, I appeal to the patriotism of this committee to stand by these salaries as they are fixed by the bill, unless there is an obvious and clear mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes, if he desires it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not desire it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN]. Does the gentleman withdraw his substitute?

Mr. HARTMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be considered as withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Montana.

The question being taken on Mr. HARTMAN'S amendment, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HARTMAN), there were—ayes 52, noes 63.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "three thousand dollars," in line 15, page 3, and insert after the words "New York" the words "four thousand dollars."

Mr. BENNETT. I do not desire to take the time of this committee to any extent. In abolishing the fee system and substituting salaries the committee have left the marshal and attorney of the eastern district of New York with a fourth-class rating. The district comprises Long Island, including the city of Brooklyn, and Long Island City and Staten Island, and the harbor of New York, with a population of a million and a half of people. The best attorneys of the United States practice in our courts, and we require an attorney of the very best ability to maintain and secure the rights of the Government in the courts. We have been encouraged by the fact that the western district of Pennsylvania has been increased from $3,500 to $4,000, and all we ask from the committee is that we be treated justly and fairly, and have the same privileges granted to us that have been granted to others. The amount of business done is about equal to that done in the western district of Pennsylvania; but they were allowed $3,500 in the committee's report, and our amount was placed at $3,000. I have consulted with the members of the committee, and I believe that there will be no real opposition to an increase of the eastern district of New York to $4,000.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the committee have not consented to any increase of this salary, and, as its organ, I can say that they know of no reason why there should be any increase. The salary was fixed with care and precision, and I hope there will be no amendment adopted. That is all I care to say.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BENNETT, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BENNETT), there were—ayes 27, noes 65.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 2, page 2, line 11, by striking out "three thousand" and inserting "three thousand five hundred" in place thereof.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I submit this amendment to the House. The salaries under that amendment would aggregate considerably less than the earnings have been in the last fiscal year, and I am informed that there would be a still greater disproportion between these figures and the earnings for the present year. I understand this bill is principally to correct the abuses of the fee system; but I do not understand that its primary object is to speculate on the earnings of the officers. I submit the amendment to the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 3, in line 25, after the word "the," insert the word "eastern"; so as to read: "for the eastern district"; and on page 4, in line 1, strike out the words "four thousand five hundred dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand dollars," and at the end of said line 1 add the words "for the western district of South Carolina, $2,500."

Mr. MCLAURIN. I do not ask for any increase of salary; but as the committee speaks of the "district of South Carolina" I wish to correct a mistake. As a matter of fact there is no such thing as the district of South Carolina, but the State is divided into an eastern and a western district, with a judge appointed for both eastern and western districts, but with a district attorney and marshal simply of the eastern district. In the report of the Attorney-General a mistake is made in speaking of South Carolina as the "district of South Carolina." I have called his attention to the matter, and have his letter, which I will ask the Clerk to read. I believe the gentleman in charge of the bill has consented to accept my amendment. It is understood that I do not ask for any increase of salary.

The letter was read by the Clerk, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., February 29, 1896.

SIR: With reference to the question whether there are two judicial districts in South Carolina or only one, I beg to say that I have caused an examination to be made, with the following result:

When the first register of this Department was prepared, in 1888, Mr. Jenks, then Solicitor-General, examined the question, which was brought to his attention by the appointment clerk, and advised that South Carolina be entered therein as a single district, which was done and has been repeated in subsequent issues.

I learn further that the question arose at the commencement of President Harrison's term and was considered by Attorney-General Miller, but I am unable to find any record of the conclusion he reached, if he reached any. The practice, however, has grown up of considering the State as a single district in all matters connected with the judicial affairs of that State, including appointments to office. Various acts of Congress refer to the State as a single district, although they also mention it as two districts. For instance, the act of April 26, 1890 (26 Stat., 71), is entitled "An act to regulate the sitting of the courts of the United States within the district of South Carolina," yet sections 3 and 4 speak of eastern and western districts. But it is useless to multiply instances. I am unable to find anything in the statutes which affects the provisions of sections 546 and 767, Revised Statutes, which divide the State into two districts. I think, therefore, that you should call the attention of the Judiciary Committee to this matter and have the bill amended to fit the case.

Very respectfully,

JUDSON HARMON,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN L. MCLAURIN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, that amendment ought to be adopted. It is a mistake in the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been suddenly sprung upon me, and I have not been able to hunt up the statutes to see just how the matter stands. The sum and substance of the effect of the amendment will be that the salary now paid the district attorney in South Carolina will be divided into two salaries of $2,500 and $2,000, and a new officer appointed, and then there would be one for the eastern district and one for the western district. It has always been the custom to have but one district attorney for that State, and he attends, and is required by law to attend, all the courts in both districts. The object now is to provide by this amendment for the appointment of another district attorney. Now, the effect of it will be to make two poorly paid officers, one at $2,500 and one at $2,000. I do not think there is any salary in this bill as low as $2,000 to be paid to a district attorney.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. BAILEY. There are several.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Another very bad feature will be, that it will operate directly against the purpose of this bill, which is to reduce expenses. The direct effect will be to multiply and increase the expenses. There will have to be another marshal. There is only one marshal for that State, and those officers have always done the business without any difficulty. If there is to be another district attorney there will have to be another marshal, and he will have to be paid a salary, or the salary of the marshal now authorized in the bill will have to be divided between the officer now occupying the position and a new officer to be appointed.

Then there will have to be another judge, for why should there be another district attorney and another marshal without another judge? So that, from every aspect of the case, it appears this will be a most injurious amendment to adopt. Now, the district attorney for my State is in favor of this bill. He has been trying his very best to reduce the expenses, and he is in favor of this bill; but he is altogether opposed to having a new district attorney, and so are the circuit and district judges. Judge Brawley, whom many of you gentlemen know, the district judge, was here the other day, and he told me that he opposed the appointment of another district attorney, because it was not necessary and would inevitably result in an increase of expenses. So I hope the amendment will be voted down. It will greatly increase fees.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the district attorney of South Carolina wants to take all the salary allowed by this bill and refuse to divide with another district attorney who might be appointed.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, that is hardly a fair way to put the question. There has never been but one district attorney in that State. I can not undertake to state now how this matter originally arose, but there never has been but one district attorney. So I do not think that is as fair a statement as the gentleman from Texas usually makes. The statement he made was that the present attorney—there never having been but one—declines to divide and wants to take all the fees.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the gentleman to state, Mr. Chairman, that the district attorney of South Carolina now engaged to fulfill and perform the duties in both of these districts.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. The district attorney has always done it.

Mr. CULBERSON. And that if we divide the fees or the salary between him and another district attorney, that they both will be poorly paid.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. That is what I said.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are there two United States district courts?

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. There have always been two.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are they district courts or divisions?

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. They have always been spoken of as districts.

Mr. HENDERSON. How can there be two district courts if you have but one judge.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. There is but one judge, one marshal, one district attorney. It has never been otherwise, and to change it would be simply to defeat the object of this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. We certainly do not want, I suggest to the gentleman from Texas, to make another district down there.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. You certainly will have to have another judge if you appoint another district attorney. That is what you do.

Mr. CULBERSON. But you do not increase the expense at all. It simply gives the amount to both that is given to one now.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the statement made here is true, that there are two districts, we do not want another one. It must mean divisions.

Mr. CULBERSON. But in Alabama you have three districts and two judges.

Mr. BAILEY. And in Mississippi you have two districts and one judge.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Why increase the number of officers?

Mr. HENDERSON. When the matter was before the subcommittee, I understood that there were two sets of officers, but now it seems there is but one United States attorney and one United States marshal, and if that is the case I think the bill had better stand as it is.

Mr. McLAURIN. There are two districts.

Mr. HENDERSON. But you are having one set of officers do the work, and that being so, I do not think you want to increase them here.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. They have always done the work.

Mr. HENDERSON. Better pass the bill as it is and let it go into conference.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that what is stated by my colleague from South Carolina is true. There has never been but one district attorney and one marshal, but there have always been two distinct districts. The reason why heretofore there never has been but one district attorney is because no other has been needed, but business has increased greatly of late. In South Carolina to-day we have what is known as the dispensary law, which has doubled and trebled the business, and consequently a necessity exists and there is a great demand for two of these officers, one in the eastern and one in the western district of South Carolina, in order to keep up with the business. There never has been in any of the districts throughout the country, except a few, more than one judge and one marshal, but in every State there are two districts and two district attorneys.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Is there not now a bill pending before the Judiciary Committee relating to that very subject-matter?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir; but the adoption of this amendment will supersede the necessity for the enactment of that bill into law. There is a necessity existing for the appointment of another district attorney, but there will not exist a necessity for another district judge. In all the other States, with very few exceptions, there is but one judge, while there are two district attorneys and sometimes two marshals, as I before stated.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. What necessity is there for two attorneys and two marshals?

Mr. TALBERT. I did not say there was any necessity for two marshals, but there is a necessity for two district attorneys, a necessity resulting from the dispensary law, which increases the business perhaps tenfold.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, there is a bill before the Judiciary Committee relating to that matter.

Mr. TALBERT. I know; but the adoption of this amendment would obviate the necessity for the enactment of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order.

Mr. KYLE. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph and substitute in lieu thereof "$8,000." I make this motion merely to enable me to present a few suggestions to the committee. I desire to insert in the RECORD a statement made by Judge Brawley, of South Carolina, as to the condition of affairs in that State. In a letter to me in reference to these bills he says:

> I feel very strongly on the subject, as my work for two years has been mainly devoted to an endeavor to correct abuses that have grown up under the abominable system which makes the compensation of all the officers of court dependent upon the number of cases that can be brought into it. So long as human nature is what it is, abuses must necessarily follow, and unnecessary, frivolous, and oppressive prosecutions be commenced.

In the same connection, I desire to print in the RECORD what he says in a charge to the grand jury in regard to this fee system:

> Judge Brawley delivered the following charge to the grand jury:
> "Mr. FOREMAN AND GENTLEMEN: Before relieving you from your arduous labors, which have been discharged with great fidelity, promptness, and intelligence, the court wishes to express its sincere thanks. Your work has materially contributed to driving from these walls that motley crowd of pimps and perjurers that has so long polluted them. Your findings have demonstrated that nine-tenths of the prosecutions under section 3 242 have no merit in them; that they have not been inspired by any proper desire to advance the cause of justice, but by the greed of miserable wretches who have sought to make money out of them. Some of these men have already been brought to trial and convicted of perjury, and others doubtless will be; but this evil, which has reached the proportions of a gross public scandal, can not be eradicated by the punishment of a few obscure rascals. A new crop will undoubtedly spring up unless some means can be devised for reaching the root of it. This lies in the fee system.
> "My observation on this bench has satisfied me that more than one-half of the prosecutions under this section—in the lower tier of counties I would say fully nine-tenths of them—are instigated or promoted by the deputy marshals. I must do Marshal Hunter the justice of saying that he has promptly removed every deputy who has been known to be engaged in this kind of business, but there are undoubtedly many persons now on his lists who ought to be removed, and would be if the truth could be discovered, and I do not despair of seeing the badge of a deputy marshal one of honor, as it should be. Those who hold the commission of this Government ought to be above the suspicion of doubtful acts, and the men who disgrace the service should be removed. They impair the usefulness and bring discredit upon the brave and honest men who are on the rolls. These faithless officials and these worthless witnesses would be powerless for evil if the commissioners did not lend too ready an ear to the tales that are brought to them.
> "The circuit judge, whose long experience on this bench opened his eyes to these evil practices, as mine have been opened in the last year or two, joined with me six months ago in a circular to the United States commissioners, giving advice and instruction in this class of cases. These instructions have had little effect. Human nature has been too strong for us. I say it with pain, for I would not willingly hurt their feelings, and they are all quite up to the average in character and conscientiousness; but the wretched system which makes their income to depend upon the number of warrants issued makes it very hard indeed for them to turn a deaf ear and a stern face to those who bring grist to their mill."

I will also insert at this point the remark of Judge Woolson, of the southern district of Iowa, from an interview, showing that human nature is the same in Iowa as in South Carolina. One of my colleagues in Congress lately remarked that there is only one thing that he ever yielded to, and that is temptation.

Weak, sinful human nature is the same everywhere.

In South Carolina and in Iowa the same results follow from the same causes.

Judge Woolson says:

> The law intends to provide, and perhaps as fully as can be under a "fee system" does provide, for a detailed and thorough investigation as to the charges made by the court officials. And if excessive or improper charges are made, the officials are required to correct them. There are always, under the "fee system," matters which bear unjustly, or perhaps I ought to say unevenly, on the Government as well as on the officers whose pay is regulated by fees. But this seems unavoidable. The President and Attorney-General have, year after year, attempted, by message and report, to impress on Congress the undesirability of the fee system and the desirability of the substitution of a salary system. But thus far without avail. I am not able to suggest methods under a fee system which would prove superior to the law now in force for examination of accounts of officials.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] on yesterday called attention to the temptations of the present law.

"Lead us not into temptation," he said, was the motto of this bill.

Putting temptation in the way of public officers by a system like the present insures the carrying out of the evil practices of the past. To withdraw all temptation it is necessary to abolish the whole fee system.

Sir Godfrey Kneller, the eminent painter, became a justice of the peace in his old age, and he discharged a criminal and punished the man who carelessly tempted the defendant by exposing his cash.

Pope celebrated this decision in his lines:

> I think Sir Godfrey should decide the suit,
> Who sent the thief that stole the cash away,
> And punished him that put it in his way.

Let us take temptation out of the law. At an early day in this session I took pains to go through the records of the Attorney-General's Office to obtain details to aid me in drawing a bill on this subject. I introduced bill H. R. 1457, and followed this up by presenting a resolution calling on the Attorney-General for information as to fees and emoluments for last year.

This resolution was adopted and the report of the Department of Justice has been received. This report furnished the Judiciary Committee data upon which to consider the various bills, and also greatly aided them in framing the bill now under consideration.

To show the views which I took in framing the bill, I append the following statement of the Updegraff bill (H. R. 6654) and report of the Attorney-General.

I have also inserted the rates given in the bill introduced by myself.

It will be observed that the bill of my colleague fixes the salaries nearly the same as the bill introduced by me. The same line of reasoning adopted by me has led to the adoption of the general schedule of the present bill, and I believe it is substantially as correct and just. The bill of my colleague [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] I think is an improvement over my own bill in many respects, though in its dealing with individual salaries we are very nearly agreed.

a Emoluments and expenses estimated for six months.

b Emoluments and expenses estimated for three months.

The above exhibit does not show the emoluments and expenses of the following districts, as both the marshals and attorneys are paid an annual salary, viz: Alaska, Indian Territory (northern, central, and southern districts), and also the attorney for the southern district of New York.

In framing the bill it was unsafe to accept last year's business as a basis, though it was proper to take those results as a circumstance to be considered in estimating what would be a proper salary. To accept last year's fraudulent emoluments as the sole basis of the marshal's and attorney's salaries would perpetuate the evil that this bill proposes to extirpate.

To legislate upon precedent—

Says Mr. Calhoun—

is to make the error of yesterday the law of to-day.

It is not safe to follow the basis of last year's salary which, in many instances, includes unnecessary and extravagant mileage and fees in cases brought to produce fees only.

The committee have therefore gone outside the earnings of last year and included many other elements of importance, such as the population of the districts, amount involved in suits, and general commercial importance of each district. While the salaries are some of them larger and some smaller than I would have made them, I believe the bill is a good one and substantially correct in its details, and that its enactment will save the Government very large sums of money.

I am glad that this bill has been attached by special rule to an appropriation bill, so that its consideration and final passage in the present Congress is assured.

The Committee on the Judiciary is entitled to the thanks of the whole country.

Mr. Chairman, I now withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the substitute which was offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], for the purpose of saying to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee that it is not unusual to have two districts with only one judge. The reason of it is this: A man indicted anywhere within the district might be carried to any division of it for trial; but under the Constitution he must be tried in the district in which the crime was committed. Therefore, if the State of South Carolina had been but a single district a man committing a crime at one extreme of the State might be carried to another for trial. It was to obviate the injustice, the inconvenience, and indeed the expense of carrying the criminal and the witnesses so far that Congress has been induced in more than one instance to create two districts with only one judge.

If it were true that this amendment creates new offices, still, as the salary of the two officers is the same as the salary of one officer, it would not increase the expense of the court. On the contrary, it is well calculated to reduce it, because it will reduce the mileage which is paid to the marshal and the district attorney. It had escaped the attention of the committee and that of the Attorney-General that South Carolina had been divided into two districts. But I venture to say the purpose of the division was in order to localize the trial of offenders, as I suggested a moment ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand well enough the reason for there being two districts with one judge. But the effect of this amendment is to create two new officers—a marshal and a district attorney. Now, there is a bill before our committee for that purpose, and we shall take it up at the proper time and consider it. But for one I am opposed to creating new offices in this bill. The bill as it stands is all right. If on future consideration of this question it should be deemed wise to provide by law for new marshals and district attorneys, we can then adjust their salaries. But I do not like an amendment to be brought in now which has the effect of creating a new marshal and a new district attorney. I am against it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is an objection to the method, about which I have nothing to say.

Mr. McLAURIN. If I may be permitted, I should like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. HENDERSON] a question. Under section 767 of the Revised Statutes the district attorney of the eastern district of South Carolina is empowered to perform the duties of the western district. In law there is no such thing as the "district of South Carolina." The district attorney of the eastern district performs the duties and draws the salary of the western district. This amendment would not necessarily change thee xisting condition of things; the salary is not increased, but divided in proportionate amounts between the two districts.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the amendment practically creates a new marshal and a new district attorney.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. This bill is framed in accordance with the law as it now stands.

Mr. BAILEY. Permit me to suggest that the bill does not provide for the appointment of new officers; but the present officer is the district attorney of both the South Carolina districts.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that.

Mr. BAILEY. And he would draw $2,500 for one office and $3,000 for the other.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why is there not a district attorney appointed for the other district?

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to answer that question, and I am willing to submit this matter to the good common sense of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TALBERT. An additional district attorney has never been demanded.

Mr. McLAURIN. The western district of South Carolina is what is known as the "moonshine" district. Most of the violations of the revenue law occur there, and it seems to me that it is important to have a local district attorney who is acquainted with the manners and habits of these people.

Mr. HENDERSON. But I would like the gentleman to say why there are not two district attorneys now in South Carolina.

Mr. McLAURIN. Simply because it has been the practice to appoint the district attorney from the city of Charleston, represented by my friend Mr. ELLIOTT, and give him both of the salaries. This is the only district in the United States in a similar condition. It is absolutely without precedent. The judge is appointed for both districts, but the district attorney for only one.

Mr. HENDERSON. For the two districts?

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then the law now authorizes but one district attorney?

Mr. McLAURIN. That is all. Which is best, one man holding two offices and drawing two salaries, or two men holding the two offices, and each drawing his own salary? Why should Charleston furnish a district attorney for Greenville? She has good lawyers, who would be glad to accept the $2,500.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well, then, we do not want to change the law at this time. Bring in your bill, and we will consider it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I have no bill. The bills were introduced by Senator TILLMAN and Congressman STOKES, and I——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAILEY. I withdraw my substitute.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. McLAURIN, it was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 12, page 3, the words "two thousand dollars" and inserting "two thousand five hundred dollars"; so as to read: "For the district of New Jersey, $2,500."

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to increase the salary of the district attorney for the district of New Jersey from the amount fixed in the bill, $2,000, to $2,500.

Yesterday, with such data as I had at hand, I took up and presented to this House a comparison of the district of New Jersey with New Hampshire, with the western district of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Tennessee; and the result shown was that, measured by the amount of fines and penalties returned to the Government, and measured by the gross returns of the office, the district of New Jersey ranks with the large districts, and shows three times the business of New Hampshire. This morning I have turned to the reports of the Attorney-General—not that for 1895, to which the committee has referred, but to the reports of 1893 and 1894—to determine the amount of business in the district of New Jersey by the cases determined; because yesterday every time that a column was run down and it was found that New Jersey ranked with the large districts in the bill I was asked, "How many cases were determined there?" Now, I want to call the attention of the House to some facts shown by the bill and the Attorney-General's report.

It is shown by the bill here that the western district of Pennsylvania is salaried at $4,000, Nevada at $2,500, and New Jersey at $2,000. Now let me call your attention to some figures for a moment. Taking the test that the committee continually submitted on yesterday, as to the business of the courts in the several States for the years 1893 and 1894, we find that the number of cases pending in Nevada was 20, in New Jersey 72, and in the western district of Pennsylvania 75. So by that test in that year we are just one case short of being as big as a four-thousand-dollar district.

Take the year 1893. There were pending in New Jersey 86 cases, in Pennsylvania 75 cases, and in Nevada 22 cases. The district with the 22 cases is salaried at $2,500, the district of 75 cases at $4,000, and the district with the 86 cases is only put at $2,000.

But the committee asks, how many cases have been determined in the courts during the year referred to? I answer, that in 1893 in the State of New Jersey there were 7 cases determined, in the big western district of Pennsylvania there were 5 cases determined, and in Nevada only 2. In the year 1894 in the district of New Jersey there were 6 cases determined, in the big western district of Pennsylvania 2, and in Nevada 1, and that is the comparison as to these districts.

Now, measured by the tests and figures presented by the committee yesterday, New Jersey ought to be salaried at $3,500 or $4,000, and measured by the test of this morning, the only test I have had a chance to look at—and there seems to be no data accessible here for the time between 1879 and 1895, a period of fifteen important years—but measured by the test and figures before the committee, the increase I ask is not only a reasonable one, but it ought to have been at least $1,500 more than that proposed in the bill.

In answering the gentleman from Montana, the member of the Committee on the Judiciary from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] dwelt on the matter of population. Why, sir, New Jersey at the last State census showed a population of one and one-half millions. I do not know of many districts as large as that. If you compare it with Nevada it ought to have a salary seven times more, because it is seven times greater in population. By the Congressional Directory for 1890 we find over 1,400,000 population in New Jersey. Now, here is a district, measured by its business in every year, far in excess of most of the other districts in the country salaried on the two-thousand-dollar basis. I hope the committee will agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GARDNER, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "four," in line 12 on page 4 of the bill, and inserting "five"; so that it will read "$5,000."

This is the district of Washington that I have the honor to represent on this floor. I desire to make a statement to the committee that will furnish a good and sufficient reason why the amendment should be adopted, and why there should be no hesitancy whatever in voting for it.

The State of Washington, as you all know, is the extreme northwest State of the Union. We have in that State nearly 500 miles of boundary line between that extreme portion of the United States and British Columbia. We have along Puget Sound a shore line in the neighborhood of 1,700 miles. We have all the coast line of the Pacific from the Straits of Fuca down to the mouth of the Columbia River, and the shore line of the Columbia River running up about 400 miles to the eastern boundary of the State. Ships are constantly coming to the ports in Puget Sound from the Oriental countries, and from all other countries in the world. There is constant smuggling going on in British Columbia and the British Provinces over the line into the State of Washington.

Further, I desire to state that under the law relative to that State it is divided into four subdivisions. Courts are held at Seattle, Tacoma, at Walla Walla, in the eastern divisions, and at the city of Spokane. The United States attorney is required to attend the courts eight times each year. He is the busiest United States attorney within the limits of the American Union.

The emoluments of this office for the last year, when the business has not been as great as in former years, has been about $7,000. At the same time, of course, his salary has been $6,000, that being the limit fixed by the law. When that portion of the bill was framed by the Attorney-General, as I am informed, and informed in a way that makes me believe it to be true, the lowest amount fixed for this official was the sum of $5,000. I know from my own personal observation and experience in those courts that this man could make a great deal more than that salary in his private practice, but he has accepted the office—of course belonging to a different party from that to which I owe allegiance—and he has transacted the business thoroughly and well, and to the satisfaction of the courts and the people of that State. Now, I know that this sum of $5,000 is little enough compensation for any man who will hold this office and transact the important business that is constantly before him as district attorney.

The reason why I speak of the peculiar geographical situation of this district is this: The United States attorney is constantly in consultation with the marshals and deputy marshals regarding all these smuggling questions across the line into that State, and his duties and responsibilities to the country and to the people of that State are very great in ways that are not shown in any of these reports, as my friend from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] can readily understand, it seems to me, if he will reflect for a single moment upon this subject. The business of the office is constantly increasing when times are ordinarily prosperous in that district, and during the past year, as I am told, the emoluments of this office have reached the sum of more than $7,000. The adjustment of land grants will increase his duties. His business is now very great in these courts, and as time goes on it must increase.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a remark was made by the gentleman in charge of this bill relative to the attitude of Representatives upon this floor on the question of these salaries. He told us how unselfish we should be, and the course we should pursue in regard to these amendments, and what the standing of a Representative at home will be, because, as the gentleman said, he wants a share. No man upon this floor cares anything about a "divvy" or share in regard to a matter of this kind. We simply stand here advocating the things that we believe to be just and right as between this Government and the officials that are appointed to transact the business of these courts.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to concede to my friend from Washington what he asks, but in justice to the committee, whose organ I am, and in justice to my common country, I can not consent to it. The gentleman claims that the district attorney of the State of Washington is a busy man. He gets $4,000 a year under this bill for that business, and I will guarantee that he will not send in his resignation if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have not time to be interrupted. I will guarantee that he will not send in any resignation. There is another thing. He receives $4,000 a year, and in addition to that, when he is absent from home he receives his subsistence, not exceeding $4 per day. In addition to that he receives all his actual traveling expenses. He can not duplicate himself. He can not be in two places at once, and he can not earn two salaries. I do not care how busy he is, $4,000 is ample compensation, and I venture to say that he would not resign if he did not get more than $2,000. I do not believe he would resign on any terms.

Now, why should we load up this bill with enormous salaries when there is no showing under heaven that there is any use for them? Did the members of this committee notice the little sarcasm that was involved in the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]? He took a different shoot. The gentlemen representing that State did not ask for greater compensation; they simply wanted to divide it between two officers. If the gentleman from Washington had put his case upon the ground taken by the gentleman from South Carolina, he would have had a better showing, for then there would be two district attorneys. I want to say also, as an objection to this amendment, that the bill contains ample provision for assistants. It gives ample power, whenever the work is excessive, to employ assistants, and it gives the district attorney clerk hire, besides his expenses and subsistence when he is absent from home. It is a better office than to be a member of Congress. He has no campaign expenses, and I will venture to say that this salary will enable the Government to secure the services of the best legal talent in the State of Washington.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is where you are mistaken.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DOOLITTLE, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DOOLITTLE), there were—ayes 39, noes 60.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to offer an amendment on page 4, line 11, to strike out the words "four thousand" and insert the words "forty-five hundred."

On page 4, line 11, strike out the words "four thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-five hundred."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in this connection that I favor this bill, but want to correct some of its inequalities. I hope the Committee on the Judiciary will give me their attention. I want to ask them to explain an inequality, and a gross one, which is presented in making up the salaries of some of the officials. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY], who has spoken so well and so eloquently upon this bill, will explain to me, if I am mistaken, because I do not want to do an injustice, why the district attorney and marshal from my district are not entitled to more pay, according to the work done as shown by the records of the court, than is given by this bill. Now, I would like this committee to explain to me why they fix the salary of the district attorney for the northern district of Illinois at $5,000 and the salary of the attorney of the southern district of Illinois at $4,500, and the salary of the attorney for the western district of Virginia at $4,000. Let the committee look at the work done by these respective officials, and state the reasons that animated them in making this recommendation.

Now, I say when a committee comes to this House and says that any work on which it has been engaged should not be reformed and amended by the House, it ought to be able to stand here and give the reasons that animated them. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to look at the pages and see if my comparison is not right. Last year the record shows, on page 58—and if I am wrong I want him to correct me—that in the southern district of Illinois the civil suits then pending amounted to 340 cases, in the northern district of Illinois 34 cases, and in the western district of Virginia 255. Now, the question I put, and I want it to be understood that this is on civil suits, is why the district attorney for the western district of Virginia should have $4,000 a year and the district attorney for the northern district of Illinois should receive $5,000, where one had 255 civil suits pending and the other 34? Now, go to the criminal suits, and let the gentleman explain what animated the committee in making the discrepancy. Look on page 60, and it is found that there were pending on the 1st of July, 1895, undecided in the northern district of Illinois, 119 suits; in the southern district of Illinois 167 suits pending and undecided, making in all 286; yet in the western district of Virginia there were 318 suits pending, which is more than in the two districts in Illinois combined.

That is, the work to be done the next year by the district attorney in the western district of Virginia is far in excess of the work of these two districts combined, yet the district attorney of Virginia will receive only $4,000, and these two will receive an aggregate of $9,500. What animated the committee in making a recommendation so glaring in its discrepancy?

Go further. Let us try it on suits terminated last year. Let us see the work that they have done. Look on page 62, and you will find there were terminated in the northern district of Illinois last year 231 suits; in the southern district of Illinois 343 suits. In the western district of Virginia last year there were terminated 567 suits, only lacking 7 suits of having as many terminated as were in the two districts of Illinois combined. He had tried nearly double the number of suits in his court last year as either of the districts in Illinois.

Now, sir, the gentleman spoke as to earnings. He talked eloquently about having to pay "for legs in travel and not for brain work." Now, here is the district attorney, who in brain work, in suits, in civil suits, in causes to be tried next year, and causes terminated last year, whose work is nearly double that in either of the districts in Illinois, and yet he is paid less than the district attorney in either of those districts.

Now, I desire to say to the gentleman that I am not here endeavoring to increase any man's salary unless it is just; but what I do say is that if the district attorney of the western district of Virginia is not entitled to $4,500 or $5,000, neither is the district attorney for either the southern or northern district of Illinois. The committee should be fair and not discriminate in any of its recommendations, especially in favor of its own members.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia seems to think that this bill was formed in the interest of the State of Illinois. I think the members of this committee recollect very well that the "gentleman from Illinois" was in a very small minority in the fixing of some of these salaries, and as to the salaries for the Illinois districts, they were the ones in which he found himself in the greatest minority.

Mr. SWANSON. I am glad you were.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Now, the gentleman from the western district of Virginia seems to think that the only estimate that the committee should take in fixing these salaries consists of the number of cases disposed of during a year. That is not a fair estimate. It is not a fair basis, as every man will know when he reflects on it.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have not time.

Mr. SWANSON. Take it by the fines.

Mr. CONNOLLY. In the western district of Virginia a large proportion of its business, the larger proportion, was internal-revenue prosecutions, the very kind of prosecutions that have been denounced on all sides of this Chamber since this discussion began. A large part of the earnings of the district attorney was because the cost where these internal-revenue prosecutions are so prevalent is made up from mileage in traveling to and from the commissioners' courts, and any member who will take the trouble to figure it out will find that about $3,000 in every instance of these large earnings by district attorneys was made up by traveling on railroads.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not take that. I took suits.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I decline to yield. I want to say further that gentlemen should remember that under this bill the district attorney for the western district of Virginia will limit his prosecutions to those substantial violations of law which, as a lawyer charged with the duty of protecting the interests of the Government, he will feel ought to be prosecuted, and when he travels in the necessary discharge of that duty, not for the purpose of earning salary for himself, but in the fair and honest discharge of his duty as the lawyer of the Government, the Government will pay him every penny of his traveling expenses and, in addition, $4 a day for subsistence while he is away from home. So that the inducement now held out to the district attorney of that district and to the district attorneys of other districts similarly situated where the distances are great to travel extensively and to prosecute every complaint that comes to them by letter or by word of mouth will be withdrawn, and, if they be fit men for the place, they will prosecute none but those substantial violations of the law which all good citizens will agree ought to be prosecuted.

Mr. SWANSON. I move to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and substitute "five thousand." Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, we had as well be plain and frank in dealing with any recommendations that come to us from our committees. The gentleman from Illinois leaves the impression that it was against his wish that the committee framing this bill saw proper to discriminate in favor of Illinois in fixing the salaries of these district attorneys. Last evening when the gentleman from Montana and others pointed out that men were compelled to travel 500 and 600 miles in some cases, the gentleman from Illinois said that the right test, as to the emoluments that the district attorney ought to receive, was the number of suits tried; that we were not paying him for legs, but for brains.

I accepted that test, and I have shown whether the district attorney for the western district of Virginia does more or less work than the district attorneys for the State of Illinois. Measuring the work by civil suits, I found that he did twice as much work last year as was done by any district attorney in the State of Illinois. Then I went further, and showed that the work that he has got to do next year, that is, suits pending in his court undecided, were more than the entire number in the Federal courts of Illinois. I went further, and showed that he only lacked seven suits of trying as many as both district attorneys for the State of Illinois tried last year, almost twice as many as either one of them. And yet the salary of the district attorney for my district is put at $4,000, while the salaries of the two district attorneys for the State of Illinois are put at $5,000 and $4,500, respectively.

Now, that is a plain case. The committee can not explain away a gross inequality and injustice like that. Come forward now, gentlemen, and say in a frank and manly way that if the district attorney for the southern district of Illinois or for the northern district of Illinois is entitled to $4,500 a year, then the district attorney for the State of Virginia is entitled to the same. Is this House to be unjust? Is this House to deprive a public officer of his due when he earns it by the work that he does simply because a committee sees proper to make such a discrimination as that which I have pointed out?

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. What is the relative population of the district of Virginia and of the northern district of Illinois?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know what the relative population is, but we are not paying people here for living in densely populated communities; we are paying them for work done. That has been the test all through. I say again, that the district attorney for the western district of Virginia has earned each year more than his maximum. He earns his full salary the first six months. He does not do it by travel, but by active work in court. I am not putting the case on the ground of the maximum receipts. I will guarantee that he does more work than both the district attorneys in the State of Illinois. I am putting the case on the work done, and now, because my district is not fortunate enough to have a representative on the Judiciary Committee, is it to receive no consideration at the hands of this House? If I am wrong about this matter I wish to know it. I do not desire to misrepresent the case or to do any injustice. If the committee will show me any reason why the district attorney for the southern or for the northern district of Illinois should receive more money than the district attorney for the western district of Virginia, I am willing to withdraw my amendment; but I say that when you take the records of the courts, the suits decided, the work done, and the work to be done next year, they do not show any such result, and consequently I claim that my district is entitled to the same consideration at the hands of this House as is given to the districts in the State of Illinois.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, I think, makes an unjust charge. There are two members of the committee from Missouri, Judge DE ARMOND and myself, and neither of us has asked for the salaries of the attorneys of the courts that are held in St. Louis or in Kansas City any sum in excess of $4,000. The chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee both represent judicial districts, yet they do not ask for more than $4,000. As to the districts represented by members of the committee, the one represented by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CONNOLLY, gets $4,500 a year for the salary of the district attorney; the one represented by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CULBERSON, gets $5,000 a year, and the one represented by the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. TERRY, gets $5,000 a year. Now, everybody knows that the United States courts at Fort Smith, Ark., and at Paris, Tex., are the two best working—I should say the two most overworked—district courts in the country. The gentleman from Virginia has made the charge of discrimination against the committee, and it is not true.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is not merely the amount of the earnings of the office that should be taken into account when fixing the salary. It is not merely the number of cases. You should consider also the character of the cases; and I say here, without fear of successful contradiction, that a half dozen of the cases tried in the southern district of Illinois are more important than the whole number of these internal-revenue cases that are tried in the district concerning which the gentleman from Virginia has spoken so earnestly.

There is something more than the number of cases; there is something more than the earnings to be considered; we must take into consideration the nature and character of the cases.

Mr. HARTMAN. And the amount involved.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SWANSON, it was rejected, there being—ayes 23, noes 62.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 16, on page 3, the words "four thousand dollars" and inserting "$3,500." [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Why, that is a reduction.

Mr. DINGLEY. We will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, no one appreciates more fully than I do the difficulties surrounding the Committee on the Judiciary in an attempt to present to this House an equitable bill placing the United States district attorneys and marshals upon salaries rather than upon fees in accordance with the present system.

I believe that this committee, so far from arriving at a just conclusion, is misled by the arguments of certain gentlemen as to the inequalities between their districts and some other districts elsewhere in the United States, with the business of which they are in no wise familiar. It is my purpose in offering this amendment to ask its acceptance by this Committee of the Whole because of my personal knowledge of the business coming before the Federal courts in the State of North Carolina. I know that the salary of the district attorney of the eastern district, when placed at $4,000, is too large in proportion to the duties he is called upon to perform, whereas I believe that the salary allowed to the district attorney in the western district, $4,500, is no more than an adequate compensation for that officer. I wish to compare the eastern district of North Carolina with the western district of that State—two districts the business of which I am familiar with—rather than to undertake to show inequitable action by the Committee on the Judiciary by comparing one of the districts of my State with some districts as to the business of which I know absolutely nothing.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the report of the Attorney-General of the United States, in which I find as Exhibit A, page 58, a statement showing the number of civil suits to which the United States was a party pending in the district and circuit courts of the United States July 1, 1895, with the number terminated during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895. I find here that in the eastern district of North Carolina there were pending July 1, 1895, 31 cases, and in the western district of the same State, 49 cases. The number of suits disposed of and terminated during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, in the eastern district was 15, and in the western district, 759.

I find also in this volume a statement showing the number of criminal prosecutions pending in the circuit and district courts of the United States on July 1, 1895, by which it appears that the number of such prosecutions pending in the eastern district of North Carolina was 101; in the western district, 367; the number terminated in the eastern district, 233, in the western district, 1,049.

Then I turn to Exhibit C, being a statement of the amounts arising from civil suits to which the United States was a party and from criminal prosecutions in the circuit and district courts of the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895. By this statement it appears that the amount of fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed during the year in the eastern district of North Carolina was $27,526.08, and in the western district, $47,006.40.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may be allowed a moment or two longer in explanation of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's time will be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SETTLE. Those figures, Mr. Chairman, represent the difference between the business transacted in the eastern district and the business transacted in the western district. No one realizes more fully than myself the vices of the fee system under which we are now living. Every Federal court held in my district illustrates the vices of that system and demands in thunder tones some remedy. I believe that the desired adjustment will be largely reached if we place these officers on salaries rather than on fees. When they are under the fee system, they care but little for the merits of the prosecutions that they inaugurate, provided the emoluments of their offices are increased. I should like to see the Committee on the Judiciary accept later on a further amendment of this proposition, which would provide that in cases originating before United States commissioners, where there is a failure to convict, the commissioner, as well as the deputy marshal serving the process and the witnesses in cases which result in acquittal, should receive half fees only, thus depriving these parties of the incentive to originate prosecutions.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Would you apply that to jurors, too?

Mr. SETTLE. No, sir; not to jurors, because they are officers of the court, obeying its summons and attending for the trial of causes. But I know that in the criminal jurisprudence of North Carolina we have a provision that where a magistrate binds over the defendant and there is subsequently an acquittal, or even where the grand jury makes a presentment and there is an acquittal, the witnesses and officers receive half fees only; and that provision operates to keep out of our courts frivolous and insignificant prosecutions.

Mr. SHAW and Mr. HENDERSON rose.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SETTLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], representing the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall be very brief, and will then yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say that the committee first fixed the salary for the districts which my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SETTLE] has been discussing at $3,000. But in consultation with the Attorney-General we put to him the question: What were the relations of this district to the "moonshiners"? and he replied that it was from that standpoint an important district, and the service should not be weakened at that point. And the Committee on the Judiciary, considering this matter, and desiring to be fair all along the line, from the best information we could get and with an intention under no circumstances of crippling the Government in all proper enforcement of the laws, and on the suggestion of the Attorney-General, raised this salary from $3,000 to $4,000, and I hope that sum will be permitted to stand.

Mr. SETTLE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SETTLE. I wanted to suggest that my familiarity with that district leads me to make the assertion that of the illicit distilling of which the Attorney-General speaks eight-tenths of it is in the western district, and the eastern district, therefore, has not, as I have already said, as large a business before the United States courts as the other. There are fewer distilleries in that district and they are principally engaged in the turpentine business.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do you live in that district?

Mr. SETTLE. A part of my district is included in the eastern district——

Mr. HENDERSON (interrupting). Then you are not in the district any more than I am; and the information before us comes from an authoritative source. The gentleman does not live in the district, neither do I; and I should be unwilling to endanger the enforcement of the law in this whole country by not keeping a good man in as district attorney and ranking that district, under all of the circumstances that have been presented to us, as it should be ranked. I have no pride in standing by the bill; but I am willing at all times to stand by a bill that will bear criticism as I believe this will.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina, whom I am afraid I have deprived of the floor.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I happen to know personally the United States attorney for the eastern district of the State of North Carolina, and I am able to say that he is admittedly one of the ablest lawyers in the State.

My friend Mr. SETTLE referred to the fact that there were few cases pending in that eastern district. Mr. Aycock, the attorney there, is a man who pushes his cases with vigor. There are not perhaps as many cases on the docket as there are in the western district, and I think I am able to give you the reason. I have practiced with the district attorney there and know his methods. He does not allow frivolous cases to go into the Federal courts at all. Where there are prosecutions and complaints that ought not to be carried there he stops them right in the bud.

I say most emphatically that in the eastern district of the State of North Carolina to-day moonshining is more on the increase than in any other part of the United States. In my own county of Cumberland ten years ago I do not believe there was one illicit distillery. To-day I do not doubt that there are a dozen of them. The district attorney for that district has been vigorous in the prosecution of suits pending before the Federal courts; and invariably it has been his custom not to allow any cases to go before the court without good grounds.

I hope the committee, therefore, will not consent to reduce the salary of a man who is efficient and capable, who exercises the duties of his office with proper care and diligence, and who has heretofore, as I understand, been making $5,000 a year from the office.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. WOODARD].

Mr. WOODARD. I move, as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SETTLE], that the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district be fixed at $3,000.

Now, I desire to say this: I was not in the Hall of the House when my colleague [Mr. SETTLE] addressed the House on his amendment, but I wish to say in behalf of the eastern district attorney, Mr. Aycock, that I sent him a copy of the bill the other day, and I have his answer. Although during the last year he has made more than the maximum allowed by the law, which is $6,000, and under a recent decision of the Supreme Court could easily increase his compensation, yet he has said to me in this letter that he favored this bill which fixes his salary at $4,000. He is in favor of the principle involved, and although it is probable that in the eighteen months that he would have to serve it would entail upon him a loss in salary of probably $3,000 to $4,000, yet he favors the proposition.

Now, as it stands, this compensation was fixed after the committee had ascertained all of the facts in relation to the office. The territory of this eastern district has been increased by an act of Congress passed a year ago. It has taken from the western district five counties and put them into the eastern district, thus largely increasing the business of the eastern district. Mr. Aycock is a gentleman of ability and character, and had conducted his office to the satisfaction of the Department and of the people.

Mr. SETTLE. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. WOODARD. Certainly.

Mr. SETTLE. In my amendment I make no reflection on the present incumbent of the office. But I ask my colleague if, within his knowledge, the business of the western district is not more than double that of the eastern district?

Mr. WOODARD. I do not know how that is, Mr. Chairman, but I do know than on account of the addition of new territory to the eastern district or other causes the business of this district has largely increased; and while the present business of the western district may be larger than that of the eastern district, and is larger, yet I have no idea that it is twice as large.

Mr. SETTLE. The Attorney-General's report shows that it is.

Mr. WOODARD. So far as the business of the eastern district is concerned, it is constantly increasing. I think it has probably more than doubled within the last year. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will not reduce the amount fixed by the Committee on the Judiciary as the proper salary to be paid to the attorney of the eastern district. I think $4,000 is a fair and reasonable compensation for that office, and I trust it will not be reduced. I withdraw the substitute which I offered. I offered it for the purpose of making this statement to the House.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. SETTLE, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SETTLE), there were—ayes 25, noes 52.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PICKLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 2 and 3, page 4, after the words "South Dakota," the words "three thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four thousand."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee more than a moment. Like most of the other gentlemen who have spoken, I am in favor of this bill, and think it is a step in the right direction. I think, however, there is some inequity in regard to the salary of the district attorney of South Dakota. It is placed at $3,500. I offer the amendment to increase it $500. Our district comprises the whole State. There is a great deal of arduous and expensive travel connected with the office, and this makes the duties very laborious. It is a large State, and I think under the circumstances this increase should be granted. Quite a large amount of business is done, far more criminal business than I wish there was. For the reasons which I have suggested, I think the district attorney should receive at least $4,000 a year, and I ask that the amendment be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. PICKLER was rejected.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out, in line 5 of page 2, the word "four" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will prevail. It is worth $5,000 a year to perform the duties of the office of district attorney for the northern district of California. I held that office for many years myself, and I know something of the responsibility and labor connected with it. While I believe in this bill, and shall probably vote for it, I know that it is worth more than $4,000 a year to perform the duties of that office. I understand also that the Attorney-General recommended that the salary of that officer should be fixed at $5,000 a year. I yield the rest of my time to my colleague [Mr. MAGUIRE].

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. HILBORN] should be adopted. The northern district of California is one of the busiest judicial districts in the United States. It is a district requiring a very high order of talent in the district attorney and taking the whole time of that officer. I think perhaps a more unfortunate year could not have been selected for taking the earnings of the office as a basis upon which to fix the future salary of the district attorney of that district than the year ended June 30, 1895. During that year the strike test case was on, which occupied nearly three months in its trial and incidental proceedings. I believe also that the Benson land survey fraud case was on trial that year, occupying nearly two months of the district attorney's time. As gentlemen will understand, the district attorney receives but a single fee for each of those long cases. The reasons that have contributed to make the earnings of other district attorneys in other districts small during that year also operated in the northern district of California. Never before, as I am informed by gentlemen who have held that office, did the earnings fail to yield to the incumbent the maximum salary of $6,000 per year and something over to be returned to the Treasury. It seems to me that a cut of $1,000 in the salary of the district attorney of the northern district of California ought to be enough, and that a cut of $2,000 is neither necessary nor reasonable.

As to the various practices against which this bill is aimed, and concerning which so much has been said, they have never been known in that district under any incumbent. Perhaps the reason for that is that the volume of legitimate business regularly arising yielded all that the district attorney could get under the law, and there was therefore no need of resorting to mercenary methods and persecutions complained of in other districts. Business expediency as well as justice suggests the adoption of this amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HILBORN; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAGUIRE) there were—ayes 19, noes 51.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 2, page 3, after the word "Michigan," the word "three," and insert the word "four."

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the committee up to the present time have not been convinced of the fact that they made a mistake in the preparation of this bill. While I am very heartily in favor of this measure, I desire to ask for the adoption of this amendment, because of an injustice done to the eastern district of Michigan. I called the attention of the committee, or rather of the gentlemen having charge of the bill, the other day to the matter, and I was informed that the salary of the officer for the eastern district of Michigan was fixed at the low sum of $3,000 upon the recommendation of the Judicial Department. Believing that the Judicial Department were mistaken in making such a recommendation, I went to the Department, and I hold in my hand a letter from which I desire to read an extract addressed to these gentlemen having charge of this bill in this committee.

DEAR MR. UPDEGRAFF: At the request of Hon. JOHN B. CORLISS, of Michigan, I have gone over the data in the Department in relation to the marshal's office in the eastern district of Michigan, and I find, by looking at the emolument returns for the last five years, that the marshal's fees have averaged, net, $5,627.72.

The district attorney's emoluments, however, do not compare favorably with this, for the reason that there is so much civil business in the eastern district of Michigan. The marshal, from this business, of course, receives fees; while, as you know, the district attorney's emoluments increase as the criminal business in the district increases.

Detroit is an important point, and, for the reasons we spoke about, in Philadelphia, Boston, and other places the district attorney's salary should be increased. * * * I do not see any objection, and I think it would only be fair, if the salaries of the marshal and attorney in eastern Michigan were made $4,000.

Now, I desire to say with that information I went to every member of the committee, and I had the personal assurance of a majority of those members when this discussion commenced that they recognized the fact that a mistake had been made. Within this district, at the city of Detroit, is one of the largest customs ports of this country. It has a very large admiralty business. There are pending there the largest number of civil cases of any district outside of New York. Compare the business of the eastern district of Michigan with the other districts in the Great Lake States. Take Wisconsin; the eastern district is placed at $4,000 and the western district at $3,000. They have placed Minnesota at $4,000. They have placed Buffalo, which is relatively not as important a district as that of Detroit, at $4,000. They have placed in Tennessee three of these officers at $4,000, and both districts in Pennsylvania at $4,000.

Now, the business there is nothing as compared to the eastern district of Michigan, when you take into consideration the customs port and all the admiralty business that arises there, for which the district attorney gets no compensation whatever. I submit that in justice to the recommendation of the Department the chairman of the committee will see that I am right in saying in this instance a mistake was made, and that in all fairness this district is entitled to be placed upon a par with the districts surrounding Lake Michigan, when it occupies the most important point upon that chain of lakes. I ask the committee to consent that the House so amend this bill as to place the eastern district of Michigan at $4,000 instead of $3,000. [Applause.]

I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY].

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed one minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to state that the city of Buffalo, to which the gentleman from Michigan has made reference, very heartily concurs in his request that the salary for the eastern district of Michigan be placed at $4,000. But I wish to state further that the city of Buffalo does not yield to Detroit in its claim to importance.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that the salary fixed for the district attorney there is smaller, by comparison, than the salary of some others. I also agree with my friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] that the salary of the district attorney in his district has not been fairly equalized with the salaries of the district attorneys in Illinois; but that, it occurs to me, is not the question for this committee to consider. If some salaries have been fixed too high, it does not seem to me a valid reason for making them all too high. The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that nearly everybody who is serving this Government to-day is receiving more than they could obtain for similar services from any other employer in the world.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. BAILEY. I have some knowledge myself about the income of lawyers, and I must dissent from the statement of my friend from Illinois that all of them readily earn from $4,000 to $10,000.

I undertake to say that eight-tenths of the legal profession in America to-day are collecting less than $4,000 per annum. Not only will eight-tenths of them collect less than $4,000 per annum, but the best legal talent, the widest knowledge, the most thorough understanding of the law, is not found in the great cities or in those offices which command the highest income. Nearly every lawyer on this floor will bear me witness that the strongest men in our profession are frequently found in the smaller towns and are content with a professional income of $2,500 a year. In every district, Mr. Chairman, there are hundreds of capable men and honorable men who are glad to realize from their law practice one-half of the salaries provided for in this bill, and it does not seem to me wise in us to pay an attorney for the Government double what his equals can command when clients select their own attorneys.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, as one of the members of the subcommittee, that the placing of the salary of the district attorney of the Detroit district at $3,000 was predicated upon misinformation, and as one of the subcommittee I believe that it ought to go, along with similar districts, at $4,000. [Applause.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend line 6, page 8, of the printed bill, by striking out the word "three," wherever it occurs therein, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is not in order. That section is not now under consideration. The amendment refers to page 8 of the printed bill, which has not yet been reached.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Then I will offer another amendment, to come in on page 4.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend line 15, page 4, of the printed bill, by striking out the word "three," wherever it occurs therein, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to increase the salary of the marshal for the western district of Wisconsin from $3,000 to $4,000 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the amendment refer to the salary of the district attorney?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It refers to the marshal.

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendments are in order at this time than those which refer to the district attorneys.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That was the amendment I first sent up.

The object of my amendment is to increase the salary of the district attorney for the western district of Wisconsin from $3,000 to $4,000 per annum. I am in full accord with the principle and with the object and purposes of the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, but I regret to say that the arguments which have been presented here have proceeded upon lines that I do not approve of. I do not believe that this country ought to adopt a national policy on the single theory of economy. There is something higher and nobler than that. The proper enforcement of the law has more to do with the well-being of the American people than any question of economy, and I offer this amendment because in my estimation, knowing the business of the western district of Wisconsin as I do, $3,000 a year will not command the services of such a member of the legal profession to perform the duties of United States district attorney as we ought to have for the proper enforcement and administration of those laws. We ought, as a committee, to hesitate, we ought to pause and consider that we should have for these positions throughout the country men of first-class ability, men who can, by reason of their ability, their experience, and their good judgment, lessen the expenses of the courts in other directions aside from their own salaries; and unless we pay sufficient compensation to secure the services of men of good judgment and discrimination we shall defeat the very object of this bill by employing men who are not capable of properly discharging the duties of these offices.

Now, Mr. Chairman, $3,000 is a very small compensation for a lawyer of any ability in our section of the country, and I desire to see the compensation of the district attorney of the district increased as my amendment proposes, so that we may have a man capable of performing the duties of the office acceptably to the Government and to the people at large. We can better afford to pay for the proper administration of the law than we can afford to economize, and have poor administration as a result.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I most earnestly support the principle upon which this bill is constructed. The bill may not be perfect in all its details, and perhaps it does not go far enough in the direction of a more efficient administration, but obviously it makes a long step in the right direction. It abolishes the pernicious fee system in the main, with respect to the offices of marshals and attorneys, and substitutes instead fixed rates of compensation. It puts to open shame the organized greed of rapacious marshals, attorneys, and their subordinates by repealing the statutory enactments which invite frivolous indictments and petty persecutions. It speaks for honest, frugal reform in the administration of justice and for a discontinuance of organized oppression, pillage, and plunder under legal forms. It stops malicious prosecutions, while furnishing ample machinery for the prosecution of willful violations of the law. In short, it provides all necessary safeguards for an efficient prosecution of offenders, while at the same time forbidding avaricious Federal officials longer to harass and annoy honest citizens. Many, perhaps most, of the Federal officials have been honest and faithful, even under the existing system, but the law has been invoked in innumerable cases in the interest of malice and avarice. I therefore commend the pending bill as a beneficent instrument for the protection of the people and of the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GRIFFIN, it was rejected.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I move to amend by striking out, after the word "Nebraska," in line 9, page 3, the words "thirty-five hundred dollars" and inserting "$4,000"; so as to read: "For the district of Nebraska, $4,000."

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to criticise the Committee on the Judiciary for framing and presenting this bill. I am in full sympathy with the principle involved. I am in favor of abolishing the fee system and establishing salaries for United States district attorneys and marshals. But I think that this bill does an injustice to the district that I represent in part. I know of no better rule for fixing these salaries than to consider the business in which the people in the different districts are engaged. The people of the State of Iowa are mostly agriculturists. So they are in Missouri, in Kansas, and in South Dakota. The State of Nebraska borders upon these States. When we consider the population of these States, we find that Iowa has not by a long way twice as many people as Nebraska has; yet the committee has fixed the salary of the district attorneys in the two districts of Iowa at $4,000 each, and the salary for the district attorney for the district of Nebraska at $3,500. In the district of western Missouri, adjoining my State, the salary has been fixed at $4,000, as against $3,500 in the district of Nebraska.

In Colorado, lying west of and adjoining my State, with not half as many people, $4,000 is the salary fixed by this bill. In South Dakota, adjoining my State on the north, the salary is fixed at $3,500, although that State has less than one-half the population that we have.

Now, all the people in the districts I have named are engaged in substantially the same kind of business; they will have in the future substantially the same kind of litigation in the Federal courts of their respective districts, and the importance and volume of that litigation, so far as the district attorneys have to do with it, will be in the proportions of the population of these districts. While I do not complain of the committee's work in presenting this bill—I think it is in principle correct—yet the committee has done an injustice to the district of Nebraska. I believe that in fixing these salaries for the future we ought to fix them upon as nearly a correct and equitable a basis as possible, and it seems to me that the salaries in the districts I have named ought to be cut down or the salary in the district of Nebraska ought to be increased. While I do not say that $3,500 may not be salary enough for the district attorney of Nebraska, I say that if it is, it is enough for each of the Iowa districts; it is enough for the western Missouri district; it is enough for the Colorado district, and it is more than enough for South Dakota. The salaries in these districts ought to be equalized, and that is the purpose of my amendment.

It may be said in answer that the business in Nebraska last year has not shown that the district attorney there is entitled to as much as the attorney in each of the Iowa districts. I have not examined the records to ascertain the amount of business transacted by the district attorneys in these respective districts.

The volume of criminal business in the Federal courts depends largely upon the activity and conscience of the marshals.

If a marshal is disposed to hunt up trivial violations of the internal-revenue laws and Federal statutes he may swell the emoluments of his office as well as add business to the district attorney's office.

In the district of Nebraska the marshal, although a Democrat, is a most conscientious officer; he does not go out and hunt up business for the sole purpose of increasing the emoluments of his office. The district attorney is also an honest, conscientious officer, and does not encourage unnecessary prosecutions to increase the emoluments of his office. There may not have been as much business, therefore, in that district last year as in either of the Iowa districts; but if you will take the average of the business transacted there during the last five years I think you will find it equal to that in either of the Iowa districts or in the western district of Missouri or in the district of Colorado, and largely in excess of the business in the South Dakota district, and probably as much as in the district of Kansas. Yet the salary of the district attorney in the district of Nebraska is placed at $3,500, while in all the other districts I have named, except South Dakota, $4,000 salary is allowed. I insist that if this committee desires to fix the salaries of the district attorneys upon a just and equitable basis it must increase the salary named in this bill for the district attorney in the district of Nebraska and will adopt the amendment I have offered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I feel a great deal of interest in the result of this proposed change of system. I have not voted for any of these amendments, for I recognize that it is probable the Judiciary Committee has more knowledge than I have in regard to what ought to be the fixed standard of salaries in these districts. But I want to call the attention of the committee to a doubt that arises in my own mind about the working of this system. I am in favor of the attempt which the Committee on the Judiciary recommends shall be made, and shall therefore vote to put this amendment on the appropriation bill. But I think there is one matter perhaps overlooked by the committee, or else in their wisdom—and it is far greater than mine—they may not see the way to prevent it, to which I wish briefly to refer, and which may result in a complication that I think is possible or even likely to occur. Take, now, the case of a United States marshal whose fees during the last year were perhaps $6,000. You reduce him to a salary of $4,000, and what would be the result? I very much fear that his next year's fees that he turns into the Treasury will not amount to $6,000.

We have tried the experiment in Ohio, in the matter of sheriffs and in the matter of probate judges, and I think possibly with reference to the clerks of the courts, and we found, and I think it will be found on a much larger scale in this case, that these officers will fail to collect or even return the fees when certain friends of theirs are involved in the payment of them, and become indifferent in the payment, collection, and certification of the money into the Treasury, and will take their salary only, while the United States will find instead of a profit, I apprehend, a considerable loss in the transaction. I shall look with a great deal of interest, if I am alive in the next Congress, to see whether or not the aggregate collections will amount to as much as the aggregate salaries. I think the plan, though, is worth trying. I agree with all that has been said here in this discussion about the enormous wrongs which have been done by these officers in a good many of the districts of the country, and the experiment is worth trying to see if relief can not be afforded this way.

But if I had my own way about it I would at least have considered a proposition that the $4,000 and the $3,000 salaries should not be paid to these officers unless a sum equal to the salaries was collected and turned into the Treasury by the man holding the office. That would be a protection to the Government. I do not know that it is practicable; but I fear that there will be great laxity in the service in the collection of the fees. Yet the clerks are left out, and for wise reasons. It may be that they will operate to a certain extent to correct the trouble of which I speak; I hope so; and that by this means the evil may be remedied.

But, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding these forebodings of mine, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee to the bill and shall vote for it; and I trust that the committee is as wise in this particular as I think they have been in other particulars connected with this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I supposed when the gentleman from Ohio rose and addressed the committee that he was to speak against the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska, but I understand now that he speaks for it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I spoke in favor of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I beg pardon; I did not hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent—the time for debate on this amendment having expired—to be allowed five minutes in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I object.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. STRODE of Nebraska, there were, on a division—ayes 24, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 2:

"Provided, That whenever in the judgment of the Attorney-General the salary of any district attorney is deemed inadequate for the services rendered or to be rendered, the same may, upon the recommendation of the judge of the district, be increased by the Attorney-General and fixed by him at an amount commensurate with the services rendered or required; but in no case shall the salary of any district attorney exceed the sum of $5,000 per annum."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident from the debate on the floor this afternoon that gross inequalities exist in this bill, and that in many instances injustice will be done and the efficiency of the judicial branch of the Government seriously impaired if these inequalities and admitted mistakes are not corrected. Thus far all attempts to correct these mistakes have failed. The Committee of the Whole House has proceeded upon the theory that in this matter the Judiciary Committee is infallible. Believing that the effort to amend the bill in respect to some of the salaries is made in good faith, and in the interest of securing competent men to discharge the duties of district attorney, I have offered this amendment, which, if adopted, will give the Attorney-General, upon the recommendation of the district judge, the power to fix the salary of the district attorney upon a just and equitable basis in those cases where the salary fixed by this bill is insufficient. There are no two men in the United States more competent to determine the value of the services of a district attorney in any given district than the judge before whom the attorney practices and the Attorney-General to whom he reports. The authority to increase is not unlimited, but limited to $5,000, or one thousand less than the maximum salary now fixed by law, so that there is no opportunity for abusing the discretion placed in the Attorney-General, and which can only be exercised upon the recommendation of the presiding judge.

If the Judiciary Committee had taken into consideration the character of the services to be rendered and then had based these salaries upon some well-defined rule by which a business man would determine the value of such services, there might be no necessity for my amendment. But the committee admits it has not done this. They have been forced to shift their position as to the basis on which these salaries have been fixed some three or four times in this debate. The difficulties with which the committee has contended arise largely from the fact that they have attempted to fix these salaries arbitrarily. This can not be done without injury to the public service or injustice to individuals in certain cases.

If the House of Representatives, therefore, wants to correct the admitted mistakes in this bill, there will be no opportunity of accomplishing that end unless we leave the matter to the discretion of the Attorney-General. Then, if it becomes necessary to increase the salary of any district attorney in order to secure the services of a competent man, the interests of the Government will not suffer for want of authority to do so.

I am heartily in favor of the main purpose of this bill. I believe the fee system should be abolished. I have seen the evils of that system. I have seen the corridors and stairways of the public buildings in Winona, St. Paul, and Minneapolis, when the district court was in session, crowded with the professional witness, the professional informer, and the mercenary court commissioner. I have seen the accused, after a trial and technical conviction costing the Government hundreds of dollars, sentenced to imprisonment in the custody of the United States marshal until sundown, the sentence being imposed about 4 in the afternoon. So that there is no doubt in my mind about the wisdom of abolishing a system the abuse of which has furnished many men in my State their chief source of income for many years. But in accomplishing this reform we should be careful to not create a worse evil by impairing the public service.

It may be said by those opposed to this amendment that it clothes the Attorney-General with too much power, but a moment's reflection will show anyone that such is not the case.

There are other parts of this bill in which it is provided that certain moneys shall be expended by the district attorneys, upon the recommendation of the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General is given discretion in the matter of determining whether or not the district attorney is entitled to an assistant. The principle of my amendment is, therefore, clearly recognized, and there is no more danger of its abuse in the one case than in the other.

In the event this bill becomes a law and any salary fixed by it is found inadequate to secure the services of a competent man there will be no opportunity to correct that mistake for the next twenty years. No matter how great the injustice may be, no matter how much the public service or the enforcement of law and order in any district may be impaired, it will be absolutely impossible to secure an amendment to that law. The moment a member of Congress should attempt anything of the kind, every other member would demand a similar increase or his bill would slumber in the bosom of the Committee on the Judiciary till the end of that Congress.

Mr. MERCER. I notice that by this bill the State of Alabama receives $11,000; Arkansas, $9,000; Florida, $6,000; Georgia, $7,500; Kentucky, $5,000; North Carolina, $8,500; South Carolina, $4,500; Texas, $7,500; Virginia, $7,500; Mississippi, $6,000; Ohio, $8,000; Pennsylvania, $8,000; Illinois, $9,000; New York, $8,000; Massachusetts, $5,000; Indiana, $5,000, and Minnesota, $4,000. Has the gentleman been able to learn from the committee or from anybody else why it is that the great State of Minnesota should only receive $4,000, when Alabama receives $11,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know. I am not advised as to the method or rule which the committee followed in fixing these salaries. Mr. Chairman, I have here a statement prepared from the report of the Attorney-General which I desire to incorporate in my remarks. This statement shows how inconsistent the proposed bill is in respect to the several districts, and how grossly unequal are the salaries in certain cases. This statement shows the number of cases that have been disposed of and the number still pending, and if the committee will bear with me just a moment I will call attention to a few significant facts shown by this statement.

The number of cases disposed of in the district of Minnesota in 1895 was 213 and the number now pending is 124, while in the two districts of Ohio the total number of cases disposed of was 222 and the number pending 102, so that there are 22 more cases pending in the Minnesota district than in the two districts of Ohio, but the committee have allowed for the services of the district attorneys of that State $8,000 and for the district attorney of Minnesota $4,000. In the northern district of Illinois, where there are only 42 cases pending, the committee have allowed $5,000 annual salary to the attorney. I might enumerate a dozen or more cases just like those referred to, but my time is too short to admit of my doing so. An examination of the statement will disclose them.

Statement taken from the report of the Attorney-General, showing the number of cases, civil and criminal, pending in the district and circuit courts for the several districts of the United States on July 1, 1895, and the number of cases disposed of during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, together with the schedule of salaries allowed by the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I shall have to object, as objections seem to be in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, before the vote is taken, I ask that the amendment be again reported. It is not to increase the salary of any officer unless the Attorney-General of the United States deems it necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment. I regard it as a very dangerous amendment and one that ought not to be adopted. In the first place, let us fix these salaries now upon our best judgment. If the development of business hereafter requires changes, we shall still have the power to consider them; but this power should not be lodged in the hands of any one man.

What will be the practical working of it? The district attorney, surrounded by the bar of his district, will get up a petition to the judge, setting forth what he desires. The entire pressure of the bar will be brought to bear upon the judge, and upon his assent the recommendation will be made to the Attorney-General, and that pressure will constantly be brought to bear.

The remarks of the gentleman indicate that the committee have been confessing that they have made mistakes. That is wholly without authority. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER], by summing up the total of the districts in the various States, endeavors to aid the idea that we have made mistakes. When Congress makes an additional district in a State it is because there is additional business in that State requiring it. You can not add together the districts in a State, and their emoluments, and form a fair judgment of the situation. Take Minnesota. The emoluments of the United States district attorney were $3,485. How was it in the northern district of Iowa, where the gentleman in charge of this bill and I both reside? The emoluments in the northern district of Iowa were $7,788.43.

The committee fixed the salaries of the district attorneys for the northern and southern districts at $5,000. My colleague [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] and I asked unanimous consent to recur to the second section of the bill, and requested that the reduction be made to $4,000 in each of those cases, thus cutting off nearly $4,000 from the reported emoluments, while Minnesota is given the same rate, with emoluments at only $3,000. Why, then, should such an argument be made? Gentlemen, with two weeks spent by an earnest subcommittee, consisting of Judge UPDEGRAFF, Judge BURTON of Missouri, and Judge CULBERSON, sitting with two officers of the Department of Justice who for twenty years have had charge of the question of salaries and fees; with the full committee three several times reviewing this very section, the third and last time with the Attorney-General sitting in our midst, aided by Major Strong, the experienced officer of the Department of Justice, I say to you that if you should spend further weeks and weeks you could not tender to Congress a more equitable arrangement of compensation than we have put upon this bill. And I believe that the proposition of this amendment, to transfer it to the Attorney-General, is full of danger. We are the lawmakers. Let us make the law and fix the compensation, and let future experience test this question, as business may grow or recede, whether or not Congress should again change it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. With great pleasure.

Mr. TAWNEY. This amendment does not transfer to the Attorney-General the power to fix the salaries, but merely limits it between the amount fixed in this bill and $5,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not $5,000, the maximum of this amendment, $1,000 less than the maximum under the existing law?

Mr. HENDERSON. It makes no difference. You do not give him power to reduce, but you give him power to increase, which is a dangerous power to lodge in one man. He has himself impressed his views on this bill; and when we went through it the last time the committee with great unanimity adopted the suggestions made by the Attorney-General as to this section, and I certainly hope the committee will not entertain the amendment. I believe it to be a very dangerous amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 25, page 2, after the word "Maryland," the words "three thousand" and insert the words "four thousand"; so that it will read: "For the district of Maryland, $4,000."

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WELLINGTON. I propose, Mr. Chairman, to be heard for one moment upon this amendment. I represent in part a State in this Union, and I have a right to be heard in favor of any amendment offered in justice to my State. [Applause.] I will not be choked off by the cry of "Vote!" I do not find fault with the work of this committee, but I think that they are not all wise in their recommendations. I know something about Maryland. I live there. I know that it contains the great city of Baltimore, with its varied interests, its commerce, its maritime relations, and in addition to the city a large territory extending westward to the Alleghanies. In this bill I find they have given to the district of Maryland $3,000.

I find, as has been suggested, that other cities and districts not having such interests as Baltimore, not having the interests at stake we have in our State, have larger provisions for salary. I have no wish to trespass upon the time of this committee, but I do wish to bring this matter before it, asking that justice be done to my State, saying here that I have no personal interest in the matter, as the incumbent of the office is a Democrat, but an able lawyer, a man who is well qualified to conduct such cases as arise in the district courts, cases that involve large amounts and take a great deal of time. If you are inclined to do justice, as you did in the case of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] as to the great city of Detroit, I appeal to you, follow the sentiment further until you reach Maryland, and give us $4,000 for that district.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 69.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland, Mr. WELLINGTON, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, will act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 9, after the word "thousand" insert the words "five hundred"; so as to make the clause read "two thousand five hundred."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not making any complaint of the reduction which has taken place in the case of Delaware as not in proportion to the reduction which has taken place in other places, but when you put the salary for district attorney at $2,000 you are getting exceedingly low, and I asked a gentleman a little while ago what sort of a lawyer he thought they could employ for that. His answer to me was, "What kind of a lawyer have you had?" Well, of course I do not like to go into personalities. He informed me that his salary had not amounted to $2,000, and the probability is that the compensation of the men we put there never will amount to $2,000 if we have to take such as will accept the office upon such terms, and not such lawyers as we ought to have.

The same argument that holds as to this holds against the salary of the marshal as fixed in this bill. The marshal has been making $3,500 or $4,000 a year, but this bill reduces him to $2,000. The reduction is too great; the salary is too small. Gentlemen can see that themselves. If it had been put at $2,500 I should not have said a word, and I should have been glad to have seen a salary of $3,000 provided for the marshal, although he is now making more, and when the proper time comes I shall offer an amendment to make his compensation $3,000. Do not think, gentlemen, because Delaware is a State of small territory that we ought to have a two-thousand-dollar lawyer for our district attorney. [Laughter.] We ought to have the best lawyer in the State for that office, and if you would take some of the surplus which you expect to get from offices where you have reduced the compensation from $6,000 to $4,000 and give Delaware a few hundred dollars of it for the sake of justice you would be doing a good, sensible, solid thing. [Laughter.] If the district attorney has been getting only $1,850 a year, you ought to give him some of the surplus you save in other places and let us employ a lawyer for district attorney who will not serve for $2,000 a year because he can earn more and is entitled to have more, and so have the work properly done. I think it is a very modest request to ask you to increase this appropriation $500, and I hope you will do it, and that when you come to the salary of the marshal you will do the same thing for him. We in Delaware have no objection to being put at the foot of the class, but we do not want to be put entirely out of sight. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say on behalf of the committee that the compensation of the district attorney for the district of Delaware is $1,822 under the present very liberal system, and that this bill was not intended to increase anybody's salary, for none of these officials that I ever heard of claimed that they were not getting enough. I hope, therefore, that nobody's salary will be increased by this bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend line 17, page 3, by striking out "three thousand five hundred" and inserting "five thousand."

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the committee for five minutes I think I can satisfy them that this amendment ought to stick, because it is right. I observe that the district attorney for the district of Maine gets only $2,500 a year, and it is said that the State of Maine has more brains and less brandy than any State in the Union. [Laughter.] Now, why is it that the district attorney of the district of Maine—this State with an intellectual power surpassing that of any State in the Union, if you take the organization of this House and of the Senate of the United States as evidence of the fact—why is it that the district attorney of that State gets only $2,500?

Mr. MEREDITH. Because they have not got the brandy. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. No, sir; that is not the reason. It is because there is little or no work for the district attorney to do. They have only about 56 cases altogether in that State, and the district attorney is paid for the work he does. Now, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that this idea that it takes a very high salary to command the best talent for these positions will not do, for the reason that the distinguished attorney who will act as district attorney for the district of Maine will not be engaged in his official duties more than one-quarter of the time and will be free to devote the other three-quarters to his own private business. I have offered this amendment to enlarge the compensation of the district attorney for the western district of North Carolina for this reason. While Maine has only about 56 or 58 cases, this western district of North Carolina has over 1,100 cases. It is conceded by my colleagues here that the inequality in the work of the two districts is much greater than the inequality between the pay of the attorneys for the two districts. It is conceded by all of them that a district that has over 1,100 cases now pending will require all the time of the district attorney to attend to those cases, and therefore I claim that he ought to be paid according to the work that he has to do. Therefore, gentlemen of this committee, without detaining you any longer, I ask you to vote for this amendment, because it is founded in justice, as you must see when you take into consideration the amount of work done by the district attorney in this district in comparison with the amount done in the other districts throughout the country.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to this section the Clerk will read——

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the entire section the following:

That the United States district attorney for each of the judicial districts in the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000.

It is very evident, Mr. Chairman, from the discussion so far, that comparatively few members of the House are satisfied with the schedule of salaries which has been presented in this bill.

I do not see for myself why these discriminations to which attention has been called have been made nor how they can be sustained. We all recognize the fact that for the position of district attorney of the United States there should be selected men who are competent to transact the business of that high office. These district attorneys serve in courts each one of which is presided over by a judge who receives the same salary that every other Federal judge receives. We are seated here in the House of Representatives all of whose members receive exactly the same salary without any discrimination. We recognize no distinctions here or in the other branch of Congress in this respect. I know of no reason why there should be a discrimination made with respect to district attorneys of the United States. If we place them on the same level, giving each $4,000, we pay them a salary commensurate with the duties of the office and we do equal and exact justice to all.

Mr. LACEY. What does Nebraska pay its supreme judges?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Two thousand five hundred dollars. Let me ask what is paid to the supreme judges of Iowa?

Mr. LACEY. Four thousand dollars.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That, however, cuts absolutely no figure whatever. I want to say to my friend that the salary of $2,500 is paid to our supreme judges under the old constitution, which we are endeavoring to amend. There is no citizen of our State who does not recognize the injustice done to the able gentlemen on the supreme bench of our State by the payment of so meager a salary as they are now receiving. But we make no invidious discriminations among our judges. We do not say one shall receive $2,500, another $2,000, and a third $4,000. We place them all on the same footing, and that is the correct principle.

No gentleman can give a good reason why the district attorneys of the two districts of the State of Iowa should receive $4,000 each, while the officer occupying precisely the same position in my State receives only $3,500. These are sister States. The population in each is purely agricultural. The conditions are the same. The population of Iowa is not double that of Nebraska. The business is not double that in Nebraska. The officer receiving the higher salary is not a man of any better ability; he does not try more cases; he can not try them any better. Neither can you give any reason why a gentleman up in South Dakota shall receive any more or any less. In the same way it would be impossible to show why a district attorney in the State of Colorado should receive $4,000 a year, when the able gentleman occupying a similar position in my State, and doing more business, as every well-informed person knows, receives only $3,500. The business of the courts grows in some States and recedes in others. We can not gauge the salaries by the amount of business. We ought to put all these officers on the same footing. Give each $4,000 and make no invidious discrimination. Then you will be right. It is insisted, however, that economy is the motive in this bill, and that $4,000 each would increase salaries. Then reduce the salary of each to $3,500 or $3,000. You propose to give assistants to these district attorneys. You can reduce salaries and still avoid discriminations. The truth is, as all lawyers know, an attorney who secures this position manages to keep private business which exceeds in value the business he had before appointment. You can make reductions all along the line and still enlist the best talent. I only ask you to be fair.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Attorney-General is authorized to fix and declare the place of the official residence of the district attorney and of each of his assistants.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding the words "save in the district of Washington." Mr. Chairman, in the State of Washington, as I said to-day, there are four places of holding court, the State being divided for Federal court purposes into four divisions. Now, if a man should be appointed district attorney from Spokane his official residence might be fixed under this bill at Tacoma or Walla Walla, which would evidently be unfair. I do not think the committee will object to an amendment of this kind, because there is evident reason why the district of Washington should be excepted from this provision.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman be so kind as to state the financial effect of his amendment?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The financial effect, of course, will be nil; it has nothing to do with finances.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. How will this affect the district attorney in your State in regard to his expenses as provided for in the last part of the previous paragraph?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It will not affect the expenses in any way.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. If he has no official residence fixed, can he get any allowance for travel?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Most assuredly he can, I think.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. If he has no official residence, how can he get his allowance for travel from and to that residence, or for board while away from it?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As I understand, his residence would be where his home is.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. But by your amendment you propose to cut out the provision for fixing his official residence.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Then he could not collect any mileage nor any boarding expenses for the time he might be away.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In view of the gentleman's suggestion, I will modify my amendment by adding to it the words "where his actual residence shall be considered his official residence."

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington if that would now allow the appointee to live away from any one of the places where the court is held?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Oh, he would not live away from there, because they are the principal cities of the State. There is no probability of that.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not think that his amendment would accomplish the very thing he seeks to accomplish. This bill refers to the "official home" of the officer. That may be in one place, and the place of actual residence may be another, while the place of holding court would be entirely different from either, and the effect would be to give the marshal in Washington mileage wherever he may happen to go.

It strikes me that he ought to reside somewhere. There is no reason why he should have mileage in all of his peregrinations and the others be denied it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is not at all likely that any man will be appointed to this position residing out of one or the other of these places.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it is possible—altogether so.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Oh, of course; everything is possible in the consideration of this bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the attention of the committee to section 3, on page 4, of this bill.

This section reads:

That whenever in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney the public interest requires it, one or more assistant district attorneys may be appointed by the Attorney-General upon the written recommendation of such judge and attorney.

It seems to me the effect of that language is that the assistant district attorney will be compelled to be appointed upon the joint recommendation of the district judge and the district attorney. I do not think the committee intended the district judge should make the recommendation of the individual, and there is evidently a misuse of language.

I would like to ask the committee whether in preparing the section they intended that the appointment of the district attorney in these special cases should be on the joint recommendation of the district judge and the district attorney?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The effect of the section, as the committee understands, is that the judge and the district attorney shall unite in certifying to the Department of Justice the necessity for such additional official.

Mr. SWANSON. Then I propose to offer an amendment here that will make the language plain, so that there can be no misconstruction of it.

Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 4 of the bill, in line 18, as follows: After the words "district attorney," in this line, insert the words "evidenced by writing"; and strike out, in lines 20 and 21, the words "upon the written recommendation of such judge and attorney," for that language refers back to the words "may be appointed"; and strike out the word "recommendation" and insert instead the word "opinion," in line 21.

The effect of the language as it stands in the bill will be that the district judge and the district attorney must unite in recommending an individual to the Attorney-General before he can make the appointment. The intention of the committee, I understand, is simply to make the district judge and the district attorney unite as to the necessity of the appointment. It seems to me that this language as it appears in the bill would imply that they must unite in the recommendation of the individual, and so my amendment is offered to cure that defect in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, after the word "attorney," insert the words "evidenced by writing."

Strike out in line 20, after the words "Attorney-General," the words "upon the written recommendation of such judge and attorney"; and strike out in line 21 the word "recommendation" and insert "opinion"; so that it will read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That whenever in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney, evidenced by writing, public interest requires it, one or more assistant district attorneys may be appointed by the Attorney-General; but such opinion shall state to the Attorney-General the facts as distinguished from conclusions," etc.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it is clear that this section will allow the Attorney-General to appoint the assistants from among those who are not actual residents of the district? For instance, suppose a district judge in the northern district of California and the district attorney certify to the Attorney-General that the services of an assistant are needed, under this section can the Attorney-General appoint such assistant from the State of Iowa, or Pennsylvania, or New York to go out there?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not see that there is any restriction.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I think there ought to be. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, for the purpose of imposing a restriction in that regard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 3:

"Provided, That the said assistants must be residents of the district for which they are appointed."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not think that there ought to be anybody sent out to fill such positions in the State or Territory unless he lives there.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not want to argue the matter, but simply suggest that there is no apparent objection to the amendment, nor is there any necessity for it.

There is, however, what I may call a possible objection, in this: There might be an important lawsuit, such as is now pending in the southern district of New York, where the whole aggregated capital of the railroad interests of the United States is a party, and the Attorney-General under the law has power to appoint a special assistant. But he may desire to appoint a special assistant other than from that district; and he ought to have permission to select a man who is suitable.

Mr. HYDE. Oh, give us home rule.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. But the same rule might apply to another place.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. This is only for the regular deputies, not the special deputies. He has a right to employ special deputies at any time.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Then there is no objection.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question concerning section 3, the section under consideration. Suppose the district attorney comes to the conclusion that he desires to appoint an assistant to appear before a commissioner, and he does appoint him to go before a commissioner to examine a matter which, in his judgment, is very important. Now, does not the salary attach to that assistant district attorney? Let me make myself understood. If the district attorney can appoint an assistant to go before one commissioner or five commissioners, have you not conferred an authority upon him that is unlimited in its effect?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No assistant district attorney under this section can be appointed, except by the Attorney-General. It takes the consent of the judge, the district attorney, and the Attorney-General to appoint an assistant.

Mr. COX. Now watch:

That whenever, in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney, the public interest requires it, one or more assistant district attorneys may be appointed by the Attorney-General.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes; but you have stopped at the comma.

Mr. COX. If the district attorney and the judge recommend the appointment of these assistants, there may be one, four, five, or a dozen. Now, do you not think that ought to be qualified?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. We could not determine upon a safe limitation.

Mr. COX. I am trying to work with you all the way through.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. For the reasons which I have stated, we left it to these three men—the judge, the district attorney, and the Attorney-General—and the only question with us was whether or not we ought to put in the limitations that now exist. The difficulties of appointment are now sufficient, and the responsibility is wholly with the Attorney-General.

Mr. COX. And your idea about that section of the bill is that the appointment of these assistants rests with the Attorney-General?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is where it always has been.

Mr. COX. I simply want to understand this.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The language of the bill is:

May be appointed by the Attorney-General.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 21, after the word "attorney" insert "not exceeding the number provided by law during the last fiscal year."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to give the committee a word of explanation. Under existing law there are assistant district attorneys appointed all over the United States. The highest pay of any of them is $3,000, in the city of New York, and New York is excepted from this bill. The salary ranges from $1,000 up to $2,500. The bill as now drawn eliminates all of those assistants from the rolls, and substitutes in lieu thereof the power which is given to the Attorney-General to appoint men in their places upon the recommendation of the local district attorney and the judge. To this I accord my own personal assent, but I think that there ought to be a limitation. There has been no complaint that under existing law there have not been enough of these assistants. This proposes to give to the Attorney-General of the United States unlimited power to appoint as many additional assistants as may be called for, and I only ask now that while this power be given this amendment should be inserted, which will limit the number to those of the last fiscal year. It seems to me that the committee ought to accept that, because it is in the line of their present purpose of not increasing the number of officials.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I am unable to agree entirely with my colleague, and I call the attention of the committee to this provision in the section:

But such recommendation shall state to the Attorney-General the facts as distinguished from conclusions showing the necessity therefor.

That is, the necessity for such appointment. Now, we do not intend to permit the judge and the district attorney to certify merely the ultimate fact that an appointment is necessary, but we have required them to state the very facts themselves upon which the appointment is recommended.

He is an officer here whom Congress can reach. He must for every appointment have the certificate of the judge and the district attorney certifying not merely that the additional assistant is necessary, but the condition, the fact, that makes that necessary, so that a committee of this House can examine every time whether or not it is necessary to appoint an assistant.

Mr. TATE. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him one moment for a suggestion, do you not think it would be well enough to add after "district attorney," in line 20, "upon the recommendation of such district attorney"?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That has already been fixed by an amendment suggested.

Mr. TATE. Your amendment does not leave it to the district attorney to recommend the man; your bill originally did. It means the recommendation of the appointment.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is the way it is—to make the recommendation for the appointment.

Mr. TATE. I mean that he should recommend some person. The district attorney understands the situation better than anybody else.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think it is better the way it is.

I want to add one thing more, in reply to my colleague, and that is this: The number is limited to those appointed during the last fiscal year or the present fiscal year; it is immaterial which. The next fiscal year, or ten fiscal years hereafter, it may be changed; the situation may be changed, and there may be a necessity for an additional officer in a particular district. The amendment would not be so dangerous if it limited the number to the aggregate, but to limit it to a particular district is dangerous.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to say in this connection that the complaint was made that last year there were too many, and I thought that making the highest number the limit would be safe.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me this suggestion? I confess that I am very favorably impressed with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], but to cover possible danger that might result in the future, why not amend the amendment so as to read:

Provided, That it shall not exceed the number provided by law during the last fiscal year, except upon order of the President.

Mr. LACEY. I would not object to that. That would provide for some possible grave contingency that might arise.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would provide for not increasing the number except upon order of the President.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not see any harm in that.

Mr. LACEY. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, as modified at the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 20, after the words "Attorney-General," insert "not exceeding the number provided by law during the last fiscal year, except upon order of the President."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 2, after the word "annum," insert the words "nor exceeding the salary provided for such assistants during the last fiscal year."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I did not hear the amendment. Is this another amendment?

Mr. LACEY. On page 5 I have offered the following amendment:

After the word "annum," in line 2, insert "not exceeding the salary provided for such assistants during the last fiscal year."

The present provision of the bill is that the Attorney-General may appoint assistant district attorneys, who may be allowed such salaries as fixed by the Attorney-General, not exceeding $2,500. The salaries now range from $1,000 up to $2,500. Now, I think there ought to be a limitation, and if there be no limitation we may have too many twenty-five-hundred-dollar assistant district attorneys; in order to prevent which I move to amend by inserting "not exceeding the salary provided for such assistants during the last fiscal year"; so that if in a State last year the assistant district attorney got $1,500, he can not be advanced by the Attorney-General under this bill to a $2,500 grade.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I regret that I am unable to agree with my colleague. This provision was put in here on the express recommendation of the Attorney-General, after careful consideration, with as much desire on his part to effect the purpose of the bill as there was in the committee. Now, then, my colleague's amendment will inevitably create confusion. In some districts the assistant district attorney has been paid $600, and in hardly any of them has he received $1,200. In some of them $2,500 has been paid. Now, then, how can the Attorney-General tell, how can he determine, to which district this amendment shall apply?

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. All of them.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. So that confusion and danger will come. And then there is another thing. Ten years from now there may be very different considerations.

Mr. LACEY. Then amend the law.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I suggest also to the gentleman that another very good reason against the amendment is, that there should be no assistants at all, because the gentleman in charge of the bill in fixing the preceding section has determined on the salaries in proportion to the labor; and since all of that is arranged for in advance there is no necessity for any assistants at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is quite true. I hope there will never have to be a single assistant appointed when this bill is in force. I fear the amendment, and hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. LACEY. I would like just a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be heard for the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. It is suggested that circumstances may change so that the $1,200 salary provided for in the northern district of Ohio would not be sufficient five years hence. Well, Congress will be here five years hence, and if any official is not getting enough Congress will hear from him. There will be no trouble about that. Twelve hundred dollars was enough last year under the existing conditions and it is safe to leave it at that amount for the present.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was rejected—ayes 16, noes 53.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 18, page 4, after the word "judge," add the following: "Or the chief justice of any Territory."

Mr. FLYNN. I think the committee will accept this amendment, as it is merely designed to perfect the bill with reference to the Territories. The committee's bill provides that "whenever in the opinion of the district judge and the district attorney the public interest requires it," etc. Now, in the Territories there are from three to five district judges; in Oklahoma we have five. Now, I want to provide by this amendment some officer in the Territory who shall make these recommendations, so as not to leave the matter open to all the judges, and I think it best that the chief justice shall be required to indorse, with the district attorney. In that way you centralize the matter and avoid confusion.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk proceeded to read section 4. When the district of northern California was reached,

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, does the same understanding as to offering amendments apply to this section as to the preceding one, that amendments may be offered after the reading of the section?

The CHAIRMAN. After the reading of the section.

The reading of the section was concluded.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CRISP. That will leave the section open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will leave it open to amendment.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises, I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute for the entire section, so that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN] asks unanimous consent to offer a substitute for the entire section and have it printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HENDERSON. If it is simply for that purpose, and the substitute is to be subject to all points of order, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the substitute will be considered as offered, the points of order being reserved, and will be printed in the RECORD.

The substitute proposed by Mr. OGDEN is as follows:

That the United States marshal for each of the following judicial districts of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000, to wit:

The northern district of the State of Alabama, the middle district of the State of Alabama, the Territory of Arizona, the eastern district of Arkansas, the western district of Arkansas, the northern district of California, the district of Colorado, the District of Columbia, the northern district of Georgia, the northern district of Illinois, the southern district of Illinois, the district of Indiana, the northern district of Iowa, the southern district of Iowa, the district of Kansas, the district of Kentucky, the district of Massachusetts, the district of Minnesota, the eastern district of Missouri, the western district of Missouri, the district of Montana, the district of Nebraska, the district of New Mexico, the northern district of New York, the southern district of New York, the eastern district of North Carolina, the western district of North Carolina, the district of North Dakota, the northern district of Ohio, the southern district of Ohio, the district of Oklahoma, the district of Oregon, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the western district of Pennsylvania, the district of South Carolina, the district of South Dakota, the eastern district of Tennessee, the middle district of Tennessee, the western district of Tennessee, the eastern district of Texas, the western district of Texas, the eastern district of Virginia, the western district of Virginia, the district of Washington, the district of West Virginia, and the eastern district of Wisconsin.

That the United States marshal for each of the following judicial districts of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $3,000, to wit: The southern district of the State of Alabama, the southern district of California, the district of Connecticut, the district of Delaware, the northern district of Florida, the southern district of Florida, the southern district of Georgia, the district of Idaho, the eastern district of Louisiana, the western district of Louisiana, the district of Maine, the district of Maryland, the eastern district of Michigan, the western district of Michigan, the northern district of Mississippi, the southern district of Mississippi, the district of Nevada, the district of New Hampshire, the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of New York, the district of Rhode Island, the northern district of Texas, the district of Utah, the district of Vermont, the western district of Wisconsin, and the district of Wyoming.

The motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the legislative appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NICARAGUA CANAL REPORT.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the order of the House, made on February 19 last, relating to the publication of the report of the Nicaraguan Canal Commissioners, so called, be modified in this: That the words "together with the accompanying papers" be stricken out of it; so as to leave the order for the printing of the report without requiring the printing of the maps, which would consume, probably, four or five months.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following bills and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute the medals and diplomas awarded by the World's Columbian Commission to the exhibitors entitled thereto—to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 83) for the relief of John C. Cutter, late first lieutenant Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2367) to complete the military record of Dennis Whidly, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, as it relates to the record of a sailor, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1816) for the relief of Michael Ryan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2032) to grant right of way over the public domain for pipe lines, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 83) directing and authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to determine the cost of securing for the United States the channel in Atchafalaya Bay, Louisiana, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DANIEL on the 7th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

SECOND SPECIAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies, in cloth binding, of the Second Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, being a report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, submitted July 20, 1892, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for distribution by the Department of Labor; and the Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized to revise said report to include the labor legislation subsequent to the year 1891, and to annotate the report with reference to decisions of courts under the laws comprehended therein.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR COLQUITT.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], to report it without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, be printed, as required by law.

Mr. HALE. The committee report favorably upon this resolution as it was sent to the committee, but an examination of the printing act of January 12, 1895, leads me to believe that in this and any case of the kind no action on the part of the Senate or House is needed. It is there provided that in the case of eulogies upon any member of either body there shall be a certain number printed, with the form and style given, the distribution provided for, and all. I believe that there is no necessity for this resolution. I think all that is needed is that the subject-matter of the eulogies shall be furnished to the Public Printer and that he will then print the volume as the law directs. So I do not wish this to be taken as a precedent indicating that the committee need to intervene.

Mr. PASCO. With reference to this matter, I would state that the fact that no resolution of the sort had been passed was urged as a reason why the volume was not published. I called it to the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] yesterday morning, and upon my suggestion he offered the resolution. Upon inquiry at the document room we were told that the volume had never been issued, simply for the reason that such a resolution as is now pending had not been passed. It may be well that those having the direction of the matter should understand that such a resolution is not necessary, if the Senator from Maine is correct.

Mr. HALE. I made the explanation in order that the Senators from Georgia, who desired to have the eulogies printed and distributed, may understand how the matter rests at the present moment.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

EIGHTH SPECIAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That there be printed and bound in cloth 8,000 additional copies of the Eighth Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, relating to the housing of the working people; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for distribution by the Department of Labor.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRITCHARD (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2392) for the relief of J. U. Orr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2393) for the relief of William E. Bond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 2394) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2395) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the States of Oregon and Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2396) to increase the pension of Patrick O'Neal; which was read twice by its title, and with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2397) to amend section 2743 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the examination of drugs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2398) to refer the claims of Armstrong and others to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2399) to increase the pension of Ann Catherine Hull; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 2400) for the relief of James W. Morgan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2402) to authorize the sale of a part of the Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2403) for the relief of George J. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2404) defining and regulating proof in certain pension cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2405) empowering fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2406) concerning the weight of evidence in pension claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2407) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2408) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 2409) for the relief of Charles Brewster, and to place him upon the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2410) to amend section 2502 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2502 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read:

"SEC. 2502. A discriminating duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed by law, shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported on vessels not belonging to citizens of the United States; and any and all clauses in existing treaties in contravention hereof, and all acts of Congress contrary thereto, are hereby abrogated and repealed."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect fifteen months after its passage.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2411) granting a pension to Adoniram C. Harper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 2412) to make the city of Santa Barbara, county of Santa Barbara, State of California, a subport of entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2413) to increase pension of Emily M. Tyler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2414) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Wyse, widow of Lieut. Col. F. O. Wyse; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin introduced a bill (S. 2415) for the relief of B. J. Van Vleck, administrator of Henry Van Vleck, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2416) to prescribe and limit the power of judges and courts of the United States to punish contempts; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2417) to provide compensation to the reporter of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HILL. There being now a comfortable surplus in the Treasury, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 2418) for the erection of a public building in the city of Elmira, N. Y., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce a joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent to submit some observations upon it at this time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to issue a proclamation recognizing the political independence of the Republic of Cuba was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit some observations upon the resolution at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to submit some remarks upon the joint resolution at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. I will not object, but I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, who may be now considered an old Senator here, to the importance of observing the rule which requires imperatively that upon objection any measure shall go over. Unless the Senator believes himself that he has some distinctively good reason why he should submit remarks at present, I hope he will not ask unanimous consent to break the rule. I will not myself object.

Mr. ALLEN. I supposed the Senator from Maine would do me the courtesy of letting me make my request before he objected.

Mr. HALE. I do withhold my objection.

Mr. ALLEN. My mouth was open, I was making the request as speedily as I could, when the Senator, without paying any attention to me, I having the floor, interposed an objection. If the Senator wants to insist upon that objection I am perfectly willing he should do so, but I warn him now that there will be no unanimous consent for any measure he may bring in as long as I am here.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Maine says he does not object.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator understood how good-naturedly I was interposing. Of course if the resolution was to go over the objection had to be made at once. I said if the Senator himself believes there is good reason why he should submit some remarks now, I do not interfere, I do not object, I do not propose to object. I leave that matter entirely to him. I do not make any objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly supposed there was some reason for making the remarks or I would not have asked leave to make them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought I heard the Senator from Nebraska say—he will correct me if I am wrong—that unless unanimous consent was agreed to there would be no other unanimous-consent agreements during this session. Was I right in my apprehension?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator did not hear me say anything of the kind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator state what he did say.

Mr. ALLEN. I said to the Senator from Maine, who has now, I think, for the third time in two weeks objected to my addressing the Chair, and who is himself constantly out of order here and asking unanimous consent, that if he persisted in objecting to my submitting observations on this occasion, so far as I was concerned he should not have unanimous consent while I stay here.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the remark of the Senator from Nebraska was personal to the Senator from Maine the Senator from Maine will take care of himself; but I certainly should not be willing to give unanimous consent to any Senator to go on and make a speech who prefaced his request or accompanied his request by the statement that unless his request was granted there would be no other unanimous-consent agreements during the session.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Hampshire is altogether too suspicious.

Mr. CHANDLER. I only spoke from what I heard. The Senator sometimes speaks very loudly; at other times he speaks very feebly. It is not always possible to hear on this side of the Chamber exactly what the Senator says.

Mr. ALLEN. I give myself credit for possessing sense enough not to make a statement of that kind. I think the Senator may give me that credit.

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the Senator's disclaimer. I only wish to say that I understood him that way.

Mr. ALLEN. I did feel incensed for a moment at the action of the Senator from Maine, because I think this is the third time within the last two or three weeks, when the Senator from Maine had just taken his seat from a violation of the rules of the Senate, asking unanimous consent for the introduction or the passage of measures that were not in order and receiving it, that he immediately rose and objected to the same request upon my part. It was from my resentment at that conduct on the part of the Senator from Maine that I said to him, and I repeat (I have nothing to apologize for or to take back), that if this kind of treatment is to continue, the Senator from Maine asking unanimous consent here for the introduction or for the passage of measures and the consideration of resolutions, and himself objecting when the same request is made upon my part, I shall establish an equality between us in some form by objecting to his measures.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me say to the Senator from Nebraska, he can not alone get up a vendetta between him and me. I shall utterly decline to be on relations with him that oblige me all the time to watch him and pay him off for something he has done. I think he and I could be in better business than that.

As to my being out of order in submitting a request for unanimous consent to consider bills, I do not know that I have done that except for the Committee on Printing, which from time immemorial passes its measures in that way. They are matters of no great importance; they are generally for the convenience of members; they involve but little money and but few questions, and it is for the convenience of the Senate that measures from that committee should be taken up and passed at once when reported. They are mainly concurrent resolutions to be sent to the other branch. It is not done for the convenience of the committee; and when I, as chairman of the committee, ask that, I do what all chairmen of the committee have done for years and years, all the time that I have been here; and I do not feel that I am putting myself upon the mercy of Senators, because if the Senator should, as he can at any time, object to every one of the printing resolutions that we report and send them to the Calendar, I shall be well content. So I do not want the Senator, who, as I have said before when he and I have had perhaps some little controversy, is at bottom a good-natured man and does not want to be oversuspicious, to feel that I am watching for him. I am not.

When this morning he submitted a request to make some remarks, I called his attention, I thought in a kindly way, to the fact that it was an innovation of the rule; but I said to him that I would not object; that if he felt that he wanted to go on I was entirely willing that he should go on; and I can assure the Senator that if any other Senator had made the same request I should have called his attention to it as I did in his case. I think he ought to feel that in matters of this sort Senators may be allowed to invoke the rule in a pleasant fashion without there being carried with it anything whatever of a personal nature. I can assure him that I had nothing of that kind in my mind.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, just one word, and I will let my speech go. I did not stand in need of any suggestion from the Senator from Maine as to whether I regarded my remarks as important or not. I had determined that in my own mind before I asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to deliver them; and it occurs to me that it came with entirely poor taste from the Senator from Maine to suggest that I was violating the rules of the Senate when I asked unanimous consent, and did not propose to attempt to proceed without that unanimous consent, and make the suggestion to me that he would not object if I regarded my remarks as of sufficient importance to insist upon delivering them at this time. They may not be important to the Senator from Maine; they may not be important to the Senate; they may not be important to the country, Mr. President; but they are important to me, and I so regarded them when I asked for unanimous consent.

The Senator's interruption, his suggestion, his question to me, was an insinuation of itself (whether it was designed to be such or not I do not know and do not care) that I was in some manner violating the rules of the Senate. I say to the Senator, and I say to him in all good nature, because I have no unkindly feelings for him, that the Senator has himself been in the habit of violating the rules of the Senate, as we all do from time to time, without anybody making a suggestion of a violation of the rules to him or calling his attention to it.

I simply wanted to remind the Senator, and I want to remind him in kindly words and in kindly feelings, that if he persists in violating the rules of the Senate and then calling my attention to what I am doing when I ask to follow his precedent and follow in his wake, I shall see, if I am around, that he observes the rules as far as I know them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say a word. Is the Senator through?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say a word to this effect: When the Senator speaks of a violation of the rules of the Senate by the Senator from Maine, I think he is mistaken. If he means that the Senator from Maine, like other Senators, frequently asks unanimous consent to take up some measure of business which is out of order unless unanimous consent is given, then he is right. But the expression of the Senator is very broad. I do not understand that any Senators are in the habit of violating the rules of the Senate in the sense in which the Senator from Nebraska speaks. The business of the Senate is done, I am happy to say, so far as forms are concerned, very much as a body of gentlemen, such as we are supposed to be, do business in their own parlors, by mutual consent and conference, and with a great deal of mutual forbearance, in order to keep the peace.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I desire to ask, if I may, what is the business before the Senate? This triangular interchange of mutual apology between the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Maine is of great interest, but I should like to know, if I may, what is the pending business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will answer the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to address the Senate upon a joint resolution which he has introduced. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, let me suggest that I could have delivered my speech in about two minutes. The junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] desires to address the Senate upon another matter, and with the unanimous consent of the Senator from Maine, I withdraw my request for unanimous consent to address the Senate. Let the joint resolution be referred.

The joint resolution (S. R. 93) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to issue a proclamation recognizing the political independence of the Republic of Cuba was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL OF THE NATIONAL WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 17 of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, being the memorial of the National Wool Growers' Association; of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

REPORT ON SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, That there be printed of the report of the special agent for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska for the year 1894, 6,000 copies; 1,500 for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

REPORT ON NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 12,000 additional copies of the report of the Board of Engineers relative to the construction and completion of the Nicaragua Canal, without maps; of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

BOND REDEMPTION AND BIMETALLISM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. ALLEN, that under existing laws all bonds and legal-tender notes are redeemable in gold and silver coins of the United States of the present ratio and fineness, and that any discrimination between such coins is in violation of the statutes of the United States and the traditions of the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the resolution be passed over without objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that his resolution lie upon the table, subject to his call, so that the Chair may not be obliged to lay it before the Senate every morning.

Mr. ALLEN. That course will be satisfactory.

Mr. HILL. I simply suggest that the Senator from Nebraska had better call it up on one day's notice. Others are interested in the resolution as well as the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; let that be the order.

Mr. HILL. On one day's notice.

Mr. ALLEN. I will call up the resolution after one day's notice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

THOMAS CHAMBERS.

The bill (S. 306) for the relief of Thomas Chambers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Thomas Chambers, of Mackinac, Mich., $3,654.56, in full compensation for the additional expenses incurred by him in carrying the Canada mails, as contractor on route No. 24413, from Sault de Ste. Marie, Mich., to Mackinac, Mich., from July 1, 1875, to June 30, 1879, inclusive, he having contracted to carry United States mails only.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

The bill (S. 72) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau, survivor of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles P. Chouteau, survivor of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, $174,445.75, in full satisfaction of all claims arising out of the construction of the ironclad steam battery Etlah, constructed under the contract of Charles W. McCord.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 98) directing the Secretary of War to cause Lieut. Col. Jared A.

Smith, Corps of Engineers, to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat thereof;

A bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 17) for the erection of a statue of Francis E. Spinner at the Treasury Department building in Washington.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 1691) to authorize the St. Louis and Oklahoma City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3982) granting condemned cannon, etc., to Lincoln Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Hope Valley, R. I.; Woman's Relief Corps, Taylorville, Ill., and town of Newton, N. J.;

A bill (H. R. 4779) relating to the anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Marys River;

A joint resolution (S. R. 54) authorizing the National Dredging Company to proceed with the work of dredging the channel of Mobile Harbor, under the direction of the Secretary of War; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 108) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Newtown Creek, New York.

IMPRISONMENT OF EUGENE V. DEBS.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution introduced by Mr. CALL January 23, 1896, and reported February 4, 1896, by Mr. HILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution originally submitted by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The SECRETARY read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL January 23, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven Senators shall be appointed, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring into the imprisonment of Eugene V. Debs for an alleged contempt of court, who shall report to the Senate and recommend such legislation as may be necessary for the just enforcement of the law and the protection of citizens from arbitrary and oppressive exercise of judicial power.

Mr. GORMAN. Let that go over.

Mr. CALL. There is no difficulty about the resolution with the amendment reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] from the Committee on the Judiciary, which covers the resolution I introduced for an inquiry into the Debs case as to his arrest and imprisonment under the order of the court. The amendment is satisfactory to me, and I hope it will be adopted and that the resolution as amended may pass.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that it go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over under the rule.

Mr. HILL. I will state to the Senator from Maryland that the Committee on the Judiciary had those two resolutions before them. One was to investigate the particular matter relating to the Debs case, the other was a general resolution to investigate the whole subject of contempts and to report by bill or otherwise. That is the resolution which it is now proposed to pass, and it is desirable that it should be passed, so that the committee may proceed. The subcommittee in that case has already been appointed and is awaiting action on this resolution. The Senator from Florida does not press his resolution.

Mr. CALL. No.

Mr. HILL. However, if the Senator from Maryland desires the resolution to go over, it may do so.

Mr. GORMAN. On the statement of the Senator from New York, I withdraw my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the original resolution by substituting the following:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee is hereby directed to investigate the law upon the whole subject of contempts of court as enforced by the Federal courts, and report to the Senate whether any additional legislation is necessary for the protection of the rights of citizens; and, if so, to report such legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON TO CUSTER POST, ETC.

The bill (S. 1846) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the condemned cannon herein mentioned are available for the purposes stated, and can, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, be spared without detriment to the public interests: And provided further, That the Government shall not incur any expense in handling or transporting said cannon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to offer an amendment that two condemned cannon be also donated to Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa.

I wish to say in connection with this amendment that General Mathies, of my State, was a German, and he was the first man to offer his services to the Government during the civil war. He lies buried in a cemetery in my town, where there is a monument erected to his memory. I do not know where there is a Grand Army post that should have higher consideration at the hands of the Senate in this matter than Mathies Post. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. BAKER. What is the amendment?

Mr. GEAR. That two condemned cannon be also donated to Mathies Post, at Burlington, Iowa.

Mr. BAKER. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the original bill, before the amendment just adopted, it is proposed to insert:

And that two condemned cannon be also donated to Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa."

JULIA A. HUMPHRIES.

The bill (S. 518) for the relief of Julia A. Humphries was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "10,000" and insert "5,215"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Julia A. Humphries, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,215 as a full indemnification for property taken by the United States Army for hospital purposes at Fredericksburg, Va., and for damages suffered at the hands of the Union forces, and for services rendered as hospital nurse during the war of 1861.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the bill is passed, I should like to have an explanation. I do not like the sound of the words "for damages suffered at the hands of the Union forces." It has not been customary in the few bills which have passed to use that language.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator that this is not for damages in the ordinary sense.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let those words be stricken out.

Mr. CHANDLER. There have been some bills passed for paying money to colleges and literary institutions, which, on the de minimis principle, no one cares anything about; but I do not remember the passage of a bill heretofore recognizing that principle.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from New Hampshire would wait a little while, and let me make a statement of the case——

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not want the Senator to answer my point until he knew what it was.

Mr. TELLER. This does not fall within the rule stated at all. It is not for damages; it is for supplies taken and used by the Army.

Mr. CHANDLER. It reads "damages" in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. The damage was to a house which the Government used for a hospital. The bill is to pay for rental and damage to the house. We have disallowed all the other items and they have been cut out of the bill. That is the reason the bill is amended, reducing the amount from $10,000 to $5,215.

Mr. CHANDLER. Damage done by military occupation?

Mr. TELLER. The damage was done by the Government taking possession of the claimant's store and using her groceries and provisions for the Army; and the bill is for rental and repairs of the store which were required after the Government left it. The bill is strictly in accordance with the practice of the Senate and of the Committee on Claims for the last twenty years.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will have the words read which I have criticised I should be obliged.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

As a full indemnification for property taken by the United States Army for hospital purposes at Fredericksburg, Va., and for damages suffered at the hands of the Union forces, and for services rendered as hospital nurse during the war of 1861.

Mr. CHANDLER. "Damages suffered at the hands of the Union forces" sounds to me very much like paying for war damages.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator desires to have those words stricken out, very well. There was a claim made for damages in the proper sense, but we disallowed that for fear that intention might be conveyed. Nothing is allowed except for such things as the Government took and used and for damage to the building by Government occupation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the amount is correct, and will not be objected to, but that clause is certainly objectionable.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out the word "damages," if the Senator objects to that word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the name "Virginia," it is proposed to strike out "and for damages suffered at the hands of the Union forces."

Mr. TELLER. The report will show that no allowance is made for damages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL MEN FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland, who has given notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1404) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to enlist additional men for service in the United States Navy, and for other purposes, when it is his intention to have that motion taken up and considered by the Senate?

Mr. GORMAN. At any time after to-day. I desire to submit some remarks upon the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it the intention of the Senator to bring up the motion at an early day?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; at an early day.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the privileged question touching the right to a seat of Mr. Henry A. Du Pont, of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Oregon asks that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the resolution named by him, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope that motion will not be carried.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. A few days ago I gave notice that to-morrow at 2 o'clock I should ask the consideration of a certain measure on the Calendar. If it is the desire of the Senate to adjourn until Monday, I have no objection, and will ask that the special order go over until Monday next.

Mr. GORMAN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the effect of the adjournment, the Chair thinks.

The Chair has not yet declared the motion to adjourn until Monday carried. The Chair thinks the motion is carried. In the opinion of the Chair, the effect of the adjournment to Monday would be to make the matter referred to by the Senator from North Dakota the special order for Monday next.

Mr. NELSON. Has the Chair decided as to whether or not the motion to adjourn over was carried?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that the motion was carried.

ART COMMISSION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if he will not yield until I can ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which I think will lead to no debate whatever?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota, provided his bill does not lead to any debate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not think it will. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1922) creating an art commission of the United States, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This bill has been read twice, and as I have an important amendment which is practically a substitute for the entire first section, I will ask that the substitute be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof—

That there be, and hereby is, constituted and created a body which shall be known and designated as the Art Commission of the United States, to consist of five persons, other than artists or sculptors, who shall be citizens of the United States and eminently distinguished in literature and the fine arts. Selections for membership in said commission shall be made in the following manner, to wit: One member to be named by the President of the United States for a term of six years; two by the Senate, one for a term of two years and one for a term of four years; and two by the House of Representatives, one for a term of two and one for a term of four years; and after the expiration of the terms above prescribed the term of office of each commissioner shall be for six years. The said commission shall be invested with the duties and privileges hereinafter mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask the Senator what is the necessity for this proposed law, and how it will operate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think it must be evident to every Senator here, certainly to every Senator who has served on the Committee on the Library, that some such legislation as this is absolutely necessary. For my part, I think I should prefer not to be a member of the Committee on the Library if I am to be constantly beset almost day and night by people who are interested in the Government's purchase of works of art.

The purpose of the bill, as explained in section 1, is to establish an art commission, the duties of which are set forth in section 2 of the bill.

The action of this commission will not be final. The commission is simply advisory, and is to report to the two Houses of Congress, so that we shall have the benefit of their expert judgment in the purchase and management of works of art in this Capitol and in the new Library building.

I stated, when I asked the Senator from Oregon to yield for the consideration of this bill, that I would not ask its consideration if it led to debate. I think I fully explained to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] the other day the purpose of this bill, and supposed that he had become reconciled to it. I hope the explanation I have now made will be satisfactory.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill be read in full, Mr. President.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to have the bill read as originally reported, or as it will stand when amended?

Mr. ALLEN. As it will stand when amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let us proceed to perfect the bill by amendment, and then we may have it read in full.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the bill is going to lead to a long discussion, I must interpose.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will withdraw the bill if it leads to discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks for the reading of the bill as it will read if amended as now proposed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let us proceed to have the bill amended first, and then it can be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That depends on whether the Senator from Nebraska withdraws his request.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw the request. Let the amendments first be acted upon, and then let the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 6 of section 2, after the word "art," I move to insert "and valuable historical records and manuscripts."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 11 of the same section, before the word "report," I move to strike out the words "and complete," and insert after the word "report" the words "of their findings."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In the same section, line 12, I move to strike out the remainder of the section, and insert "Senate and House of Representatives."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, after the words "to the," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section, as follows:

President of the United States, a copy of the report to be submitted simultaneously with the report to the President of the United States to the Joint Committee on the Library of the two Houses of Congress.

And insert:

Senate and House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. At the end of section 3, after the word "commission," in line 6, I move to insert "while the same is in session."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That all vacancies occurring in said commission shall be filled by appointment, as provided in section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Now, if the Senator from Nebraska desires to have the bill read, it is perfected as the committee desire to have it laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to have the bill read as amended?

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. FAULKNER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read as it has been amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, constituted and created a body which shall be known and designated as the Art Commission of the United States, to consist of five persons other than artists or sculptors, who shall be citizens of the United States and eminently distinguished in literature and the fine arts. Selections for membership in said commission shall be made in the following manner, to wit: One member to be named by the President of the United States for a term of six years; two by the Senate, one for a term of two years and one for a term of four years; and two by the House of Representatives, one for a term of two and one for a term of four years, and after the expiration of the terms above prescribed the term of office of each commissioner shall be for six years. The said commission shall be invested with the duties and privileges hereinafter mentioned.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to convene semiannually in the city of Washington for the purpose of examining the art collections in the Capitol and the Congressional Library buildings, and also to inquire into the condition and make inspection of the Congressional Library proper, and to examine all works of art and valuable historical records and manuscripts offered for sale or as a donation to the United States for use in the Capitol or Congressional Library buildings. Upon completion of such examination, inquiry, and inspection as aforesaid, it shall be the further duty of the said commission to make annually a full report of their findings, with such recommendations as the commission may deem proper, to the Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Librarian of Congress to designate suitable rooms in the Library building as a permanent meeting place for the said commission and their successors. The Librarian shall also assign a page and a messenger to do duty in connection with the work and to be under the control of the commission while the same is in session.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to inquire what the compensation will be.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No compensation whatever is to be allowed to the members of the commission. It is supposed that there are in this country gentlemen who have pride enough in art to pass in an advisory way upon these matters without compensation.

Mr. MORRILL. I should think it very objectionable permanently to set apart a room in the Library building for the commission to meet only once or twice a year, when they might just as well meet at a hotel or in some committee room of the Capitol temporarily, or anywhere else.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suppose as they will meet but, say, twice a year, and there being but five of them, a room can be set aside for their temporary use for a short time at least. Probably the commission would not be in session more than a few days at a time, and as the works of art upon which they would have to pass would probably be displayed in the new Library building, it will be necessary for them to be there more or less. I do not think there will be any inconvenience in that.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the bill ought to go over and be considered some time when it can be debated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the bill be printed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to have the bill printed as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be printed as amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I shall not make further efforts to pass the bill at this time, but I desire to say that unless we have some legislation of this kind I shall postively object in future to the purchase of any paintings or statuary whatever for use in this building or other buildings upon the say so of anybody.

FRANK J. BURROWS.

Mr. QUAY. I shall be very greatly obliged to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], if he will yield to me to secure the passage of a bill. If it evokes one word of discussion I will withdraw it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Pennsylvania made the request of me prior to that of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. He assures me that the bill is very brief and that it will lead to no debate. If it leads to discussion I shall be unable to yield.

Mr. QUAY. If it creates any debate I will withdraw the request. It is the bill (S. 1183) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows. A similar bill once passed the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to cause the account of Frank J. Burrows, late postmaster at Williamsport, Pa., to be credited with the sum of $4,022 on account of loss incurred by robbery of that post-office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution in relation to the Senator from Delaware.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon from the Committee on Privileges and Elections February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, yesterday, before yielding the floor, I had attempted to demonstrate, so far as I could, first, that under certain express provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware each and every citizen of that State is prohibited from exercising simultaneously in that State the offices of governor and State senator. I had further attempted to demonstrate, and I think I did, certainly to my own satisfaction, that in virtue of various other provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware there is an inferential inhibition placed upon each and every citizen of the State of Delaware from exercising at the same time the two offices of executive and legislator, on the plain ground, as it seems to me, as these several provisions of the constitution would seem to indicate, that those two offices and the functions of those two offices, respectively, are incompatible, and therefore can not be exercised at the same time by the same person.

I had then proceeded further to demonstrate, so far as I could before the adjournment of the Senate, that the question whether or not the governor of the State of Delaware had a right to enter the joint assembly of the members of the general assembly of the State of Delaware and vote for United States Senator is one that the Senate of the United States can inquire into, as claimed by the majority of the committee. I attempted to show, so far as I could, that that is a question that is not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Delaware senate; that while in the first instance the Delaware senate has the right, and not only the right, but there is impressed upon that body by law a duty to pass upon that question, yet the decision of the Delaware senate upon such question, whatever it might be or may have been, if ever there was a decision—and I say there never was any—is one that is not binding on the Senate of the United States; but on the contrary it is a question that remains open, a question which the Senate of the United States has the right to determine for itself under the grant of power given it by that clause of the Constitution of the United States which declares that each House of Congress shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

I then proceeded, before adjournment yesterday, to take up and review and answer, so far as I was able, the contentions of the minority of the committee, as presented in the views submitted by them and attached to and made a part of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and in doing that I had advanced so far before yielding the floor as to approach a consideration of the three cases cited by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] in his views, and on which, I understand, he and those who agree with him rely in the attempt to satisfy the Senate of the United States that it is utterly without power to inquire into the question as to whether or not the governor of the State of Delaware had on the 9th day of May, 1895, while exercising every function of the executive of the State, a right to leave his gubernatorial chair and go back into the chair of the speaker of the senate, enter the joint assembly of the members of the legislature of the State of Delaware met for the purpose of electing a United States Senator, there be counted as one of those members, and there and then cast his vote, and that, too, Mr. President, the casting vote, by which the election of a Senator should be determined.

I shall now proceed, Mr. President, to call further attention to the cases cited in the views of the minority.

The only question involved in that portion of the report of the committee in the cases of Clarke and McGinniss vs. Sanders and Powers, cited in the views of the minority, relates to the title of persons admitted to seats in the legislative body on certificates of election and before the very right of such persons has been adjudicated. The committee and the Senate in those cases very properly held that such certificates carried with them, not only a prima facie, but an absolute title, good for all purposes, until the house itself had adjudicated upon the question. There was no constitutional question involved as to whether any seat was or was not open to occupation; no constitutional question as to the right of a person to exercise the office of legislator after the happening of a certain contingency, admitted by all to have occurred, and when no question of fact is involved in a case where the Constitution declares that the happening of such event shall operate ipso facto, either to create a vacancy, temporary or otherwise, in the office of legislator, or to absolutely disqualify such person from continuing to exercise the office of legislator for and during the period that he exercises the functions of another office.

A careful reading of the last two pages of the views of the minority develops the fact that the minority proceed upon the theory that in considering this case and in determining the question as to the power of the United States Senate to inqure into the right of the governor of the State of Delaware to vote in the joint assembly of members of the legislature for a United States Senator, we are to close our eyes to everything relating to the accession of Speaker Watson to the exercise of the office of governor; that we are to be oblivious to all those provisions of the Delaware constitution upon this subject, and we are asked to believe that, no matter what may happen to a member of the Delaware legislature subsequent to his admission to a seat, provided his right to a seat has once been passed upon—whether he has become governor of the State, President of the United States, or been hanged by judicial process, all being in each case a matter of public record, notorious and conceded by all—the Senate of the United States must, in judging of the right of a claimant to a seat in this body, assume that, unless a record of the Delaware senate is produced showing that that body has passed upon the question and determined the seat vacant, he is still and must forever remain, at least until the expiration of the term for which he was elected, a member of that body. That is the claim of the minority of the committee.

In this connection it is well to keep distinctly in view the difference between what constitutes a constitutional or statutory qualification of a person entitled to a seat in a legislative body, and upon which certainly, in so far as all questions of fact are concerned, such body—I now speak of the Delaware senate—is to be the exclusive judge, and which judgment is binding on the Senate of the United States in the manner and to the extent I have stated, and that which, after his qualifications have been adjudicated and he has been admitted to a seat, operates to oust a Senator absolutely, or to suspend his right, either absolutely or temporarily, to exercise such office. As to the former, as I have stated—that is, as to the qualifications to a seat—of these, the Delaware senate is the exclusive judge; as to the others, such senate is not the exclusive judge. And whenever a question involving this latter, growing out either of the act of the member himself, the act of God, or the operation in a certain contingency of a constitutional provision, is involved in the consideration here, as to the right of a member to a seat in this body, then whether the Delaware senate has or has not adjudicated the question matters not. In either event, the Senate of the United States has the right to inquire into and adjudicate it for itself. And I here assert this proposition as the correct rule, growing out of the constitutional provision empowering a State senate to judge of the qualifications of its own members. When the constitution of a State prescribes a certain series of specific qualifications which a person must possess in order to entitle him to a seat in the Senate, the specification of these excludes all others, and it is only as to those specified that the State senate has a right to inquire, and its judgment as to these only is conclusive.

Mr. Justice Story, in discussing this subject, section 925, Story on the Constitution, says:

> It would seem but fair reasoning, upon the plainest principles of interpretation, that when the Constitution established certain qualifications as necessary for office, it meant to exclude all others as prerequisites. From the very nature of such a provision, the affirmation of these qualifications would seem to imply a negative of all others.

This language of Mr. Justice Story is cited and approved by Mr. Cooley in his Constitutional Limitations, page 64; also in Thomas vs. Owens, 4 Md., 189; also in Dorsey's case, 7 Port., 293.

The constitution of the State of Delaware prescribes four qualifications only for a State senator:

First. He must be 27 years of age;

Second. He must own certain property of a certain value;

Third. He must have been a citizen and an inhabitant of the State three years next preceding the meeting of the legislature after his election; and Fourth. The last year of such term he must have been an inhabitant of the county in which he shall be chosen.

The power, therefore, of the Delaware senate to judge of every one of these facts, constituting, each of them. constitutional qualifications, subject to the exceptions and limitations I have stated, is, it is conceded (not perhaps by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. PLATT in the chair], judging from some remarks he made yesterday) exclusive in the State senate, and the determination of that body is binding as to the finding of such facts on the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Both as to the law and the facts?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I stated specifically that it is binding only as to the facts.

Mr. GEORGE. No right to judge of the law?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As to the finding of facts the judgment of the State senate is conclusive and binding on the Senate of the United States, but not as to the construction either of the fundamental law or of a statute. That is my position.

There is, however, no exclusive power to judge as to any other qualification, much less, a fortiori, may it be said, can such senate be the exclusive judge of any constitutional disqualification, still much less can the senate be permitted to determine exclusively any disputed question arising under the fundamental law of the State as to whether or not a certain seat in the senate is or is not subject to occupation, either permanently or temporarily. The oath which the constitution prescribes shall be taken by a senator before he enters upon his duties as such is not one of the constitutional qualifications for such office. It is but a part of the necessary machinery through and by which a person who has by the senate been adjudged qualified to occupy a seat in the senate is inducted into such seat. Therefore, the question as to whether this has been illegally or constitutionally done is not one which the State senate can exclusively determine, or which would be binding either here or in a court of justice. In such a case neither the United States Senate nor any court would be precluded the right or power of inquiring into that question and determining it for itself, respectively.

So, also, is it true when a question arises under the Delaware constitution not involving a consideration as to the constitutional qualifications of a person to a seat in the senate of that State, but on the contrary involving the entirely different question, as is the case we are now considering—that is, as to whether a person whose qualifications to a seat have been adjudicated by the senate, and the person so found to possess the requisite qualifications has been legally inducted into office, has either permanently or temporarily, by any act of his resigned such office, either by a direct resignation or by an implied resignation, or a resignation in law, which often occurs, by accepting an office, the duties and functions of which are incompatible with the office of senator—then that is not a question which the Delaware senate can exclusively determine, but it must be determined by the United States Senate, or any judicial court or other tribunal before which the question may properly arise.

Even had the Delaware senate attempted to decide the question, and it never did, and although it had, as a matter of fact, either expressly or constructively, decided the same, and it never did either, such decision would not and could not be binding on the Senate of the United States. It would not be a judgment as to the constitutional qualifications of Watson to a seat in the Senate. The question would not have been as to whether Watson possessed the four necessary qualifications to a seat in the senate, but the question would have been had Watson, although possessed of all the four qualifications, and although legally and constitutionally inducted into office, or abdicated or resigned his right, either permanently or temporarily, to exercise the functions of senator, by the acceptance of an incompatible office, which is in law such resignation.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question as to his position?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not been able to ascertain whether the Senator's position is that Mr. Watson actually vacated the office or whether the office was merely suspended. I should like to know what the Senator's position is on that point, whether the office was vacant or whether it was merely suspended.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no hesitation whatever in stating to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and the Senate, in answer to the inquiry, precisely what my individual position is on that question.

I will state frankly to the Senator from Mississippi and the Senate that if this were a case of first impression—that is to say, if this question were here in the early history of the government of the State of Delaware, when there had been no usage of any kind or precedents of any kind throwing light, as they properly may, upon any clause in the constitution of the State which may be of doubtful construction—I would have no hesitation whatever in holding to the view that on the accession of the speaker of the senate of the State of Delaware to the exercise of the office of governor of that State, not only the office of speaker of the senate held by him, but also the office of senator held by him became ipso facto absolutely vacant.

Mr. GEORGE. Under the common law?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That undoubtedly is the result of the common-law rule. That, in my opinion as one of the members of the committee and as one Senator, is the true and proper construction also of the Delaware constitution.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Allow me. But while that is true, while that is my deliberate opinion and judgment, I frankly confess that there is some room for doubt upon that question, going to this extent, however, only, as to whether the office does become absolutely vacant, or whether only the right to exercise the functions of speaker of the senate and of senator is suspended and held in abeyance during the continuance in the gubernatorial office of the person who was speaker of the senate and who succeeded to that office.

I think, therefore, that that clause of the constitution and the two clauses which I have defined as the express provisions of the constitution, and all the clauses taken together, are subject to two constructions, and only two, the one being either that the offices of senator and speaker of the senate become absolutely vacant on the accession of the speaker to the exercise of the office of governor; the other, if that be not the proper construction, that the right to exercise the functions either of speaker of the senate or of senator is, by the plain and express provisions of the constitution and inferentially by various other provisions of the constitution, absolutely held in abeyance and suspended for and during the time that this person continues in the office of governor.

But I hold further that there is no room whatever for the construction, as claimed by the minority of the committee, to the effect that when the speaker of the senate succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor he not only remains senator and speaker of the senate, but that he has a right, while remaining in the office of governor and exercising the office of governor, at the same time to continue to exercise the office of speaker of the senate and of senator.

Now, I think the Senator from Mississippi understands my position and the position of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not. Will the Senator allow me just a word? The state of vacating an office which leaves the office without an incumbent and the state of suspending the duties of an office are fundamentally different in law. One leaves the office vacant so that it may be filled, and the other leaves an incumbent there who can not do anything. I want to know, being fundamentally different, whether the committee or the Senator has arrived at a conclusion as to which is the true meaning of the constitution of Delaware.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have endeavored, so far as I have the capacity, I frankly confess, to define precisely, fully, frankly, and fairly, without any mental or other evasion or equivocation, precisely my own opinion and judgment as to the construction that should be placed on the constitution of the State of Delaware; and I have undertaken, also, in the same frank manner to define the position of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. It is either vacation or suspension. It can not be both.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I say it is one or the other.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; all right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And, so far as this case is concerned, it does not make one particle of difference which it is, because in either event Mr. Watson, while governor of the State of Delaware, had no more right to enter the joint assembly and cast a vote for United States Senator than had the Senator from Mississippi, or the President of the United States. So what is the use of getting up a controversy between the Senator from Mississippi and myself over a matter that is absolutely immaterial and which does not affect this case a particle, no matter which way it is decided? I do not care which way you decide it. I do not care whether you say that the seat becomes absolutely vacant, or whether the right to exercise the office of senator and speaker of the senate is merely suspended for and during the time that he exercises the office of governor. In either event he had no right there.

Mr. GEORGE. But they can not both be true, and I should like for the committee to decide which it is. The position of the committee seems to me about this: Heads I win; tails you lose.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not at all, Mr. President. The Senator from Mississippi can make no capital before so intelligent a body as the Senate of the United States by any such suggestion or argument. I say, and the Senator admits, that the constitution of the State of Delaware is open to construction. I contend that it is open to two constructions, and only two, either one of which makes my case. That is all there is of it. The construction placed there by the Senator from Mississippi and those who contend with him makes his case. Now, which is right? If I am right in either of my constructions, then Mr. Du Pont is entitled to his seat. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and the Senators who support them are right, of course then we are wrong, and Mr. Du Pont should not be admitted.

But it makes no difference which of the two constructions we suggest is adopted. In either event Governor Watson had no right to be in the joint assembly or to cast a vote for United States Senator.

Mr. GRAY. In other words, if the Senator from Oregon will allow me, the Senator thinks he carries a double-barreled gun, and whether he brings down the game with the right-hand barrel or the left-hand barrel makes no difference.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No, not a particle; call it double-barreled if you like. I accept this characterization of my position.

Mr. THURSTON. Both barrels are loaded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes, that is the fact.

Mr. GRAY. For bear.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Now, Mr. President, if I may be allowed after this digression, to which I do not object, I will proceed with my argument.

THE JOINT ASSEMBLY HAD NO POWER TO ADJUDICATE UPON THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE GOVERNOR TO A SEAT IN THE STATE SENATE, DID NOT ATTEMPT TO DO SO, BUT PROTESTED AGAINST HIS RIGHT.

It will scarcely be contended by anyone, and I believe is not by the minority of the committee, that the joint assembly for the purpose of electing a Senator had any power to judge of the right of the governor to a seat in the State senate. No power whatever resided in that body to judge of his qualifications; and hence his presence there, voting and presiding, could not possibly have conferred any rights, even had there been acquiescence on the part of the joint assembly. As I have already shown, however, there was no acquiescence, but, on the contrary, a vigorous protest from fifteen members of the assembly. Even though Watson had been senator and speaker of the senate on May 9, 1895, de jure and de facto, he would not from these circumstances have had any preference right over that of any other member of the joint assembly to preside over that body. Even in such a case he would simply have had the right to be present as a senator to participate in the proceedings, without any authority whatever in virtue of any law, or in virtue of his position as speaker of the senate, to preside over such joint assembly, except by the consent of his associates.

Mr. GRAY. And the custom of that body.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes. This consent was not given, as I have said, but vigorously protested against.

THE DELAWARE SENATE NEVER ADJUDICATED AS TO THE RIGHT OF GOVERNOR WATSON TO EXERCISE THE OFFICE OF SENATOR WHILE EXERCISING THE OFFICE OF GOVERNOR.

Having demonstrated, as I believe, quite conclusively that it is wholly immaterial, so far as the question here is concerned, whether the Delaware senate did or did not, either actually or constructively, adjudicate upon the question as to the right of Governor Watson to a seat in the Delaware senate and the joint assembly while exercising the office of governor, I shall now proceed to show that the contention of the minority that it did so adjudicate has no foundation whatever in fact. And in determining this matter of fact, the first question presented is: How shall it be determined—whether by the journal entries of the senate supported by other evidence, or by ex parte affidavits tending to contradict the journal entries?

I insist, as do the majority of the committee, that it must be determined by the record—that is, by the journal entries. And while ex parte affidavits in corroboration and support of such journal entries may be properly received, ex parte affidavits contradicting such journal entries are absolutely inadmissible here, as they would be in any judicial court.

It is by this latter process that the minority and others who oppose the seating of Mr. Du Pont seek to convince this Senate that the Delaware senate adjudicated inferentially or constructively upon the right of Governor Watson to exercise the office of senator while exercising the office of governor. And in support of this proposition they present and file certain ex parte affidavits.

Before proceeding, however, to the question involved in this legal contention, I undertake to say that, conceding the right of the opposition to offer ex parte affidavits tending to contradict the record of journal entries, which right as a matter of law I emphatically deny, and giving to these affidavits all the credence and effect of competent testimony, taken in connection with the other testimony in the case, they fall far short of demonstrating that the Delaware senate did at any time adjudicate the question, either actually or constructively, as to the right of Governor Watson to exercise the functions of senator on May 9, 1895.

THE WELL SETTLED RULE OF LAW REQUIRES THAT THE QUESTION AS TO WHETHER THERE WAS OR WAS NOT AN ADJUDICATION BY THE DELAWARE SENATE, SHALL BE DETERMINED BY THE SENATE JOURNAL ENTRIES, AND THESE CAN NOT BE CONTRADICTED BY ex parte AFFIDAVITS.

It is a well-settled rule, established, supported, and sustained by more than 120 adjudicated cases in the courts of last resort in more than 20 States of the American Union, as also by the Supreme Court of the United States, that when a State constitution prescribes such formalities in the enactment of laws as a record of the yeas and nays on the journal entries, those journals are conclusive as against not only a printed statute published by authority of law, but also against a duly enrolled act. The principle, however, I am now contending for does not go to this extent, but, though included in it, falls far short of it. The question involved in the case we are now considering is not whether the legislative journals are conclusive against either a printed statute published by authority or a duly enrolled act, but simply whether they are conclusive as against ex parte affidavits by which such journal entries are sought to be contradicted. If the rule of the courts is as I state, and which I propose to sustain by numerous authorities, then a fortiori may it be said the rule for which I am here contending can not be otherwise than correct.

In support of the doctrine that when a State constitution prescribes such formalities in the enactment of laws as a record of the yeas and nays on the legislative journals, such legislative journals are conclusive as against a duly enrolled act, I, without stopping to read, attract the attention of the Senate to the following list of American authorities, State and Federal, which on careful examination will be found to sustain this doctrine:

The constitution of Michigan contained the following clause:

No public act shall take effect or be in force until the expiration of ninety days from the end of the session at which the same is passed, unless the legislature shall otherwise direct, by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house.

In People vs. Mahany (13 Mich., 481, 492) Mr. Justice Cooley, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

As the court are bound judicially to take notice of what the law is, we have no doubt it is our right, as well as our duty, to take notice not only of the printed statute books, but also of the journals of the two houses, to enable us to determine whether all the constitutional requisites to the validity of a statute have been complied with. The printed statute is not even prima facie valid, when other records, of which the court must equally take notice, show that some constitutional formality is wanting.

The constitution of California contained the following provision:

No bill shall become a law without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to each house.

In the Railroad Tax Case (8 Sawyer, 238, 293) Judge Sawyer, with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Field, said:

On March 4, the house considered the senate amendment, and, upon a call of the yeas and nays, as required by the constitution, thirty-nine members voted for the amendment, and thirty-two against it, there being four paired and not voting; thus the votes, in favor of the amendment, were two less than a majority of members elected to the house, and the bill failed. * * * All this appears upon the journal. * * * The bill, therefore, was never constitutionally passed, and never became a law. Under the decisions of the courts, upon constitutional provisions in all respects similar to that in the present constitution of California, it is settled that the court, to inform itself, will look to the journals of the legislature.

In Spangler vs. Jacoby (14 Ill., 297, 300) the court said:

The act in question was signed by the speakers of the two houses, and it received the assent of the executive. Prima facie, therefore, it became a law. But the journal of the house of representatives fails wholly to show that it was ever put upon its final passage in that house; in other words, it does not appear that it passed with the concurrence of a majority of the members-elect of that body. The act did not become a law in pursuance of the provisions of the constitution, and it is therefore null and void. The judgment is reversed.

In Berry vs. Railroad Company (41 Md., 446, 463, 465) Judge Alvey, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

The question has repeatedly arisen, in several of the State courts of the highest authority, and in all cases, with but few exceptions, it has been held that neither the printed statute book nor the ordinary authentication of the statute after its passage would preclude the inquiry into the fact whether the statute, as published, had in truth passed the legislature; and, as evidence upon the question, the legislative journals and the bills as acted upon by the legislative assemblies have been consulted. * * * We can have no doubt whatever that the third section of the act in question, as that act was sealed and approved by the governor, is materially different from the third section of the act as it passed the two houses of the legislature, and we must therefore declare that particular section of the act to be null and void.

The constitution of the State of Delaware, Article II, section 17, contains the following clause:

No act of incorporation, except for the renewal of existing corporations, shall be hereafter enacted without the concurrence of two-thirds of each branch of the legislature.

This provision requires the yeas and nays to be recorded in the journals on the passage of every new act of incorporation.

I do not think that the principle for which I am contending will be denied by any lawyer on the other side. I pass, therefore, to a consideration of the disputed question of fact involved in this case.

The Delaware senate did not, either actually or constructively, judge of the qualifications of Governor Watson to a seat in the senate at any time subsequent to his becoming governor of the State.

It is conceded by those opposing the seating of Mr. Du Pont that whatever occurred in the Delaware senate subsequent to the date when William T. Watson entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, upon which it is claimed the senate adjudicated the right of Governor Watson to exercise the functions of a senator, took place on May 9, 1895, the day on which Mr. Du Pont claims to have been elected. It is not claimed, moreover, that there was on that day any formal or express adjudication of such right, but simply an inferential, a constructive adjudication, arising out of the presence of the governor in the senate and acquiescence by the senate. Such being the claim, it becomes of the first importance to ascertain precisely what occurred on that date.

What did Governor Watson do on that day in connection with the Senate and the joint assembly, and what did the Delaware senate and the joint assembly do? It is conceded by those favoring the seating of Mr. Du Pont, and I concede, that on May 9, 1895, a few moments only before 12 o'clock meridian on that day, he, Governor Watson, who from April 9, 1895, when he entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, had not exercised or attempted to exercise any of the functions or duties of either State senator or speaker of the senate, entered the senate chamber, and, the speaker pro tempore of the senate leaving the chair for such purpose, resumed such chair, all the business for that day and in fact for the entire session having been concluded; that he took no part in any of the legislative functions of the senate; that on taking the speaker's chair he immediately made this announcement:

The hour of 12 having arrived, the Senate will proceed to take part in the joint assembly.

That he then proceeded with the members of the senate to the hall of the house of representatives, where the members of the two houses met in joint assembly to vote for a United States Senator. In this joint assembly Governor Watson assumed to act and did act as chairman. Twenty-eight ballots were taken for United States Senator. Immediately after the last ballot was announced, Senator Alrichs, on behalf of himself and the 14 other members of the joint assembly who had voted for Mr. Du Pont, presented in said joint assembly the protest to which I have already called attention, and which I ask to again insert in my speech for convenience at this point. It is as follows:

After the last ballot had been taken in said final joint assembly and before the two houses separated I, on behalf of myself and the 14 other senators voting for the said Henry A. Du Pont, arose and presented the following challenge, protest, and demand:

"I very respectfully challenge the correctness of the announcement of this vote and divers preceding votes, and do now most respectfully insist and demand that Henry A. Du Pont be now declared elected Senator for the unexpired term of six years commencing on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1895, inasmuch as it is now respectfully insisted that this joint assembly consists of twenty-nine members, the honorable gentleman now undertaking to preside and participate therein being governor of the State, and not now a senator."

After the presentation of the foregoing challenge, protest, and demand, and without taking any further ballot, the joint assembly finally separated, with a declaration from William T. Watson that no person had been elected Senator in Congress for said term.

SAMUEL ALRICHS.

These are the facts, as verified by the journal entries and affidavits filed on behalf of Mr. Du Pont and in support thereof.

Those opposing the seating of Mr. Du Pont have presented the affidavits of Robert J. Hanby, a State senator; William T. Records, speaker pro tempore of the Delaware senate; Charles A.

Hastings, clerk of the senate; John B. Pennington and Edward D. Hearne, citizens of Dover, Del.; Cyrus Cort, chaplain of the senate, and Henry T. Watson, governor of the State.

The purpose of these ex parte affidavits, contradictory as they all are of the senate journal entries, and therefore not proper to be considered, is to prove that Governor Watson, after resuming the seat of speaker of the senate on May 9, 1895, exercised certain legislative functions, the senate consenting thereto, and that thus his right to act was constructively adjudicated by the senate.

To these several affidavits I wish to call particular attention. First, I call attention to the affidavits presented on behalf of Mr. Du Pont. These are affidavits of certain senators and others who were present on that day, and who in their affidavits state what they understand to have occurred on that day. The first to which I will call attention is the affidavit of State Senator John M. C. Moore. After stating that he is a senator, etc., and that he was present there on that day—I do not desire to encumber the record by reading the whole affidavit—he says:

That when the senate convened in the said final legislative session at 11 o'clock a. m., on the said 9th day of May, A. D. 1895—

It convened on that day at 11 o'clock a. m.—

William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, occupied the speaker's chair and presided over the session, received and put motions, and voted on bills; that the said William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, continued to occupy the speaker's chair until near the hour of 12 o'clock, noon, and until the senate was just about to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives to take part in the joint assembly for the purpose of electing a United States Senator; that while the said William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, occupied the speaker's chair as aforesaid, being from the beginning of the session at 11 o'clock until within a few minutes before 12 o'clock, noon, Governor William T. Watson did not receive and put motions, and did not vote on bills then pending before the senate, and did not in any manner participate in the legislative functions of a senator; that on the day of the said last session of the senate of Delaware, while William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, occupied the speaker's chair, near the hour of noon on that day, being, so far as I can remember, about fifteen minutes of 12 o'clock, Governor William T. Watson came into the senate chamber and occupied a chair beside me at my desk.

Now, according to this affidavit he came into the senate chamber 15 minutes or about that of 12 o'clock; he did not then resume the speaker's chair, but he came and occupied a seat beside Senator Moore, who makes this affidavit:

The conversation which occurred between us was as follows: Governor Watson said to me, "Mr. Moore, I want to talk with you. I believe you will tell me just as it is. Is Mr. Massey out of this thing?

Mr. Massey was one of the candidates for United States Senator.

I said to him in reply, "Governor, he is; we are not going to cast another ballot for Mr. Massey nor no other man who has been balloted for except Henry A. Du Pont. He will be elected on the first ballot in the joint session." To which Governor Watson replied to me, "If that be the case, I shall take my seat."

In other words, if this senator tells the truth under oath, the question that was to determine the governor of the State as to whether or not he would resume his seat as senator and as speaker of the senate and enter the joint assembly was whether or not a certain man who had been voted for for Senator was in or out of the race.

Against this—

I now continue the reading of the affidavit of Senator Moore—

I remonstrated, and said to him, "Governor, I hope you will not do it. I think too much of you as a man for you to do it." That was the last of our conversation. He made no reply to my remonstrance. He arose and went over to the desk of George Fisher Pierce, a senator, and one of my colleagues from Sussex County, where I saw him take a seat near Senator Pierce.

It was only fifteen minutes before noon, it will be observed, when he came into the senate chamber, according to this affidavit, and took a seat beside Senator Moore. Then this conversation occurred. He did not then take the chair as speaker, but went over and took a seat beside Senator Pierce, one of Senator Moore's colleagues. I read further from Mr. Moore's affidavit:

That deponent remembers that William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, just about the hour of 12 o'clock noon—

"Just about the hour of 12 o'clock noon"— on the said 9th day of May, A. D. 1895, left the speaker's chair.

He did not leave it at 11 o'clock, nor half past 11, nor fifteen minutes of 12, nor ten minutes of 12, nor five minutes of 12, but "just about the hour of 12 o'clock noon."

Whereupon Governor William T. Watson proceeded to occupy the said speaker's chair.

According to this affidavit, then, it was about the hour of noon, and not until then, that Mr. Records, the speaker pro tempore, left the chair, and the governor of the State came in and took the chair of speaker of the senate. I read further from the affidavit of Mr. Moore:

And this deponent remembers that after the said Governor William T. Watson took his seat as aforesaid he took part in no legislative functions of the senate other than what related to proceeding to the hall of the house of representatives, by the senate, for the purpose of attending the joint assembly to elect a United States Senator; that Governor Watson announced, "The hour of 12 having arrived, the senate will proceed to take part in the joint assembly;" that the said deponent attended the session of the legislature of Delaware from the day on which it was convened, to wit, on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895, until the day of its adjournment without day on the 1st day of May, A. D. 1895—excepting a period covering about a week occurring during the lifetime of Governor Marvil, and excepting about one day during the period following the taking the oath of office as governor by William T. Watson; that after the said William T. Watson took the oath of office as governor at the time of the death of the then Governor Joshua Marvil, he never took part in the legislative functions of the senate; that he never joined the senators in the discharge of their duties except on the last day of the session, as hereinbefore set forth; that during the session of the legislature of Delaware, convened at Dover on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895, and lasting until the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895, it was well known to Governor William T. Watson that this deponent had, with others, throughout the said session of the legislature, voted for George V. Massey for United States Senator.

That, then, is why he went and talked to him, to see whether he was going to continue to vote for Massey. If he were going to continue to vote for Massey, then, inferentially from what the governor said, he would not go into the joint assembly; but if he were not going to continue to vote for Massey, but was going to vote for Henry A. Du Pont, in that case he would do it for the purpose of defeating Mr. Du Pont and an election. I read further from this affidavit of Senator Moore:

And your deponent was led to believe by the acts and words of Governor William T. Watson, and does believe, that he, Governor Watson, would not have undertaken to participate in the election of an United States Senator on the last day of the session as above set forth if he had not assured himself that this deponent would not continue voting for the said George V. Massey, and that the said deponent was led to believe by the acts and words of Governor William T. Watson, and does believe, that he, the said Governor Watson, undertook to participate in the election of an United States Senator on the said last day of the session of 1895, to wit, on the 9th day of May, 1895, in order to prevent the election of Henry A. Du Pont as United States Senator from the State of Delaware.

I now call attention to the affidavit of Senator George F. Pierce, filed in the case and a part of it. The affidavit is in the third person, and not the first person. After stating that he is a senator-elect from Sussex County, that he took his seat, etc., he says:

That he was present in the senate at its final session, which convened at 11 a. m. on Thursday, May 9, 1895, and after a session of one hour, ended at noon on said day, when the senate, without motion, proceeded to the hall of the house of representatives and took part in the joint assembly then convened for the election of a United States Senator; that during said hour—from 11 until 12 o'clock—the senate was presided over by William T. Records, its speaker.

The senator says that from 11 until 12 o'clock the State senate of Delaware was presided over by Records, the speaker pro tempore. Consequently it was not presided over from 11 until 12 o'clock by the governor of the State, as contended.

That about ten minutes before the hour of noon William T. Watson, governor of the State of Delaware, being in the chamber, came and took a seat alongside of this deponent, and said to him: "I am going into the joint assembly and vote for a Senator." This deponent said: "You are going to do what?" He answered: "I am going to preside over the joint assembly to-day and vote for a United States Senator." This deponent then said: "Do you think that is right?" Governor Watson answered: "No, I do not; but my party has overruled me." This deponent answered: "Then I suppose there is nothing I can say now that would change your mind?" to which Watson replied: "No; my mind is fully made up."

So, then, Mr. President, according to this affidavit, which corroborates the affidavit of Senator Moore, the governor of the State came into the senate and took a seat beside this affiant at about 10 minutes to 12 o'clock, and that the speaker pro tempore, Records, occupied the chair from 11 to about 12 o'clock, when the governor took the chair. I will read further, however, from the affidavit:

Throughout the hour—

That is, the hour from 11 to 12 o'clock—

William T. Records presided as speaker, put all motions, and performed all the duties belonging to the office. Just as the hour of 12 arrived and the senate were about to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives to take part in the joint assembly, William T. Records left the speaker's chair, William T. Watson took it, and all he did, to the best of this deponent's recollection, as speaker, was to announce that, "The hour of 12 having arrived, the senate will proceed to take part in the joint assembly."

Senator Pierce further states in his affidavit:

On the day following, between the hours of 11 and 12, in the town of Milford, where we both reside, I met Governor Watson at the Central Hotel. Several persons were present; among them I recollect Napoleon Gray, though I can not remember who the others were. They were sitting in a room generally used by commercial travelers for exposing their samples. While the party was sitting there, William T. Watson took a paper out of his pocket, and without saying anything, handed it to me. I read it and handed it back to him without saying anything. The paper, as I recollect it, to the best of my knowledge and belief, read about as follows: "We, the undersigned, pledge ourselves to vote for John Edward Addicks, first, last, and all the time." I think there was a line or two more, but I can not recollect what it was. This paper was signed by Newell Ball, Charles Moore, John Robbins, and Robert J. Hanby. The first three were members of the house of representatives, and Mr. Hanby was a member of the senate.

I next call attention to the affidavit of Senator Samuel Alrichs, a member of the Delaware senate, who, after stating that he is a member of the senate, says:

That he was present at the final legislative session of the senate, held between the hours of 11 o'clock a. m. and 12 o'clock noon on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895; that this deponent was present throughout the entire session; that he presented, as chairman of the committee on judiciary, a number of bills during that session, and that he voted on all bills and motions that were before the senate; that William T. Records was the speaker in the chair when the motions were put by this deponent on the bills aforesaid; that William T.

Watson entered the chamber shortly before the hour of noon, but did not take the chair until just after the legislative business was ended—

I call especial attention to this statement. This affidavit states that the governor did not take the chair until after the legislative business of the senate was ended, which is precisely the same thing stated by Senators Moore and Pierce. I read further from this affidavit—and just as the senate was about to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives to take part in the joint assembly for the election of a United States Senator; that this deponent has no recollection that the said William T. Watson presided, or undertook to preside, over the senate during said session that morning, or that he put any motions, voted on any bills or other motions whatever as senator or speaker until just as the senate was about to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives to take part in the joint assembly, when he took the chair, and made the announcement that the hour had come for that purpose, and proceeded at the head of the senate to the hall of the house of representatives.

I now call attention to another affidavit as bearing upon this question, because it is claimed on the part of the minority—and that claim I am endeavoring to answer—that in virtue of what took place in the Delaware senate between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock on May 19, 1895, the senate of Delaware adjudicated constructively, if not actually, upon the right of the governor of the State of Delaware to exercise the functions of a State senator, a claim which I deny, and which I am endeavoring to refute by the testimony to which I am now attracting the attention of the Senate.

Edgar T. Hastings was clerk of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware, and he makes an affidavit on the 14th of January, 1896, which is a part of the record in this case, in which he says:

I am the clerk of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware, having been elected thereto at its organization on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895. As clerk of the house, I recorded the proceedings of the legislative sessions of that body, and also the joint assembly of the two houses of the legislature of the State of Delaware, as convened for the election of a United States Senator from the State of Delaware. Both the house of representatives and the senate held their last legislative session between the hours of 11 a. m. and 12 noon on Thursday, the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895.

From the time of the death of Governor Marvil, William T. Watson, theretofore speaker of the senate, took no part in its meetings, and did not preside in said body at any time that I was therein, nor did he take any part in the legislative proceedings until the reassembling of the joint assembly for the election of a United States Senator at noon on the 9th day of May aforesaid, when he appeared and presided and voted in said joint assembly until he declared it adjourned sine die at 3 p. m. During the hour between 11 a. m. and 12 o'clock noon on the 9th day of May I had occasion frequently to present to the senate various legislative messages from the house, as appears by the record of the senate for that hour and day. At no time during that hour when I was present did Governor William T. Watson occupy the chair as speaker or take any part in the business of the senate.

There were a great many bills pending at the time of the adjournment sine die of the legislature on that day, and a great deal of legislative business was left unfinished. The adjournment sine die took place by reason of a joint resolution of the two houses, passed a week or two previously. This left a great pressure upon each house on the part of those interested in legislation to get their bills passed before the meeting of the joint assembly at noon on that day, and each house was kept busy by legislative proceedings until the very moment of the meeting of the joint assembly. At no time during which I was present in the senate, conveying messages from the house of representatives as its clerk, from the beginning of the session of the senate at 11 o'clock on that day until the last time I was there previous to the joint assembly meeting, did I see Governor Watson in the chair or otherwise acting as speaker of the senate.

These are all affidavits of persons who were present and saw what took place in the Senate between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock of May 9, 1895. There are some other affidavits as to the declarations of Governor Watson, to which I shall attract the attention of the Senate after I shall have first called the attention of the Senate to the affidavit of Governor Watson himself, and other affidavits filed in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont.

I will say here, before taking up these affidavits, that every one of them—and I say they are not proper to be considered in this case, because they tend to contradict the journal entries—including the affidavit of Governor Watson, are entirely consistent with the affidavits which I have read as to the time when the governor took the seat of speaker of the senate on that day. They contradict these affidavits, however, or rather contradict the record, when one or two of them go a step further and declare that the governor of the State, while occupying the speaker's chair in the senate on that day, put motions and declared passed one or more bills. So far as the affidavits relate to those matters, they are in absolute contradiction of the record, and ought not to be and can not be considered by the Senate of the United States unless you reverse the rule of evidence as universally recognized in the judicial courts.

But not only so, even if they can be considered, and even if they are so considered by the Senate, I undertake to say that every one of the statements, in so far as relates to the question as to whether the governor while occupying the speaker's chair put motions or declared them carried, are contradicted, not only by the record in the case, but by all the evidence in the case, and by the case itself. Having said this much, I will now call attention to the affidavit of Governor Watson himself, and see precisely when he says he came into the senate and took his seat as speaker of the senate on the 9th day of May, 1895. His affidavit is brief, and I shall read the whole of it. It is as follows:

STATE OF DELAWARE, Kent County, ss:

Be it remembered that on this 28th day of January, A. D. 1896, personally came before me, William E. Riggs, jr., a notary public of the State of Delaware, resident in Kent County, William T. Watson, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, did depose and say that he was elected speaker of the senate on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895, and on the 9th day of April of the same year, after the death of Joshua Marvil, the duly elected and qualified governor of the State of Delaware, assumed the exercise of the office of governor; that on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock m., this affiant entered the senate chamber, whereupon William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, vacated the chair and he, this affiant, took the same and presided over the senate until the hour for the two houses to assemble in joint meeting arrived, and then announced the same and proceeded at the head of the senators into the hall of the house of representatives, where he presided over the joint assembly from the beginning to the end thereof and voted upon all questions which arose during the session, no objection having been made to his so presiding or voting until at or about the time the last ballot was taken, when Senator Alricks read a written protest against his right to so vote and preside; that while he presided over the senate on that day in its chamber he voted upon one bill at least, and announced its passage by the senate; that he received and put motions made by senators and was addressed as speaker of that body, and that no objection from any quarter was made to his acting as presiding officer of the senate and otherwise participating in the proceedings thereof while in session during the hour aforesaid.

WILLIAM T. WATSON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me the day and year aforesaid.
[SEAL.] WILLIAM E. RIGGS, JR.,
Notary Public.

Mr. President, there is nothing in that affidavit from beginning to end which contradicts any one of the affidavits which I have heretofore read as to the time on that day when Speaker Watson, or Governor Watson, or whatever he may properly be called, took the chair as speaker of the senate. The affidavits which I have heretofore read say that he took the chair about the hour of noon, and after all the legislation had ended. What does Governor Watson say? He says—

That on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock m., this affiant entered the senate chamber.

"Between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock m." Just when between those two hours the governor does not state. Did he enter at fifty-five minutes to 12 o'clock, or at one minute before 12? He might have done either, and still this affidavit be true as to that point. If, as a matter of fact, the governor of that State did enter and take the speaker's chair any length of time before noon, then he knew it; nobody knew it any better than he; and if he knew it, and he ought to have known it, why did he not in this affidavit state the hour that he took it—the time he took it—whether it was about fifteen minutes before, or a half hour before, or three-quarters of an hour before, or five minutes before?

He does not venture to state any time except between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock. Not only so, Mr. President, but what further does he state?

That while he presided over the senate on that day in its chamber he voted upon one bill at least and announced its passage by the senate.

What bill, Mr. President? If he voted upon one bill, at least, then he, of all other people, ought to know what bill it was. He does not venture to state what bill it was. In direct contradiction to the other affidavits, to the effect that he voted on no bill, he says, "I voted upon one bill, at least," without stating what bill it was or the character of the bill. Furthermore, he says:

That he received and put motions made by senators, and was addressed as speaker of that body.

What motions did he put? He leaves us in the dark. So that, so far as the affidavit of Governor Watson is concerned in reference to the time he took the speaker's chair, it is not in the least contradictory of the affidavits filed here in support of the claim of Mr. Du Pont, which are to the effect that Governor Watson took the chair about the hour of noon, and after all legislative business had been completed, and all that he did after he took the chair was to make the single announcement "the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived the senate will proceed to the hall of the house of representatives for the purpose of electing a United States Senator."

Admitting, then, all that Governor Watson in his affidavit states to be absolutely true, is there any member of the Senate who can, for one moment, hold that there was an adjudication, constructively or otherwise, by the Delaware senate that he had a right to exercise the functions of a senator?

Certain other affidavits are presented in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont and in support of the claim of the governor of the State. I will call attention to them. The first is State Senator Hanby, who, after stating that he is a member of the senate of the State of Delaware, says:

After taking six ballots for such senator without electing anyone the joint meeting separated to meet again at 12 o'clock noon of the same day.

That was May 9, 1895.

The members of the senate returned to their chamber and there resumed the exercise of their ordinary legislative functions.

Now, I call attention to this:

Some time between the hours of 11 o'clock a. m. of that day and 12 o'clock noon, and while the senate was in session in its own chamber attending to the regular legislative functions imposed upon it by the constitution of the State of Delaware, William T. Watson, speaker of the senate, and at that time exercising the office of governor, entered the senate chamber and resumed the speaker's chair, which was thereupon vacated by William T. Records, who had been elected speaker pro tempore of the senate during the absence of William T. Watson, speaker. No word of protest was heard from any senator questioning the right of William T. Watson to resume the speaker's chair and to exercise his functions as a senator. William T. Watson continued to preside as speaker of the senate until 12 o'clock noon of May 9, 1895, when he declared that the time had arrived for the reconvening of the joint meeting of the two houses, etc.

He continued to preside; but when does this witness state that Governor Watson took possession of the chair? He states it just as Governor Watson states it:

Some time between the hours of 11 o'clock a. m. of that day and 12 o'clock noon.

But what time? How long before 12 o'clock—fifty minutes, thirty, fifteen, ten, or one minute? He does not state. He states it just as Governor Watson states it, that he went there "some time between the hours of 11 o'clock a. m. of that day and 12 o'clock noon," but all the other witnesses say he never took the chair until about the hour of noon, after all the legislative business of the senate had been done; and the only thing he did was to say that the time had arrived to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives, and every affidavit here in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont is to the same vague, indefinite effect as those of this affiant and Governor Watson. Everyone of them states that Governor Watson entered the chamber and took the chair some time between 11 and 12 o'clock, which, of course, does not contradict the affidavits filed in support of the claim of Mr. Du Pont, in which it is stated precisely when Governor Watson did take the seat, which was immediately before the hour of noon, a few moments perhaps before the hour of 12, about the hour of 12, and after all the business had been accomplished.

In this connection, I call attention to the affidavit of Charles A. Hastings, who was clerk of the Delaware State senate. He, like the balance of those volunteering affidavits in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont, states that William T. Watson entered the senate chamber on the 9th day of May, 1895, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock—just what time between these hours he, like the other affiants, does not state. This witness, however, makes this statement:

That while the said William T. Watson so presided over the senate at least one bill was passed upon which a yea and nay vote was taken, and that Mr. Watson, upon the calling of the roll and the name "Mr. Speaker," voted in the affirmative.

This statement, Mr. President, of Charles A. Hastings is absolutely contradicted by the record. The record produced, and which I hold in my hand, is a complete record of the proceedings of the Delaware senate from 11 o'clock a. m., May 9, 1895, until the final adjournment of the senate at 12 o'clock. That record shows that during this time there were six roll calls on the passage of bills, the yeas and nays of senators being entered on the record, and in not a single instance does the name of either Speaker Watson or William T. Watson appear; but, on the contrary, in every one of them is the speaker pro tempore recorded.

I now call attention to the affidavit of Senator William T. Records, speaker pro tempore of the senate, filed in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont. He, in this affidavit, after stating that he was a senator from Sussex County and had been elected speaker pro tempore of the senate April 9, A. D. 1895, says that—

Between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock on the morning of the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895, William T. Watson entered the senate chamber, the senate being then in session, and took the chair as speaker of the senate; that he continued to preside over the senate until 12 o'clock meridian; that while he continued to so preside he voted in the affirmative upon at least one corporation bill and declared that the said bill had passed the senate, it having received the required constitutional majority.

This witness, like all the others, refrains from designating the exact time any more definitely than "between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock," when Governor Watson entered the senate chamber and took the chair of the speaker pro tempore of the senate. This witness, however, volunteers a statement not borne out by any other witness, and absolutely contradicted by the record of journal entries, to the following effect:

"That he," Governor Watson, "continued to preside over the senate until 12 o'clock meridian; that while he continued to so preside he voted in the affirmative upon at least one corporation bill, and declared that the said bill had passed the senate, it having received the required constitutional majority."

There is a provision in the Delaware constitution that a two-thirds vote on the passage of all new corporation bills is required. This of course necessitates a roll call, with yeas and nays entered on the journal.

This statement, as I have said, that Governor Watson, May 9, 1895, in the Delaware State senate voted in the affirmative, or in any other manner upon at least one corporation bill, or any corporation bill at all, is not only not borne out by any other testimony, but is flatly contradicted by the record of journal entries, which gives the yea and nay vote on every one of the six bills passed the senate on that date, in not a single instance of which does the name of Governor Watson, Speaker Watson, or Senator William T. Watson appear; while in each case the "speaker pro tempore," and not Records, is recorded as voting, the latter's name, "speaker pro tempore," being called and recorded as the person last voting, and not being recorded in the alphabetical call of the roll, which would have placed his name between those of Senator Moore and Senator Pierce.

The final round-up of the testimony in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont is by Cyrus Cort, chaplain of the senate. He, like all the other witnesses, states:

Between the hours of 11 in the morning and 12 o'clock noon William T. Watson entered the senate chamber and resumed the speaker's chair, which was vacated by William T. Records, speaker pro tempore.

I now call attention to the affidavit of John S. Prettyman, jr., which bears very strongly upon the question as to the motives moving Governor Watson to leave the gubernatorial chair on May 9, 1895, enter the joint assembly of the members of the legislature, and by his vote control the election or nonelection of a United States Senator.

From this affidavit, as well as the affidavit of Senator Pierce, to which I have already attracted attention, it will very conclusively appear that it was not because Governor Watson believed he had any right to go into the joint assembly; and, furthermore, that it was not from any sense of public duty that he entered such joint assembly, but, on the contrary, that it was the direct result of pressure from political associates and of a partisan conspiracy, and for the sole purpose of defeating the election of a Republican United States Senator.

Mr. Prettyman states in his affidavit, sworn to January 14, 1896, and to be found in the report of the committee, page 78, that he is 35 years of age and upward and resides in the town of Milford, Sussex County, State of Delaware. He further states that on Thursday, the 9th day of May, 1895, upon the arrival of the 6.45 p. m. train—I now quote:

I walked from the railroad station at Milford, Del., into the center of the town, about one-quarter of a mile in distance, with William T. Watson, governor of Delaware. This was the day the Delaware legislature adjourned after the contest for the election of a United States Senator, in which the governor presided in the joint assembly as speaker. During this walk Governor Watson said to me that when he went to Dover on the morning of that day he did not expect to preside as speaker of the senate, believing that he did not have a legal right to act as governor and senator. After reaching Dover, in response to the influence of party leaders, he reversed this decision, and consented to enter the senate and claim his rights as speaker. In doing this, he said, he put aside his own judgment, and acted upon the judgment of those whom he regarded as well qualified to advise. He also said that if anyone would convince him that he had acted illegally in the matter that he would sign Mr. Du Pont's certificate of election.

On Friday, following this conversation, I met Governor Watson, about 11.30 a. m., in T. F. Hammersley's drug store, in Milford. I said to him that the fact of the Speaker of the United States Senate abandoning his functions as Senator upon becoming President of the United States might have some weight with the Senate in considering the seating of Mr. Du Pont. He seemed indignant, and blurted out in an angry manner, "What's that got to do with it? If you would read a little you might know something." I replied quietly that his remark was a very foolish one, that I did not know that he had ever been credited with superior wisdom or learning, and that neither of our opinions was worth very much in the matter. He then quickly and excitedly drew from his pocket a folded piece of writing paper and said "Read this." I took the paper and read the writing through. It was an agreement between Robert J. Hanby, Newall Ball, Charles Moore, and John Robbins, members of the Delaware legislature, signed with their names and to the effect that they would vote for J. Edward Addicks for United States Senator and that they would not vote for anyone else, even though no Senator should be elected. As I passed the paper back to the governor he said, "Wouldn't you have acted as I did under such circumstances?" I evaded his question by saying, "Are the signatures genuine?" and he replied, "Of course they are; look again," and he passed the paper to me for the second time. I read it through again and examined the signatures, remarking that I was not familiar with the autographs of these men, but that the names were in different handwritings. He said that he was not familiar with the autographs of the men, but that he was sure the names were genuine. The governor also said that this agreement was brought to him to induce him to take part in the last joint assembly of the legislature, and, influenced by it, through the advice of others, he consented to preside as speaker of that body, and did so preside upon the day mentioned. He further said that the Republicans had every opportunity to elect a Senator and had failed to do so, and of course he preferred that the Democratic party should have a representative in the United States Senate from Delaware rather than the Republican party.

J. S. PRETTYMAN, JR.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 14th day of January, A. D. 1896. Witness my hand and official seal.

[SEAL.] PHILIP S. GRAHAM, Notary Public.

From this affidavit it is made apparent to all that Governor Watson, so far from entering the senate and the joint assembly on May 9, 1895, from any sense of public duty or from any belief that he had any right under the constitution of his State to exercise the offices of governor and senator at the same time, he was induced to do so by reason of an agreement entered into by certain members of the legislature to the effect that they would vote for J. Edward Addicks only for United States Senator and for no one else, even though no Senator should be elected, and through the advice and under the influence of partisan friends—for the sole purpose of defeating the election of a United States Senator.

Not only so, Mr. President, but we have here the record of everything that took place on that day, the journal entries of every motion that was put, of every bill that was passed, of every vote that was taken. There were several yea-and-nay votes, and that record discloses the damaging fact that Mr. Watson's name was not mentioned once in any roll call on any motion made; not mentioned as speaker, not mentioned as having done anything. It does not appear that he was there; and, so far as the record is concerned, he never was there. On the contrary, the record shows that the person who presided that day, and all of that day, was Mr. Records, the speaker pro tempore of the senate, and not Mr. Governor Watson or Mr. Speaker Watson.

So whatever view is taken of this case, Mr. President, whether we stand by the record alone—and that is where we ought to stand—or whether we consider the affidavits only in support of the record, and they can properly be considered, or whether we go a step further, and break down all rules of law, and consider the affidavits filed in opposition to the claim of Mr. Du Pont—which tend to contradict the record—whether we do the one thing or do the other, in any view and in every view, we can come to but one conclusion, and that is, that the governor of the State did not enter the senate chamber until about the hour of noon, and then, after all legislative business had been transacted; and that, therefore, in the very nature of things, there could not possibly have been any constructive adjudication by the Delaware senate of his right to exercise the office of senator while exercising the office of governor. I leave that branch of the case, Mr. President, and come for a few moments to a consideration of the great American doctrine of the complete independence of the several departments of Government—Federal and State—which should not be lost sight of in the consideration of this case.

THE UNION OF EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS IS ABSOLUTISM OR DESPOTISM ON THE ONE HAND, AND SLAVERY ON THE OTHER, WHETHER UNITED IN ONE MAN OR THE MANY.

Dr. Lieber, in his work on Civil Liberty and Self-Government, says:

A principle and guaranty of liberty, so acknowledged and common with the Anglican people that few think of its magnitude, yet of really organic and fundamental importance, is the division of government into the three distinct functions, or rather the keeping of these functions clearly apart.

It is, as has been mentioned, one of the greatest political blessings of England that from a very early period her courts of justice were not occupied with "administrative business," for instance, the collection of taxes, and that her Parliament became the exclusive legislature, while the Parliaments of France united a judicial, legislative, and administrative character. The union of these functions is absolutism or despotism on the one hand and slavery on the other, no matter in whom they are united, whether in one despot or in many, or in the multitude, as in Athens after the time of Cleon the tanner. The English political philosophers have pointed out long ago the necessity of keeping the three powers separate in a "constitutional" government. Those, however, who have no other definition of liberty than that it is equality, discard this division, except, indeed, so far as the mere convenience of transacting business would require (pages 154, 155).

The court of errors and appeals of the State of Delaware, in the case of Rice vs. Foster (4 Harrington, 485–487), drew with clearness and distinctness the line of separation between the three branches of the government established by the constitution of the State of Delaware, among other things, in their opinion, saying:

If we consider the peculiar situation of the United States, and go to the sources of that diversity of sentiment which pervades its inhabitants, we shall find great danger to fear that the same causes shall terminate here in the same fatal effects which they produced in those republics. To guard against these dangers and the evil tendencies of a democracy, our republican Government was instituted by the consent of the people. The characteristic which distinguishes it from the miscalled republics of ancient and modern times is that none of the powers of sovereignty are exercised by the people, but all of them by separate, coordinate branches of government in whom those powers are vested by the constitution. These coordinate branches are intended to operate as balances, checks, and restraints, not only upon each other, but upon the people themselves; to guard them against their own rashness, precipitancy, and misguided zeal, and to protect the minority against the injustice of the majority. * * *

The legislative, executive, and judicial powers compose the sovereign power of a State. The people of the State of Delaware had vested the legislative power in a general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives; the supreme executive powers of the State in a governor, and the judicial power in the several courts mentioned in the sixth article. The sovereign power, therefore, of this State resides with the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. Having thus transferred the sovereign power, the people can not resume or exercise any portion of it. To do so would be an infraction of the constitution and a dissolution of the government. Nor can they interfere with the exercise of any part of the sovereign power, except by petition, remonstrance, or address. They have the power to change or alter the constitution; but this can be done only in the mode prescribed by the instrument itself. The attempt to do so in any other mode is revolutionary. And although the people have the power, in conformity with its provisions to alter the constitution, under no circumstances can they, so long as the Constitution of the United States remains the paramount law of the land, establish a democracy, or any other than a republican form of government. It is equally clear, that neither the legislative, executive, nor judicial department, separately, nor all combined, can devolve on the people the exercise of any part of the sovereign power with which each is invested. The assumption of a power to do so would be usurpation. The department arrogating it would elevate itself above the constitution, overturn the foundation on which its own foundation rests, demolish the whole frame and texture of our republican form of government, and prostrate everything to the worst species of tyranny and despotism, the ever-varying will of an irresponsible multitude.

MR. WEBSTER'S VIEWS ON MAINTAINING CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRAINTS AND JUST DIVISIONS OF POLITICAL POWER.

Daniel Webster, in his great speech in the Senate of the United States on May 7, 1834, on "The Presidential veto," drew with clearness and power the distinctions to be observed between the several departments of the Government, and pointed out with great ability the necessity of maintaining just constitutional restraints and just divisions of political power in order that liberty, the first purpose of a free people, should be preserved. In that great speech he used the following language:

The first object of a free people is the preservation of their liberty; and liberty is only to be preserved by maintaining constitutional restraints and just divisions of political power. Nothing is more deceptive or more dangerous than the pretense of a desire to simplify government. The simplest governments are despotisms; the next simplest, limited monarchies; but all republics, all governments of law, must impose numerous limitations and qualifications of authority and give many positive and many qualified rights. In other words, they must be subject to rule and regulation. This is the very essence of free political institutions.

The spirit of liberty is, indeed, a bold and fearless spirit; but it is also a sharp-sighted spirit; it is a cautious, sagacious, discriminating, far-seeing intelligence; it is jealous of encroachment, jealous of power, jealous of man. It demands checks; it seeks for guards; it insists on securities; it intrenches itself behind strong defenses, and fortifies itself with all possible care against the assaults of ambition and passion. It does not trust the amiable weaknesses of human nature, and therefore it will not permit power to overstep its prescribed limits, though benevolence, good intent, and patriotic purpose come along with it. Neither does it satisfy itself with flashy and temporary resistance to illegal authority. Far otherwise. It seeks for duration and permanence. It looks before and after; and, building on the experience of ages that are past, it labors diligently for the benefit of ages to come. This is the nature of constitutional liberty, and this is our liberty, if we will rightly understand and preserve it. Every free government is necessarily complicated, because all governments establish restraints, as well on the power of government itself as on that of individuals. If we will abolish the distinction of branches and have but one branch; if we will abolish jury trials and leave all to the judge; if we will then ordain that the legislator himself shall be that judge, and if we will place the executive power in the same hands, we may readily simplify government. We may easily bring it to the simplest of all forms—a pure despotism. But a separation of departments, so far as practicable, and the preservation of clear lines of division between them, is the fundamental idea in the creation of all our constitutions; and doubtless the continuance of regulated liberty depends on maintaining these boundaries. (Works of Daniel Webster, volume IV, page 122.)

And still further Mr. Webster proceeded—

Mr. President, the contest for ages has been to rescue liberty from the grasp of executive power. Whoever has engaged in her sacred cause, from the days of the downfall of those great aristocracies which had stood between the king and the people to the time of our own independence, has struggled for the accomplishment of that single object. On the long list of the champions of human freedom there is not one name dimmed by the reproach of advocating the extension of executive authority; on the contrary, the uniform and steady purpose of all such champions has been to limit and restrain it. To this end the spirit of liberty, growing more and more enlightened and more and more vigorous from age to age, has been battering for centuries against the solid butments of the feudal system. To this end all that could be gained from the imprudence, snatched from the weakness, or wrung from the necessities of crowned heads, has been carefully gathered up, secured, and hoarded, as the rich treasures, the very jewels of liberty.

To this end popular and representative right has kept up its warfare against prerogative with various success; sometimes writing the history of a whole age in blood, sometimes witnessing the martyrdom of Sidneys and Russells, often baffled and repulsed, but still gaining on the whole, and holding what it gained with a grasp which nothing but the complete extinction of its own being could compel it to relinquish. At length the great conquest over executive power in the leading western states of Europe has been accomplished. The feudal system, like other stupendous fabrics of past ages, is known only by the rubbish which it has left behind it. Crowned heads have been compelled to submit to the restraints of law, and the people, with that intelligence and that spirit which make their voice resistless, have been able to say to prerogative: "Thus far shalt thou come, and no farther." I need hardly say, sir, that into the full enjoyment of all which Europe has reached only through such slow and painful steps we sprang at once by the Declaration of Independence and by the establishment of free representative governments; governments borrowing more or less from the models of other free States, but strengthened, secured, improved in their symmetry and deepened in their foundation by those great men of our own country whose names will be as familiar to future times as if they were written on the arch of the sky.

Through all this history of the contest for liberty executive power has been regarded as a lion which must be caged. So far from being the object of enlightened popular trust, so far from being considered the natural protector of popular right, it has been dreaded, uniformly always dreaded, as the great source of its danger.

And now, sir, who is he, so ignorant of the history of liberty, at home and abroad; who is he, yet dwelling in his contemplations among the principles and dogmas of the Middle Ages; who is he, from whose bosom all original infusion of American spirit has become so entirely evaporated and exhaled that he shall put into the mouth of the President of the United States the doctrine that the defense of liberty naturally results to executive power and is its peculiar duty? Who is he that, generous and confiding toward power where it is most dangerous, and jealous only of those who can restrain it; who is he that, reversing the order of the state and upheaving the base, would poise the pyramid of the political system upon its apex? Who is he that, overlooking with contempt the guardianship of the representatives of the people, and with equal contempt the higher guardianship of the people themselves; who is he that declares to us, through the President's lips, that the security for freedom rests in executive authority? Who is he that belies the blood and libels the fame of his own ancestors by declaring that they, with solemnity of form and force of manner, have invoked the executive power to come to the protection of liberty? Who is he that thus charges them with the insanity or the recklessness of putting the lamb beneath the lion's paw? No, sir. No, sir. Our security is in our watchfulness of executive power. It was the constitution of this department which was infinitely the most difficult part in the great work of creating our present Government. To give to the executive department such power as should make it useful and yet not such as should render it dangerous; to make it efficient, independent, and strong, and yet to prevent it from sweeping away everything by its union of military and civil authority; by the influence of patronage, and office, and favor; this, indeed, was difficult. They who had the work to do saw the difficulty, and we see it; and if we would maintain our system we shall act wisely to that end by preserving every restraint and every guard which the Constitution has provided. And when we and those who come after us have done all that we can do and all that they can do, it will be well for us and for them if some popular executive, by the power of patronage and party, and the power, too, of that very popularity, shall not hereafter prove an overmatch for all other branches of the Government. (Works of Daniel Webster, volume IV, pages 133, 134, 135.)

Montesquieu, in his Spirit of Laws, volume 1, page 152, says:

When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person or in the same body of magistrates there can be no liberty; because apprehensions may arise lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner.

Again, there is no liberty if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control, for the judge would be then the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression.

There would be an end of everything were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers—that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals.

In determining the question at issue in this case it is quite immaterial what construction is placed on the language of Montesquieu when in his "Spirit of Laws" discussing the English constitution he declares:

When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty, because apprehensions may arise lest the same monarch or senate enact tyrannical laws to execute them in a tyrannical manner.

Whether the construction placed upon this grand epigrammatic sentence of this illustrious writer by Mr. Madison in the Federalist, who in giving it construction paid its great author the high compliment of stating that the British constitution was to Montesquieu what Homer has been to the didactic writers of epic poetry, is correct or not, does not weaken its application to the case under consideration.

Mr. Madison held that Montesquieu, by the use of the language quoted, meant this, and only this: That where the whole power of one department is exercised by the same hands which possess the whole of another department, the fundamental principles of a free government are subverted. Conceding this to be the meaning of the great author, is it not true that the executive of the State of Delaware exercises the whole power of the executive department? No one, of course, will question this. And is it not also true that by virtue of various provisions of the Delaware constitution the whole controlling power of legislation is, or at least may be, under a variety of circumstances held, controlled, and exercised by a single legislator? If this can be so, even in a single instance, then the rule of Montesquieu, even as construed by Madison, applies, and a fortiori, is it not so when, as in the case under the Delaware constitution, there may be not merely one instance, but numerous instances, where this whole legislative power is in the hands, and under the control, and subject to the will of a single member of the legislature? To show this is so, it is only necessary to cite one or two cases—and there are many. For instance, the governor of the State may be impeached by the house of representatives. He must be tried before the senate. It requires a two-thirds vote to convict. That one vote of the governor, sitting as a senator and judge in his own case, may prevent the two-thirds vote necessary to convict.

So, too, by the one vote of the governor as senator, as we have seen, jurisdiction may be conferred on the governor to remove all the judges of the State. Surely, Mr. President, the language of Montesquieu just quoted, however considered, whether as indicated by Mr. Madison or otherwise, and also this further declaration of his, are directly applicable to the case under consideration.

Montesquieu says further:

Were the power of judging joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control, for the judge would then be the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with all the violence of an oppressor.

But no more apt illustration can be cited for the purpose of showing that, if the theory of the minority be correct, the whole power not only of the executive, but of the legislature, is, or may be frequently, under the Delaware constitution, exercised by the same hands, than the one presented by the very case under consideration. Governor Watson, it will be conceded, on the 9th day of May, 1895, exercised the whole power of the executive office. He leaves that office, enters the senate chamber, resumes the chair of the speakership, goes into the joint assembly met for the purpose of electing a United States Senator, and there, holding the balance of control, with the will of a despot, he exercises tyrannically and absolutely the whole power of the legislature of the State and the joint assembly of the members of that legislature, in whom rests the sole jurisdiction of the election of a United States Senator.

Had he remained away, refrained from any attempt to exercise the office of senator, as it was his duty to do, there would have been but 29 members of the legislature in joint assembly, and Mr. Du Pont, having received 15 votes of the 29, was duly elected.

The rule, therefore, of Montesquieu, as construed by Mr. Madison and as agreed to by the distinguished lawyers who have filed their briefs in this case in opposition to the seating of Mr. Du Pont, is directly applicable to the case now under consideration.

But not only so. If the theory of the minority of the committee be correct, then instances may occur, a situation may be brought about by the very vote and influence of the governor, if permitted to exercise the offices of senator and governor at the same time, wherein the governor may virtually exercise the whole power, not only of executive and legislative, but also of the judicial departments. This may occur under the provisions of the Delaware constitution, if the governor is permitted to exercise the office of senator, by his giving the casting vote that will enable him as governor to dismiss all the judges of the State—judges appointed by a predecessor—and thereby place the judiciary of the State in the hands and under the control of judges of his own choice.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, Mr. President, and begging pardon for having trespassed so long upon the patience of the Senate, I confidently submit this case to the calm, deliberate judgment of the Senate, trusting and believing, as I do, that the judgment rendered will fully vindicate the integrity of that great American doctrine which recognizes the complete independence of the different departments of the governments of the several States, and of the United States as well; and the preservation and perpetuity of which, against all undue encroachments of executive power, are so essential to the preservation and perpetuity of political and individual liberty in this country. If, unfortunately, the day should ever come when in an unguarded moment the Senate of the United States should give its sanction to a relaxation of the restraints which hold in proper subjection the executive prerogative, and which in the interest of liberty and good government disunite executive and legislative powers, and give its consent to a unity of exercise in the same person of the respective functions of two or more of what are now and ever should be the independent departments of national and State governments, then from that date will commence the decadence of political and individual liberty in this country.

The strife for the extension of executive power on the one hand, and for the curtailment of constitutional limitations and restraints upon the power of the people and the people's representatives on the other, has been a contest longer in duration than that of any war of either ancient or modern times. It has been the contest of ages, extending into all nations, and spreading throughout all Christendom. It has been the contest of liberty against prerogative; of the struggle for legislative independence against the grasping tendencies and unwarranted encroachments of executive power; a contest which at times, as we have been told, has "written the history of a whole age in blood," destroying with its consuming fires the brightest and best hopes of myriads of the hosts of freedom, and wrecking upon its devastating floods the worthiest and loftiest aspirations of the friends of individual and political liberty.

To hold that the governor of a State can exercise simultaneously the functions of executive and legislator is, unfortunately, to array the Senate of the United States on the wrong side of this mighty contest. Such a decision would, in my judgment, be a departure from one of the great fundamental principles of republican and democratic government, an unwarranted concession to the ever-grasping claims of executive power over the rights of the masses of the people and the people's representatives, and a dangerous stab at the very vitals of the great doctrine upon which our Government and the governments of the several States rest—that of the complete independence of their legislative, executive, and judicial departments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon a message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the concurrent resolution of the Senate in regard to the insurrection in Cuba; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HITT, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky managers at the conference on the part of the House.

WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate in respect to Cuba.

The report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate (Con. Res. 19, part 5), having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT R. HITT,
JAMES B. McCREARY,
ROBERT ADAMS, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Senator from Ohio will not insist upon disposing of the report at this hour with so thin a Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt that Senators are about the Chamber. It is important that the report shall be acted upon as speedily as possible. It is entirely within the power of the Senate and House as to when it shall be taken up, but I think it had better be acted upon this afternoon. Senators are about and can soon be called in. However, I do not wish to press a vote if the Senator from Maine desires to make any remarks upon the subject.

Mr. HALE. I presume the Senator from Ohio does not. There are some Senators who have not been heard upon this matter at all and who desire to submit some views to the Senate. They had no opportunity to do so when the resolution was originally passed. With the assistance of all of us, I may say, who were opposed to the resolution, an agreement was entered into on Thursday night to take the vote at 4 o'clock the next day. Overnight the Committee on Foreign Relations changed its ground and reported substantially a new provision, which nobody had expected, and which I may state if it had been expected no unanimous agreement would have been entered into to close the debate. So, when the resolution came up, as the Senator will remember (I am stating this accurately), on Friday last, there were but few hours left and they were nearly all taken up by the committee. The rest of the time had been preempted by one or two Senators, so that several Senators—I myself was one—who desired to make some statements and submit some remarks were cut off.

I have not supposed for a moment that the resolution would be attempted to be pushed through to-night; I think I am justified in using the words crowded through. It is hardly twenty minutes since the announcement was made here that the House had agreed to the conference, and that in the minds of Senators put it entirely out of the idea or contemplation of its being forced through to-night. I did not suppose it. I know one Senator who wanted to be here and vote consulted with me. I told him what the situation was; that the House had only just agreed, not to the report, but had just announced its agreement to the conference, and that undoubtedly nothing would be done to-night.

For one, Mr. President, if any reasonable opposition will carry the resolution over until there is an opportunity to be heard, I am not prepared now to agree that it shall be taken up and disposed of at this late hour. I am not ready myself to submit some remarks that I desire to submit upon this most important subject. I do not deem it an essential thing nor in the interest of good legislation that it should be crowded through to-night. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio whether he himself believes that with a bona fide purpose here of having an opportunity, if it is thought advisable, to submit some remarks it should be attempted to be forced through to-night.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no desire at all to force this matter upon the attention of the Senate. If the Senator from Maine is inclined to debate this matter further, I will very cheerfully acquiesce. I may properly allude to the very large vote by which the resolutions were passed. There was but little difference between the House resolution and the Senate resolution, and after a careful examination the conferees agreed that we might take the statement of facts as presented by the House of Representatives, and we agreed to that unanimously.

If the Senator says he desires to speak on the subject and the report ought to go over, I have no objection to its going over, only I think that upon a matter of this kind, owing to the nature of the controversy and the fact that it has been before the Senate the whole of this week and has been debated more or less, it should be disposed of at once. Still, if the Senator desires to speak, I will not cut him off, and therefore I am willing to let it go over and be made the special order, say, at 2 o'clock on Monday, if that will suit.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that course. That will give ample opportunity.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would probably cover more time than is needed.

Mr. HALE. No; the Senate has adjourned over.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate has adjourned over. Let the conference report be made a special order for Monday at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that one measure has already been made the special order for 2 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a privileged question. At any rate, it can be called up even pending a special order.

Mr. HALE (to Mr. SHERMAN). Announce that you will call it up at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will call up the report at that time as a privileged question, no matter what is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio gives notice that he will call up the report of the committee of conference at 2 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In connection with this matter, I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Du Pont case immediately at the conclusion of the routine morning business on Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that, but at 2 o'clock on Monday I shall call up the conference report. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire first addressed the Chair and has been recognized.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am glad that the Senator from Ohio has consented to this delay. I would not carry it over until Monday but that we have agreed to adjourn, I understand, until Monday. He says the committee have given this subject very careful consideration. That is precisely what the rest of us have not been able to do in the press of business here, and it is several days since anybody glanced at the resolutions. I am very glad indeed that the Senator from Ohio has agreed to let the report go over. I voted for the Senate resolution, but I reserve the right to do as I may see fit in regard to this matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, if I had known that this report was to be made to-day I should have opposed the adjournment over until Monday, to which I very cheerfully assented. I can understand that the request of the Senator from Maine under the circumstances is a reasonable one. If any considerable number of Senators wish, or any Senator, indeed, wishes, a little delay on a proposition so important as this, the request should be acceded to. I regret that the Senator from Maine did not speak on this question when it was before the Senate on a former occasion. I thought the Senator refrained from speaking on account of a disposition to see so important a subject speedily disposed of for the common interest not only of Cuba, but of the United States.

I myself refrained from speaking, although I was not satisfied with the resolutions. They were not strong enough, in my judgment. I am deliberately in favor of action by the United States for the recognition and maintenance of the independence of Cuba. If I could have my way, and have such action by Congress and the President of the United States as to my mind is required by the interests of humanity and the enlightened interests of the United States, I would see this country recognize and maintain, at the risk of war with Spain, the independence of the Island of Cuba.

France did that in our Revolution, and it is an undying glory in the crown of honor of that nation that she helped us attain our independence. I think that when the independence of Cuba is achieved, as I hope and believe it will be at no very distant day, we shall attach that island to us by undying gratitude growing out of the fact that we did declare and maintain at the risk of war with Spain or any other nation the independence of the island.

Mr. PLATT. What does the Senator from New Hampshire mean by attaching the island to us; that we shall annex it to the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think my words could be mistaken. I said, attach with sentiments of gratitude to the United States from the independent Cubans for our timely and helpful action in her hour of need.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote by which it agreed to an adjournment over until Monday and that the Cuban resolution will be taken up for consideration to-morrow instead of Monday. It seems to me that if we have justification, as I think we have, to interfere and prevent the wholesale murder and destruction of a whole people, men, women, and children, we ought not to delay giving ample time for everyone to express his opinions and to attempt to influence others to his view. That we should adjourn over until Monday, leaving this matter in its present condition undetermined, I think is not becoming to the Senate or to the importance of the question.

I wish to say for myself that the resolution is not strong enough. I wish to see it passed in the form of a law that will be incumbent upon all the executive officers of the United States. I believe that there is justification and that the interests of Spain herself as well as of the civilized world demand that the bloody and destructive war on human life, on property, upon free institutions, shall be determined and put an end to by the action of the people of the United States. There is no question about that action.

There is no doubt that the people of the United States, by a vast majority, are shocked at the condition of things in the adjacent Island of Cuba, and that it is far ahead of the action proposed by the Senate and the House. I should be very glad if there were an opportunity without delay to consider the conference report, allowing time to all Senators to express their own judgment upon the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is debate in order? If so, I should like to say a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has addressed the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. As germane to this matter, I wish to say just a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I sympathize in general and very warmly with the popular view of this whole question. I think that the conduct of the war against the insurgents is abhorrent to the common sense of humanity of the world. I think that the government of Spain over Cuba, in which we can not help being interested, has been such as to provoke and deserve the very severest criticism.

But there are some other considerations that make me stop and think occasionally before voting upon this and similar matters.

We are giving offense to a power that is not the most considerable perhaps, but we have been giving offense—and some of it offense that we might rightly have given; I do not take it back—to many countries of Europe until we have involved ourselves in an unfriendly criticism. I do not wish to prophesy; prophets are without honor in their own country; but it is within the limits of possibility that we shall find ourselves involved in a war not with one nation, but with more than one. That is very possible. I do not dwell upon it any longer. I have no sympathy with the people who when war is spoken of say it will never come. It comes when you do not expect it. I have no respect for the judgment of those men who, when the defense of the country is spoken of, talk about the enormous physical power of this nation and the five or ten millions of freemen soldiers who are ready to come to its defense. What can they do without coast defenses? Will an army march down to the sandy beach of New Jersey and offer themselves as food for the enemy's cannon? They would be worth nothing else, and they would not stop a bullet as well as a mule.

I take it for granted that those gentlemen who are so ready to talk loudly and vigorously and eloquently and in many respects justly, and give offense so readily, will vote for the most liberal appropriations for coast defenses and for a very large increase of the Navy and a reasonable increase of the Army. I suppose they will. If not, I hope they will never have occasion to regret it. But they may have serious occasion to regret both their speeches and their refusal to so vote.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a courthouse and jail at the county seat thereof was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 17) for the erection of a statue of Francis E. Spinner at the Treasury Department building in Washington was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. If Senators desire to give an hour to unobjected cases on the Calendar, I will make a proposition that the Senate shall proceed for one hour to consider unobjected cases on the Calendar under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that the business before the Senate be informally laid aside.

Mr. BERRY. Beginning with the Calendar where we left off.

Mr. HALE. Yes; temporarily laying aside the unfinished business and beginning with the Calendar where we left off, taking up the business in its order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.). The Senator from Maine asks that the pending business be informally and temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed for one hour to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. TURPIE. Before the unfinished business is laid aside, I wish to be recognized, that I may take the floor on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair presumes there will be no objection. The Senator from Indiana is so recognized, and he gives way to the consideration of the proposition made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CALL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the statement of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] repeated. I could not hear him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has taken the floor upon the pending question and yields temporarily to the Senator from Maine for the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Indiana will understand that at 2 o'clock on Monday I propose to call up the resolution in respect to Cuba. I hope he will not desire to interfere with that notice.

Mr. CALL. I have just been informed that quite a number of Senators have made engagements in view of the adjournment over for to-morrow, and I will not, therefore, press my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Florida is withdrawn. The Chair now submits to the Senate the proposition of the Senator from Maine that, the regular business having been informally laid aside, the Senate shall proceed for one hour to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. After conference with the Senator from Indiana——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has taken the floor for Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is arranged that after the ordinary routine morning business on Monday I shall call up the conference report made a few moments ago, and that after that he will take the floor. That is understood between us, and I hope the arrangement will be accepted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice given by the Senator from Ohio will be recorded. It is so ordered. The Senate now proceeds for one hour to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar, commencing at the point reached this morning.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The bill (H. R. 3265) donating one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to Stone River Post, No. 74, Grand Army of the Republic, Sedan, Kans., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill donating one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to Stone River Post, No. 74, Grand Army of the Republic, Sedan, Kans., and for other purposes."

ESTATE OF MICHAEL KNIGHT.

The bill (S. 1464) for the relief of the estate of Michael Knight was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to George Walker, administrator of the estate of Michael Knight, $7,714, in satisfaction of his claim against the United States allowed by the United States Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM WOLFE.

The bill (S. 74) for the relief of William Wolfe, of Shelbina, Shelby County, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the claim of William Wolfe, of Shelbina, Shelby County, Mo., for the loss of the schooner Anna Sophia, belonging to him, and for freight, while on a voyage from New Orleans, La., to Indianola, Tex., and proposes to pay the amount, if any, so found, and awarded, to be due him from the United States, not to exceed $9,362.29.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA M. COLMAN.

The bill (S. 93) to permit Anna M. Colman, a widow, to prosecute a claim was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Anna M. Colman, widow and sole legatee of Charles D. Colman, deceased, against the United States on account of the seizure by the United States of certain moneys and securities in St. Louis, Mo., about February, 1865, held by the bailee as a special deposit theretofore made by Charles D. Colman.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC STEAMBOAT COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1085) for the relief of the Potomac Steamboat Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Potomac Steamboat Company $5,090, the amount paid by the Potomac Steamboat Company under a decree of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, to the Baker Salvage Company, for services rendered to the steamer Excelsior, belonging to the Potomac Steamboat Company, when she was sunk by the United States steam tug Fortune in Hampton Roads, Virginia, on the 4th day of December, 1882.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALVIN GUNN.

The bill (S. 92) for the relief of Calvin Gunn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay Calvin Gunn, of St. Louis, Mo., $700, in full compensation for the amount due him as informer, and ordered to be paid to him by the United States district court for the eastern district of Missouri, in the year 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. S. A. BROWN.

The bill (S. 1573) for the relief of Dr. S. A. Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $485.47 to S. A. Brown, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., for services as passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy, during the years 1876, 1877, and 1878, the account having been allowed by the Treasury Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FANNY B. RANDOLPH AND DORA L. STARK.

The bill (S. 690) for the relief of Fanny B. Randolph and Dora L. Stark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Fanny B. Randolph, or her legal representative, $8,280, and to Dora L. Stark, or her legal representative, $8,280, making in all $16,560, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in full and final discharge of, their claim examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOWBOAT ASSOCIATION OF NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The bill (S. 862) for the relief of the receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to adjudicate the claims of the receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La., for the value of 50,000 barrels of coal, more or less, and for the value of other stores and supplies seized and taken possession of in the year 1862 by order of Maj. Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, commanding the United States Army at New Orleans, and wholly used and consumed by the military and naval forces of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECEIVERS OF INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS.

The bill (S. 331) providing that no person shall be eligible as assignee or receiver of a bankrupt corporation engaged in interstate commerce who shall have been a director, officer, or employee of such corporation at any time during the three years next preceding such bankruptcy, was next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported adversely and goes over under Rule IX.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over. It is an adverse report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under Rule IX, if there is no objection. It is so ordered.

CHRISTOPHER ELLIS.

The bill (S. 895) for the relief of Christopher Ellis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge in the case of Christopher Ellis, who was a machinist in the United States Navy, and who is charged with having deserted from the United States steamer Nipsic February 7, 1872.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The bill (H. R. 1712) granting to the First Regiment North Carolina State Guard two condemned cannon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOHN ROACH, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 1180) to pay the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $48,858.03, for labor and material furnished for the gunboat Dolphin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, after line 7, to strike out all down to and including the word "three," the first word in line 9, and to insert "$28,160.25"; so as to read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to carry out the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 (22 Statutes, page 477), to pay to the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, the sum of $28,160.25, for labor and material furnished by the said John Roach in completing the dispatch boat Dolphin, under the advice and assistance of the naval advisory board mentioned in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the bill, in line 13, after the word "act," to insert "which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased."

E. R. SHIPLEY.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of E. R. Shipley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $460 for the payment in full to E. R. Shipley for moneys paid, by direction of Post-Office Inspector Edgerton, to parties having money in registered packages stolen from the post-office in Springfield, Mo., on the 23d day of June, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOSES PENDERGRASS.

The bill (S. 66) for the relief of Moses Pendergrass, of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to settle and audit the accounts and claim of Moses Pendergrass, as contractor in carrying the mails in the State of Missouri, from July 1, 1887, to May 6, 1888, upon the basis and amount of $317 per annum as his bid for such service, under the advertisement of September 15, 1886, and of the orders of the Post-Office Department increasing the service thereon, and to pay him for such service an amount not exceeding $379.56, in full satisfaction therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HELMUTH F. SŒCKEL.

The bill (S. 347) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Helmuth F. Sœckel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of Helmuth F. Sœckel, late private Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIDNEY W. MOSS.

The bill (S. 533) for the relief of Sidney W. Moss, of Oregon City, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $7,000 to Sidney W. Moss, of Oregon City, Oreg., in full compensation for lots Nos. 2, 3, 6, and 7, in block No. 6, in what was known as Pacific City, in Lewis County, then Territory of Oregon, now State of Washington, taken by the Government for military purposes, and included in Cape Hancock Military Reservation, Pacific County, State of Washington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF BONDS OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BRICE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, which will take but a minute, to which I call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Yesterday, when the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory, was under consideration, the Senator from New York made the following statement:

Mr. HILL. Mr. CATRON, the Delegate from the Territory, was before the committee, and said it was a very proper and just measure and that it ought to be passed.

I desire to say that, as I understand the facts, Mr. CATRON, the Delegate from New Mexico, was before the committee. He heard the entire argument in favor of the amendment, but stated that he was present before the committee for the purpose of advocating the bill which passed the House of Representatives, and had no controversy whatever as to the amendment.

I state that in justice to the Delegate, so that he may not be misstated here, as though he had favored the amendment before the committee, which he did not undertake to state.

Mr. HILL. I think the statement of the Senator from Ohio is substantially correct. My recollection now is that Mr. CATRON spoke of the original bill, and stated that it was probably a just bill, but did not express any opinion upon the amendments proposed.

H. W. SHIPLEY.

The bill (S. 532) for the relief of H. W. Shipley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $2,487.38, in full compensation for work done and material furnished by H. W. Shipley in excess of that required of him by his agreement with the Indian Bureau in the construction of a gristmill and sawmill at the Nez Perce Indian Agency, in the Territory of Idaho.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL, POINT ARGUELLO, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 1820) for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at or near Point Arguello, California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to establish at or near Point Arguello, about 12 miles northwest of Point Conception, California, a light-house and fog signal, at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ART COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 1922) creating an art commission of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that bill was to-day under consideration and was passed over. It will be passed over now without prejudice.

KATE WINTER.

The bill (S. 789) for the relief of Kate Winter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia,'" approved January 19, 1891, so far as the same authorized the acquisition by the railroad of land for the business of the company in square No. 739, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPREME COUNCIL OF THE THIRTY-THIRD DEGREE OF SCOTTISH RITE MASONRY.

The bill (H. R. 2300) to incorporate the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree of Scottish Rite Masonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNTS WITH PUBLIC-LAND STATES.

The bill (S. 474) fixing times when, regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts between the United States and the several public-land States relative to the net proceeds of the sales and other disposition of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, which shall hereafter be stated and certified to the Treasury Department for payment, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BERRY. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule IX?

Mr. BERRY. No; let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

EDWARD N. FISH AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 290) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Edward N. Fish and others for supplies furnished the Indian service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to pay the amounts found due by the Court of Claims, as hereinafter set forth, for supplies furnished the Indian service in 1873 and 1874, and reported to Congress by Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 165, Fifty-first Congress, first session, to wit:

To Edward N. Fish & Co., $1,800.

To Edward N. Fish & Co., assignees of W. B. Hugus, $2,400.20.

To Bowers & Richards, assignees of James M. Burney, $3,534.76.

To Sutro & Co., assignees of William B. Hooper & Co., $3,479.32.

The payments to the assignees in each case being at the request of the original claimants as found by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALL subsequently said: Mr. President, I observe that a bill passed a few minutes since making an appropriation of certain sums of money upon the findings of the Court of Claims. I should like to have an explanation of the bill if there is any Senator present who understands it. For myself, I do not like to have a bill of that kind relating to the Court of Claims passed without any explanation. It is putting the Treasury practically into the hands of three judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who reported the bill, was in the Chamber at the time it was passed. He has gone out temporarily.

Mr. CALL. I shall not ask that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, but I desire to say that I do not think this is a proper method of legislation.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 990) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the word "defective," at the end of line 23, to insert:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prescribe the amount of tolerance to be allowed by the sealer of weights and measures, and all weights, measures, and balances that do not conform to the standards for weights and measures in this act provided for within the limit of tolerance so allowed may be seized by the sealer of weights and measures, and when so seized shall be destroyed by him, and a record of the same shall be duly entered on the books of his office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 32, after the words "section or," to strike out "to pay" and insert "the use of any weights, measures, scales, or other instruments described in this section, before the payment of"; in line 36, after the word "failing," to insert "or using"; in line 38, after the word "recovered," to strike out "in any court of competent jurisdiction" and insert "in the police court of the District of Columbia"; and in line 39, before the word "court," to insert "said"; so as to read:

Failure to comply with the provisions of this section, or the use of any weights, measures, scales, or other instruments described in this section, before the payment of the fees fixed by the said Commissioners for examinations, shall render the person so failing or using liable to a fine of not more than $20 and costs of prosecution for each offense, to be recovered in the police court of the District of Columbia; and the said court may make a further sentence that the offender be imprisoned in the District jail for any period not exceeding six months, until the payment of such fine and costs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PIER-HEAD LIGHT AT MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The bill (S. 738) authorizing the establishment of a pier-head light at or near South Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a pier-head light at or near South Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN CITIZENS.

The bill (S. 265) extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator who reported that bill is not present. Let it be passed over without losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CALL. I think the hour has expired which the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked should be devoted to the consideration of the Calendar, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The recollection of the Chair is that it was twenty minutes past 8 o'clock when the agreement was made, and that it was to last for one hour.

Mr. CALL. Very well; I will not insist on the motion. I think, however, there ought to be more Senators present when bills are being passed.

WELLS C. M'COOL.

The bill (S. 792) for the relief of Wells C. McCool was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, line 10, after the date "1863," to insert "less any amount said McCool may have received for pay or allowances for such period"; so as to make the section read:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $542.50, the amount of the pay and allowances of Wells C. McCool as first lieutenant of Company I, Twenty-ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from December 1, A. D. 1862, to April 30, 1863, less any amount said McCool may have received for pay or allowances for such period, to be paid by the proper officers of the United States to the said Wells C. McCool, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assignees: Provided, That the same be accepted as in full of all claims against the United States for the military services of said Wells C. McCool down to the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSING OF BILLIARD TABLES.

The bill (S. 1232) to license billiard tables, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. That bill had better be passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICE IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 1, to strike out all after the word "follows," as follows:

Commencing on the forty-ninth parallel of latitude at a point where the same is intersected by the summit of the main range of the Rocky Mountains; thence in a southerly direction, following the summit of said mountains, to a point where the same meets and is intersected by the eastern boundary line of Missoula County; thence south along said boundary line to latitude 47° 35′; thence west along said line of latitude to meridian 114° 35′ west; thence north along said meridian to the sixth standard parallel; thence west and along said parallel to meridian 115° west; thence north along said meridian to the forty-eighth parallel of latitude; thence west along said parallel to a point where the same is intersected by the summit of the divide or watershed between the Kootenai and Clarks Fork of the Columbia River, the same being known as the Cabinet range of mountains; thence in a northwesterly direction, following the summit of said divide or watershed to the eastern boundary line of the State of Idaho; thence north along said Idaho line to the forty-ninth parallel of latitude; thence east along said parallel to the place of beginning.

And insert:

Beginning at a point on the national boundary line where the same would be intersected by the range line between ranges 14 and 15 west of the Montana principal meridian when projected (this line being the present boundary between the Helena and Missoula land districts); thence south on said range line between ranges 14 and 15 west to the southeast corner of township 22 north, range 15 west; thence west on township line between townships 21 and 22 north to the southwest corner of township 22 north, range 23 west; thence north on range line between ranges 23 and 24 west to the sixth standard parallel north; thence west on said standard parallel to the southwest corner of township 25 north, range 26 west; thence north on range line between ranges 26 and 27 west to northeast corner of township 26 north, range 27 west; thence west on township line between townships 26 and 27 north to the northeast corner of township 26 north, range 30 west; thence north on range line between ranges 29 and 30 west to northeast corner of township 27 north, range 30 west; thence west on township line between townships 27 and 28 north to the northwest corner of township 27 north, range 31 west; thence north on range line between ranges 31 and 32 west to the seventh standard parallel north; thence west along the seventh standard parallel north to the western boundary of the State; thence north on said boundary line to the northwest corner of the State on the national boundary line on the forty-ninth parallel, north latitude; and thence east on said national boundary line to the place of beginning.

So as to make the section read:

That all that portion of the State of Montana bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the national boundary line where the same would be intersected by the range line between ranges 14 and 15 west of the Montana principal meridian when projected (this line being the present boundary between the Helena and Missoula land districts); thence south on said range line between ranges 14 and 15 west to the southeast corner of township 22 north, range 15 west; thence west on township line between townships 21 and 22 north to the southwest corner of township 22 north, range 23 west; thence north on range line between ranges 23 and 24 west to the sixth standard parallel north; thence west on said standard parallel to the southwest corner of township 25 north, range 26 west; thence north on range line between ranges 26 and 27 west to northeast corner of township 26 north, range 27 west; thence west on township line between townships 26 and 27 north to the northeast corner of township 26 north, range 30 west; thence north on range line between ranges 29 and 30 west to northeast corner of township 27 north, range 30 west; thence west on township line between townships 27 and 28 north to the northwest corner of township 27 north, range 31 west; thence north on range line between ranges 31 and 32 west to the seventh standard parallel north; thence west along the seventh standard parallel north to the western boundary of the State; thence north on said boundary line to the northwest corner of the State on the national boundary line on the forty-ninth parallel, north latitude; and thence east on said national boundary line to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district, to be called Flathead land district of the State of Montana, and the land office for said district shall be located at the town of Kalispell.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, is it not a little unwise to take up these bills without the authors of the bills or the chairmen of the committees being present to explain them?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has been adopted, the Chair will state.

Mr. HILL. There might possibly be other amendments if the author of the bill or the chairman of the committee reporting it were here.

Mr. PLATT. It occurs to me that this is a good time to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement was that the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar should continue for one hour, the Chair will state. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. HILL. I do not object. I only make the suggestion, and leave it to the good sense of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose there is no danger in this bill establishing a land office.

Mr. HILL. Possibly not.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make an inquiry in regard to the pending bill. It proposes to establish a new land office. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who has been Secretary of the Interior, how many new offices have to be created when a new land office is established?

Mr. TELLER. Only two, a register and a receiver.

Mr. PLATT. Are they provided for in this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; they follow under the general law.

Mr. TELLER. If the office is created, the general law authorizes the appointment of those officers.

Mr. PLATT. How long do they hold?

Mr. TELLER. They are appointed for four years, unless a change of Administration occurs, and then they are sometimes sooner removed.

Mr. PLATT. So that if we should get the Administration we should get the officers?

Mr. TELLER. The officers can be removed after the 4th of next March. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESERVOIR SITES.

The bill (S. 264) providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator who introduced and reported that bill is absent, and it is quite an important bill. Let it be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

ASSIGNEES OF ADDISON C. FLETCHER.

The bill (S. 1380) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Patents reported an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the claim of Hyland C. Kirk, of Phelps, N. Y., and others, assignees of letters patent No. 101604, dated April 5, 1870 (antedated October 5, 1869), for an improvement in adhesive postal and revenue stamps, issued to Addison C. Fletcher, and assigned to said Hyland C. Kirk and others, for compensation for the use of said letters patent and the invention therein described by the United States Government in the collection of revenue on distilled spirits and malt liquors during the years 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872, be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, and said court is hereby vested with power and jurisdiction, notwithstanding the statute of limitations, to hear, determine, and adjudicate the validity of said letters patent, the title of the assignees, respectively, to the same, and the amount of compensation, if any, which should in justice and equity be made to said claimants or any of them, respectively, for the use of such invention by the United States as aforesaid, and to render final judgment therefor. That upon the trial of the questions arising, said court shall receive as competent evidence the testimony in the case of Fletcher against United States, and the case of Solomon against United States, heretofore pending and decided in said Court of Claims and of record therein, together with such other evidence as may be presented upon said hearing. And from the judgment of said court either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the manner and within the time provided by statute for appeals from judgments rendered by said court.

Mr. HILL. Is not that rather remarkable legislation? Is there anybody here to explain it? The bill prescribes in a case before the Court of Claims exactly what evidence shall be received, etc., which is something unusual, it strikes me.

Mr. PLATT. There is nothing very remarkable about it, Mr. President. The committee have tried to do the best they could for some of the Senator's constituents, and if he does not desire to have his constituents taken care of I am sorry he did not make his application before the committee, to be heard there. I believe, however, the bill was introduced by the Senator's colleague [Mr. MURPHY].

This is a bill which has passed the Senate several times, and I think the parties are entitled to have the case decided in the Court of Claims.

The reason of the provision that the evidence taken in certain cases might be used was to prevent the necessity of going all over with the taking of the testimony again upon the exact point which will be before the Court of Claims. The parties desire that the case might be adjudicated upon the evidence in those records, but the committee changed that so as simply to make the testimony taken competent evidence there; of course, it is for the court to give it such weight as it chooses, it being left open on both sides—the United States and the parties plaintiff—to the production of such other evidence as they may present.

Mr. CALL. Other evidence is not excluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW January 8, 1896, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs to continue investigations during the recess of Congress and to visit the several Indian reservations, etc., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

JENNIE M. HUNT.

The bill (S. 674) for the relief of Jennie M. Hunt was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under Rule IX.

SOUTHWESTERN PRESBYTERIAN UNIVERSITY.

The bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have that bill go over. There is a thin Senate present, and I do not like the wording of the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of the Senate has been executed, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 9, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 5, 1896.

CONSUL.

Samuel Comfort, of New York, to be consul of the United States at Bombay, India.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 5, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, a message came from the Senate yesterday that the Senate had disagreed to the House amendment to the concurrent resolutions of the Senate in regard to Cuba, and asking the House to agree to a conference. I move that the House insist on its amendment, and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate concurrent resolution in reference to Cuba and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

IMPROVEMENT OF CONNEAUT HARBOR, OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the joint resolution (H. Res. 98) directing the Secretary of War to cause Lieut. Col. Jared A. Smith, Corps of Engineers, to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate. They are merely verbal.

The amendments of the Senate were read and concurred in.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to obtain practical benefits of great value to the country from the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, the park and its approaches are hereby declared to be a national field for military maneuvers for the Regular Army of the United States and the National Guard of the States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, within the limits of appropriations which may from time to time be available for such purpose, to assemble, at his discretion, in camp at such season of the year and for such period as he may designate, at this field of military maneuvers, such portions of the military forces of the United States as he may think best, to receive military instruction there. The Secretary of War is further authorized to make and publish regulations governing the assembling of the National Guard of the several States upon the maneuvering grounds, and he may detail instructors from the Regular Army for such forces during their exercises.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were read, making the first section of the bill read as follows:

That in order to obtain practical benefits of great value to the country from the establishment of national military parks, said parks and their approaches are hereby declared to be national fields for military maneuvers for the Regular Army of the United States and the National Guard of the States: Provided, That the said parks shall be opened for such purposes only in the discretion of the Secretary of War and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The SPEAKER. Reserving the right to object?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir. Mr. Speaker, I observe that in this bill the words "National Guard" are used. Now, I suppose the manifest intention is to cover the militia of all the States. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio whether that is so?

Mr. GROSVENOR. This bill confers upon the Secretary of War authority to give permission to the National Guard to occupy this park for the purposes designated.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is it not the intention to cover the militia of all the States?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then the objection I suggest is this: That the term "National Guard" does not cover the militia of many of the States. In a number of the States the militia is not termed the National Guard; in some it is called the State guard. There are various designations applied to the State militia. I suggest that the word "militia" be substituted in the bill for the words "National Guard."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to that amendment. This bill, however, has been drawn at the Office of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have the report of the Secretary of War of last year on the militia of the various States, and that report says that in 17 States the militia is not termed the National Guard. I suggest the insertion of the word "militia" as being more generic.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will allow me to say that there is no force in his objection. The term "National Guard" is a designation which covers all the troops recognized under the laws of the United States. The militia of the country are recognized as belonging to the National Guard. They are a part of the military force of the United States and under the orders of the President of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Can the gentleman show me the term "National Guard" in the Constitution? [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no; and I can not show the battle of Bunker Hill in the Constitution. [Laughter.] The gentleman had better let the bill go through in its present form, and if necessary a correction can be made in the Senate.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to offer the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire to propose an amendment, to insert the words "militia and" before "National Guard" wherever that phrase occurs.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; let "militia" be put after "National Guard," in line 10.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Before or after will suit me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The word "or," not "and," should be used, because we do not want to recognize two classes of troops.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I assent to that suggestion.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to the insertion of the words "or militia" in the tenth line, following the word "Guard." I presume the question will be first upon the committee amendments and then upon this.

The SPEAKER. Should there not be a change also in the eighth line of the first section?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir; the same amendment should be made there after the words "National Guard."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments of the committee and the amendments proposed by Mr. BARTLETT of New York and Mr. GROSVENOR were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2003) for the relief of Mrs. A. C. Wagner, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to hear the report read in this case.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

Mr. ADAMS. I trust the gentleman will at least hear the report read before he makes objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think we had better go on with the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 4 of the bill has been read and is now open to amendment.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for section 4 of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order now to entertain a substitute. As I understand it, this is a substitute for the entire section. Amendments under the rule would be first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. No vote can be had until the text is amended.

Mr. MILNES. Very well; I will withdraw the matter temporarily.

Mr. SWANSON. I offer an amendment to this section of the bill. On page 8 of the bill, in line 2, I move to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 2, strike out "$4,000" and insert $4,500"; so that it will read: "for the western district of Virginia, $4,500."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope I can have the attention of the committee, and especially the members of the Judiciary Committee, for a very few moments while I explain the purpose of this amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is to fix the salary for the marshal of the western district of the State of Virginia at $4,500, instead of $4,000, as proposed by the bill.

Now, I hope that this Committee on the Judiciary, as all other committees ought to do when they ascertain that they have done anybody injustice, will be willing to agree to correct it. I hope the committee, therefore, will give attention to the suggestions I propose to make in support of the amendment, and I think they will be content to agree with me that the marshal of the western district of Virginia is entitled to the increase I ask.

I am confident that the committee has failed to look at this district in fixing the salary of the marshal, and I am further confident that it was an oversight on their part. On yesterday in fixing the salaries of the district attorneys we purposely discriminated in some instances in behalf of the large cities, in view of the fact that important cases might arise which would demand a special degree of ability and local talent. But this does not apply to marshals. They execute writs. I wish to say that the marshal of the western district of the State of Virginia is equally with others entitled to $4,500, and I am willing for the House and Judiciary Committee to make the test by any rule that they see proper to apply.

Now, take, in the first instance, the emolument account. I simply ask that the marshal for this district of Virginia shall have precisely the same salary that is by the committee assigned to the marshal of the southern district of Illinois, and I want to make a comparison between the two. In the southern district of Illinois (and it must be remembered that the great city of Chicago is not situated in that district) there are practically the same conditions existing as exist in the western district of the State of Virginia. We have cities equally as large in that district, we have conditions similar to those existing in the district of southern Illinois, and in all respects these two districts afford a fair subject for comparison. Now, let us compare the two. Last year the total gross emoluments of the marshal for the southern district of Illinois were $22,876.51, while for the western district of Virginia for the same year they are $43,359.89. It will be seen that they will about double those of the southern district of Illinois. The total gross receipts of deputies, clerks, etc., for the southern district of Illinois were $16,018.90, and for the western district of Virginia $34,856.61, or more than double as much, and the two aggregates make the gross receipts of southern Illinois $38,895.41 and the western district of Virginia $78,216.50.

Now, look at the net salaries and emoluments of the two districts. Compare them. We find in the southern district of Illinois the total net salaries, $6,857.48; for the western district of Virginia, $8,643.66, or about 33⅓ per cent greater than the southern district of Illinois. Yet, taking the net returns from the western district of Virginia, they cut this salary down more than half, and they only reduce it for the southern district of Illinois about 25 per cent.

Thus, if taken on the gross receipts, the western district of Virginia should receive more. If taken on the net emoluments it should have more. Let us apply it to the work they did last year. Last year there were terminated in the southern district of Illinois 343 suits. That is, the marshal had to serve process and do work in that number of suits in the southern district of Illinois. In the western district of Virginia there were 565 suits, so that there was nearly double the work for the marshal for the western district of Virginia last year that there was for the marshal in the southern district of Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. Just one minute longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have three minutes.

Mr. BROWN objected.

Mr. SWANSON. I will get the floor later on.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the proposed amendment, and I only desire a minute. The gentleman says we could not have looked at the returns when we fixed this salary. The returns were carefully examined and they show a condition in that district which, as much as in any other district, indicates the necessity for the passage of this bill. The western district of Virginia took out of the United States in the year 1895, in fees, the sum of $43,500, and it was to prevent this and other things of this kind that this bill was introduced. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute for my amendment, to insert "five thousand" instead of "forty-five hundred."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. If the gentleman wishes to reduce the amount, we will accept his amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I say, I offer a substitute proposing $5,000 instead of $4,500. If gentlemen wish to accept that, I will agree to it. I do not come here to ask for anything except fair, honest treatment between different officials of this Government. Now, we pay the marshal for the work he does, or we should do so.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILNES. The Chair ruled a few moments ago when I offered a substitute that substitutes at this time were not in order.

Mr. SWANSON. The gentleman offered a substitute for the whole section, but mine is simply a substitute for my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] is mistaken. The Chair did not rule that his substitute was not in order, but that action could not be had upon it until the text of the section was completed and until other gentlemen had had opportunity by amendment to perfect the text.

Mr. MILNES. Does not the same rule apply here?

The CHAIRMAN. No; this is a substitute for an amendment to a part of the section. The proposition of the gentleman from Michigan was a substitute for the whole section.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was going on to say that I have no desire to increase the salary of any official of this Government unless it is justly and fairly due him. If the marshal for the western district of Virginia is compelled, when he accepts that office, to do double the work that the marshal for the southern district of Illinois has to do, then if he should not receive more compensation he certainly ought to receive as much. Now, take the work that he has got to do next year. That is a fair test. Take the processes that the marshal for the western district of Virginia is compelled to serve next year, and see whether this is fair and just or not. Whether I am potential in this House in getting amendments or not, I am certainly entitled to appeal to this House for fair, just, and honest treatment, and to prevent any discrimination or discrepancy in fixing these salaries; and that is all I ask. Take the work which must be done next year and put that test to it. Let every man, in a spirit of fairness and justice, say what is fair between the marshal of the western district of Virginia and the marshal of the southern district of Illinois.

Mr. MILES. Could you not prevent that discrimination by offering an amendment to reduce the salary of the marshal for the Illinois district?

Mr. SWANSON. If they reduce that, they ought certainly to give more to the marshal for the western district of Virginia than is given the marshal of the southern district of Illinois. If you will do that I will not complain. In the southern district of Illinois the criminal suits terminated last year were 343. That is, the marshal for the southern district of Illinois only had to serve processes and be responsible for 343 suits last year, while the marshal for the western district of Virginia had the responsibility and the work in 565 suits, or nearly twice as much work and responsibility.

Now, the suits pending to be executed by the marshal for the southern district of Illinois next year, on the 1st of July, were only 167. That gauges the work he has to do next year in the new suits. There were left of undecided suits for the marshal of the western district of Virginia to execute next year 318—twice as much work to do next year as must be done by the marshal of the southern district of Illinois; yet he is to receive a smaller salary. Now, I want to appeal to the fairness and justice of this House. Last year the emoluments of the district attorney for the western district of Virginia were $8,643.60, and the emoluments for the district attorney of the southern district of Illinois were only $6,857.48; so he received last year about 25 per cent less for work than the district attorney for the western district of Virginia, and yet they come in here and give him $500 more salary; and I ask this House to correct that inequality.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, is debate on this amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this committee to certain matters relative to this bill not particularly pertinent to this amendment. I want also to address a few words relative to this amendment. I submit this: If there is a district anywhere in the United States where you can not get a good man to act as marshal for the sum of $4,000 we had better abolish the district. I want to call your attention to another thing: That the enormous fees named by the gentleman from Virginia as having been piled up in this district may be the very reason why we ought to pass this bill; and if the bill is passed it will serve the purpose of cutting down this very business out of which these enormous fees are created.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I have not time. I submit this: If there is any criticism that can be passed upon this section it is that the committee has placed too large sums opposite the names of these various districts. I believe the sense of the House would be to cut down the figures instead of increasing them. I desire to call particular attention to this fact: Here is a bill largely experimental, passed, if it shall be passed, for the first time in the history of our country, if I understand it, entering upon a new course of procedure, which has been investigated by one of the ablest committees of this House. That committee has devoted unceasing energy to the consideration of this matter. Now, if we are to believe each of these gentlemen who have certain interests that they are seeking to protect, never did a committee make so many blunders as did this committee. Everybody wants to amend the bill. This is a committee formed of able men, who have considered this bill with special reference to reform, and I submit it is our duty to stand by the committee. We can not take the statement of everybody here as against the statements of the committee, and I believe this Committee of the Whole ought to vote down these amendments just as fast as they come to them, and let us stand by the committee. I believe it is in the interest of reform. If we venture to amend every section, we wipe away the effect of the work of the committee. I therefore submit that we ought not to do that, but ought to stand by the committee and let this be executed into law.

Mr. SWANSON. I withdraw my substitute and put the sum at $4,500, the same as it is in southern Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "five hundred" after the word "thousand" in line 2, of page 8, so as to read, "$4,500."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF and Mr. HENDERSON. Division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was wrong. The noes seem to have it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANSON. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 3, strike out the words "twenty-five hundred" and insert "three thousand."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment I sent to the Clerk's desk and had read is to increase the compensation of the marshal for the district of New Jersey from $2,500 to $3,000. It is manifest that the feeling of the members of this House is favorable to the passage of this bill. Yet I do not for a moment consider that that feeling is so deep rooted that they would hesitate to favor an amendment that would take out of the bill an inequality, an error, or a mistake made by the committee.

The district of New Jersey comprises the whole State of New Jersey, with a population of a million and a half. It may be truly stated that neither area nor population is the proper basis upon which to regulate the compensation of these officials, and I do not hesitate to say that a comparison of the business of the different districts in the United States would be a fairer basis upon which to ascertain whether the committee have acted equitably and with the fair hand of justice in fixing the compensation of the marshal of the district of New Jersey. By the report of the Attorney-General for 1895, containing a summary of the business of the different districts in the United States, it is shown that in the district of New Jersey 40 cases were disposed of and $1,895 collected. The committee have fixed the salary of the marshal of that district at $2,500.

Now, the same report of the Attorney-General shows that in the district of Nebraska only 24 cases were disposed of and $1,607 collected, yet the salary of the marshal for that district is put at $3,500. In the district of western Michigan only 18 cases were disposed of, the total reported collection was only $596, and yet the salary of the marshal for that district is put at $3,000. In the district of Maryland only 26 cases were disposed of, there was a reported collection of $5,380, and the salary of the marshal for that district is fixed at $3,000. In the district of Maine only 14 cases were disposed of, there was a reported collection of only $1,200, and yet the compensation reported in this bill for the marshal of that district is $3,000. In the northern district of Florida only 25 cases were disposed of, there was a reported collection of only $1,807, and yet the compensation of the marshal is fixed at $3,000. In the southern district of Florida only 33 cases were disposed of, there was a reported collection of $1,196, and the compensation of the marshal is put at $3,000. The district of West Virginia shows only 26 cases disposed of, with a reported collection of $2,048, yet the committee have reported the compensation of the marshal of that district at $4,000. In the eastern district of New York only 24 cases were disposed of, the amount collected was $726, and yet the compensation reported by the committee for the marshal of that district is $3,000. In the district of North Carolina only 24 cases were disposed of, the total collection was only $517, and yet the compensation of the marshal of that district is put at $4,000. The district of northern Texas shows only 10 cases disposed of and a collection of only $216, yet the compensation of the marshal of that district is put at $3,000. The southern district of Ohio shows only 30 cases disposed of——

Mr. MERCER. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERCER. I wish to ask him from what part of the House he expects to get any support for his amendment, as he is criticising every district but his own. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. From that portion of the House where equity will reign. [Laughter.] I only want to show members that, according to the compensation reported by the committee for the marshals of other districts, the compensation which they fix for the marshal of the district of New Jersey is eminently unfair.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of my friend from New Jersey. If this bill be examined carefully, it will be found that we give to the marshal in that district $500 more than we give to the district attorney. We did that for the reason that the income of the marshal was $3,400, while the income of the district attorney was only $2,200. This is one of the few exceptions contained in the bill where we gave the marshal more than the district attorney.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. If the district attorney's compensation had been $1,000, would you, therefore, argue that $1,500 would be ample for the marshal?

Mr. HENDERSON. No; but the compensation of the two officers in any given district is some guide to us in judging what is proper, and we gave the marshal $500 more in this case and in a few other exceptional cases. The general policy of the bill was to give the marshal about the same pay as the district attorney. That rule was resisted by some strong men on the committee, who believed that the district attorneys were men of a higher grade of ability, greater training, and that they ought to have a higher rate of compensation than the marshals; but while it was admitted that there were many men who could be marshals and but few who could be efficient district attorneys, yet the committee took into consideration the other fact that the marshal is a bonded officer while the district attorney is not, and they offset that against the other consideration, and generally acted upon the rule of fixing the compensation of the marshal and of the district attorney at the same figure. That was the rule except where some particular reasons cropped out. In this case of the district of New Jersey such particular reasons did appear, so it was made an exception.

Now, I would like to say this to the committee while I am on my feet. In the battle of yesterday we settled upon the lines for the compensation of United States district attorneys, and I believe it would be wise on the part of the Committee of the Whole to pass rapidly over this section and leave it as the committee reporting the bill fixed it, the compensation of the marshals being, in all but four or five cases, the same as that of the district attorneys. Another thought: We have, as a committee, been somewhat the butt of the witty and of those who were not satisfied with our work. We have taken that goodnaturedly; and we intend to do so. But I would like to impress upon the minds of our associates here that we have undertaken a work called for by this country—called for by ourselves. Nothing has been pressed upon us more than the necessity for this legislation; and while we are doing a work which brings upon us the shafts of those who do not find the bill in just the shape that suits them, I trust they will remember that we are doing a work for them as their agents, and unless they find that in doing this we have made some grave oversight or mistake we should have their kind cooperation.

They should realize that as a committee we are acting as their servants, trying to frame a measure for the benefit of the country and to enroll upon the statute books something that will be to the credit of every member of the House.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, it was rejected; there being—ayes 25, noes 55.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire for a moment the attention of the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, and also of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT]. This section as it now stands provides no salary for the marshal of the eastern district of South Carolina, or the marshal of the western district; but it does provide a salary for the marshal of "the district of South Carolina"—an office which does not exist. Now, the committee ought to agree either to an amendment like that proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] yesterday, in the case of the district attorney——

Mr. JOHNSON, of California. I rise to a point of order. As the committee, according to the statements made here, have been so careful, they can not have made such an error as the gentleman is now undertaking to point out; he must be mistaken.

Mr. BAILEY. I suppose that relieves the mind of the gentleman from California, but it does not touch the question.

Certainly neither the Judiciary Committee nor the House wants to make a mistake. If this bill should become a law in its present shape it provides compensation for an office that does not exist and leaves unprovided with compensation an office that does exist.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand the matter, while there are two districts in the State of South Carolina the service in both is performed by the same district attorney and the same marshal. Is that correct?

Mr. BAILEY. That is perfectly true. The law provides that the marshal of the eastern district of South Carolina shall perform the duties of the marshal of the western district. Thus the marshal of the one district has imposed upon him the performance of the duties in both districts. But he is not an officer of the "district of South Carolina" and is an officer of the eastern district of South Carolina.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then the legal title is marshal and district attorney of the eastern district?

Mr. BAILEY. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If that is the case there ought to be no objection to making the necessary correction.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me a word?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. In all the reports and accounts of the Attorney-General for years these two districts have been treated as one. The committee, following these official documents of the Attorney-General, which have treated South Carolina as a single district, put the provision in this form.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly I do not criticise the work of the committee, for I am partly responsible for that work.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The addition of the letter "s" will cure the difficulty.

Mr. BAILEY. That will perhaps correct it.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Then I offer that amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. One moment. I hope gentlemen will not act too hastily——

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is out of order, as there is no amendment pending.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] has offered an amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. If I can have the floor a moment, I wish only to state——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the pending amendment be first read.

The amendment offered by Mr. BURTON of Missouri was read, as follows:

In line 17, page 7, strike out "district" and insert "districts"; so as to read: "For the districts of South Carolina, $4,500."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask now, in order to make the bill symmetrical, that we turn to page 3, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. I hope the gentleman will not leave this matter pending, but that we may dispose of it now.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I understand the gentleman desires to be heard pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Yes.

I think it would be quite unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, to make an amendment of this kind in reference to the existing law on the appropriation bill that may affect these districts in South Carolina in a manner not now contemplated.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, has consent been given to recur to the preceding paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that we had better proceed with the pending amendment first and at the conclusion of the consideration of the amendment the gentleman can submit his motion to return to that portion of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Very well.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Of course we will have an opportunity to offer amendments to this section.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly; it is the pending section.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I was proceeding to say that I think it quite unfortunate to undertake in this way to correct a matter that has certainly been proceeding without the slightest difficulty from the earliest history of the Government up to the present time. I do not suppose there has ever been an appropriation made for South Carolina in reference to judicial matters in that State that has not contained just what we find in the pending bill.

I applied to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary on yesterday, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], with reference to this very matter, and he said that in his opinion it had better be left as it is now until the committee could examine more carefully into it, and if it should be found to be necessary hereafter, corrections could be made as we proceed with the bill.

The law requires that all the duties of the two districts shall be performed by the district attorney and the marshal of the "eastern district of South Carolina." Here is the statute, if any gentleman wants to hear it read. Such being the law and such being the precedents heretofore with reference to the payment of these officials in South Carolina, I think it would be very dangerous to make the change without a careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances that are involved. I know that there are gentlemen here who are anxious to have two offices created, two district attorneys and two marshals, and it is well to guard against that being accomplished by this amendment. That matter is now pending under a special bill before the Committee on the Judiciary, and they can take such action upon it hereafter as may be deemed best. If the Judiciary Committee should determine that the change should be made—that there should be two district attorneys and two marshals—the changes in this bill thereby made necessary can be made in the committee of conference or in some other way.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that this does not change the law at all. The manner of the designation of this officer in the statute is the "district attorney for the eastern district," who shall also be the district attorney for the western district of South Carolina. The one official performs the duties of both. Now, in the bill before us we provide, in section 4, "that the United States marshal for each judicial district of the United States shall be paid an annual salary, as follows: "For the northern and middle district of Alabama, each $4,000; for the southern district of the State of Alabama, $3,000"; and so on until we come down to line 17, on page 7, where it reads: "For the district of South Carolina, $4,500." As a matter of fact, there are two districts in that State, and but one district attorney and one marshal.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. It has always been so since the formation of the Government, and why should the change be made now without proper examination or consideration?

Mr. CONNOLLY. But this does not change it. It still leaves the district attorney and the marshal for the "district of South Carolina," although the law provides for two districts.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. The language has been just as it is in this bill, for the "district of South Carolina," for many years—ever since the formation of the Government.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The district attorney has been the district attorney for South Carolina, but performed the duties for both districts. But we have always recognized the plurality of the districts in that State, and the addition of the letter "s," as proposed in the pending amendment, simply recognizes the plurality of these districts just as they have been recognized since the Constitution was framed.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. But if the matter has been proceeding all of these years without any friction or difficulty, why should we make a change now that may lead to some unforeseen complication hereafter?

Mr. CONNOLLY. But, my dear sir, it is not a change.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. Oh, certainly it is.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Not at all; it simply provides that this shall conform to all those provisions that have passed heretofore in describing the two districts of South Carolina.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. It has never been placed in the plural before. The gentleman is mistaken. This is the first time the change has been proposed.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why, in 1790 the division was made of the two districts.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. I know that; but the district of South Carolina embraced the two districts, and that reference was considered sufficient and satisfactorily descriptive. The appropriations have always been made that way, and I do not see any reason for the change.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But we are fixing the salary for the district attorneys and the district marshals in the two districts, and we want to recognize the fact of their existence.

Mr. BAILEY. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri—if the gentleman from South Carolina has concluded——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. I think it very unfortunate that the change should be made in this way. I think the judgment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] is better; that the matter be passed over now and let the Committee on the Judiciary look into it and recommend such change as may be necessary, if any change is deemed necessary. There is a bill pending before the committee, a special bill for this purpose, and I do not know whether the change in the phraseology here might not have some effect upon the object desired in that bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be withdrawn and the matter left to the Committee on the Judiciary to make such recommendations as they shall deem necessary.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I discover from a careful reading of the section that my amendment may possibly involve us in some difficulties. In the beginning of the section it says—

That the United States marshal for each judicial district of the United States shall be paid an annual salary, as follows.

Now, it is contended by some gentlemen that if my amendment prevails it would give to each of the two districts $4,000. That certainly is not intended.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. That simply exemplifies the force of the objection which I made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hardly think a court would give that construction to it, but to leave no doubt, when the gentleman's amendment is disposed of I intend to offer the following:

To add after the word "for," in line 17, page 7, the words "one marshal for"; so that it will read: "for one marshal for the districts of South Carolina."

Mr. BAILEY. Let me suggest to the chairman of the committee [Mr. HENDERSON] that the easy way to do it is to say "for the eastern district of South Carolina"; and I now move to amend by inserting the word "eastern"; so that it will read:

For the eastern district of South Carolina.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that the district in which the marshal lives?

Mr. BAILEY. It is. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that section 546 of the Revised Statutes divides the State of South Carolina into the eastern and western districts. That is as old as 1823; and I will suggest to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] that so far as I have been able to observe in a hasty examination of the laws every act relating to the judicial districts of that State does distinguish between the eastern and the western districts, and the fact that the committee was misled was due to the fact that the Department of Justice has heretofore been misled.

Mr. HENDERSON. All their reports were made on the other theory.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. Section 776 of the Revised Statutes provides that a marshal shall be appointed in each district, except in the middle district of Alabama, the northern district of Georgia, and the western district of South Carolina. After providing for Georgia and Alabama, the concluding sentence of that section is—

The marshal of the eastern district of South Carolina shall perform the duties of the western district of said State.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The gentleman's substitute will cover it.

Mr. BAILEY. I think undoubtedly it does.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I accept the gentleman's amendment in lieu of mine.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] that the vague fear that something might happen which he does not understand ought not to be a sufficient reason for asking either the Judiciary Committee or the Committee of the Whole to agree to a provision that is plainly imperfect under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is withdrawn?

Mr. HENDERSON. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] is withdrawn, and I suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that he write out his amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to amend by adding the word "eastern" before the word "district," in line 17 of page 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 17, page 7, before the word "district" the word "eastern," so that it will read "eastern district of South Carolina."

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the committee to return to the provision as to district attorneys and make the same correction there.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. If my friend from Texas asks unanimous consent to make the same change in section 3, I have no objection. We do not want to open that section to go over yesterday's performance again.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I recognize that. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that for the purpose only of making that change.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us dispose of this amendment first.

Mr. WANGER. I object to recurring to the other section.

Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment. That is the amendment that I proposed to the chairman of the committee yesterday, and he said he would prefer to have it passed upon by the Judiciary Committee. I have no objection to the insertion of the word "eastern."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, which has been read by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what was the gentleman's request?

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the purpose only of conforming it to the change just made by the House in section 4.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] asks unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the purpose of inserting the word "eastern" before the word "district" in line 25, on page 3. Is there objection?

Mr. WANGER. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I have sent an amendment to the desk which I wish to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 25, page 5, after the word "thousand," by inserting the words "five hundred."

Mr. WILLIS. I would like to be heard for a few minutes on this. I hope the committee will give me its attention. I have offered an amendment to add $500 to the salary of the Delaware marshal. It has been reduced to $2,000. My amendment is based, first, upon the fact that the salary has been made comparatively too small. I do not contend for anything like a $3,500 salary or a $4,000 or a $4,500 salary. They would not claim any attention from me in a contest on this floor; but when the salary has been reduced to $2,000, from the fact that was given to me yesterday by the marshal himself, that that marshalship has been yielding $3,000 and even $4,000 sometimes, reduced to $2,000, my argument is not simply that it has been made relatively too small, but absolutely too small. That is the objection. Absolutely too small! A poor, little, measly, driveling salary of $2,000 for the Delaware marshal! [Laughter.] I suppose that suggestion was made by the committee upon the basis of territorial extent. Why, I have to acknowledge to-day that I live in a small State, but that does not make any difference with reference to the value of the people who inhabit that State nor the work that has to be done. Our State is a great deal like Greece in the time of Pericles and Palestine in the days of the prophets—she is the home of statesmen, of honest men, and devoted heroes. [Laughter.] She ought not to be turned out to grass with a poor little $2,000 salary for her marshal who has been in the time past earning at least $3,500.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will not take up too much of my time.

Mr. POWERS. Make your amendment so as to put Vermont on the same footing.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, I would. I will include Vermont and I will include Connecticut in my amendment. Those salaries are absolutely too small. Now, I am not one of the kickers. I am a loyal man; there is none in this House more so; none who has more legitimate reverence for the deliberations and conclusions of a committee than I have. This committee, I acknowledge, has made a good bill. I recognize the diligent labors which they have bestowed upon it, and yet, sir, I can not look upon it as a revelation from heaven. [Laughter.] I can not regard it as profoundly philosophic as the Uponishads nor as perfect as the golden rule. There have been enough encomiums pronounced upon it to canonize a saint. I have no such veneration for it as that. If it is one of the greatest creations of the wisdom of man, it was only made by man after all. However right they may be, when they touch a $4,500 or a $5,000 or a $3,500 salary; when they come down to a poor miserable driveling pittance of $2,000 for the Delaware marshal, who came here yesterday and told me that he had been earning from $3,500 to $4,000, it is manifestly not sufficient. I do not object to the relation between the fee system and the salary system; but when you cut a salary down to that standard I think it is going a little too far. Now, I beg of you to put this little $500 on to that, and put it on to Vermont, and put it on to Connecticut, and then there will be more shapeliness in your bill, and more wisdom in your conclusions.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. I second the suggestion of the gentleman from Delaware. He has given very cogent reasons why that State should have a higher-priced marshal, and I feel very kindly toward him for having accepted the amendment to add the State of Vermont, so that the salary of the marshal of that State should be increased, and I want to add——

Mr. BAILEY. Will my friend from Vermont allow me——

Mr. POWERS. If Delaware is entitled to this increase on the ground named by the gentleman, to wit, that she resembles Greece in the days of Pericles, and the Holy Land in the time of the prophets, I want to add that Vermont is several times larger than Delaware, and several times better entitled to this increase on the ground he names than Delaware is.

Mr. BAILEY. Will you permit me to state——

Mr. POWERS. In point of fact the salaries in our State ought to be increased to $3,500, but Vermont is always modest, and we will consent to accept an increase of $500, as the gentleman proposes. And I desire to see this amendment meet the approval of this committee unanimously.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How much do you pay your governor?

Mr. BAILEY. That was what I was going to ask.

Mr. POWERS. The very reason why we pay our governor a small salary is the fact that our people have waited for the time to come when they could increase the whole body of the salaries of that State, and that golden moment is here and now. [Laughter.] Let us begin by paying the marshal proper compensation for his services, and I have no doubt that will be immediately followed up at home by increasing the salary of our governor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "four," in line 3, page 8, and insert "five" in lieu thereof.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, with regard to this amendment I desire to say to the committee that the increase which it proposes is based upon the best possible grounds on which an increase could be asked for. In investigating this matter I visited the office of the Attorney-General, and in consultation with the experts there, including Major Strong and Mr. Perry, who have had immediate charge of this subject and are familiar with the figures and facts showing the work done and the earnings and responsibilities of the marshal's office, and found there the original bill, in typewritten form, drawn by those experts, and which was submitted by the honorable Attorney-General to the House committee as a basis for the framing of this bill, designed to make these offices salaried, and I there found that the salary fixed for the marshal of the State of Washington, based upon the facts of the case, was $5,000. I am aware, of course, that afterwards the whole subject was submitted to the scrutiny of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I can not say, and do not pretend to know, what considerations moved them in reducing the amount to $4,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the duties of the office of marshal of the State of Washington. In addition to what was said by my colleague [Mr. DOOLITTLE] yesterday regarding the office of United States attorney, I have to say that the business of the marshal and of the United States attorney of that district is large. There are thousands of miles of shore and coast line under the revenue laws, and hundreds of miles of boundary line between the State of Washington and British Columbia to be guarded under the revenue and the Chinese exclusion laws. I have known instances where $5,000 or $6,000 was received by the Government in one lump from the sale of opium which had been captured from smugglers, recovery of which depends upon the vigilance and the industry of the marshal and his assistants.

Washington is a large State. The United States courts are held in four places. Seattle and Spokane, where courts are held, are 500 miles apart. From Tacoma to Wallawalla is 400 miles. The marshal must maintain offices in all of these places, and be responsible for the business in each of them. Washington, although a young State, does a great business. The maritime business is large. A greater tonnage passes through the custom-house at Port Townsend than any other custom-house in the United States save New York. There are 11 Indian reservations in the State of Washington, some of them a hundred miles across. The gentlemen who hold the offices of United States marshal and United States attorney, although I differ with them politically, I am bound to say, are learned, capable, and zealous officials.

Great executive ability has been shown in times past by these officers. During the term of the present marshal we have had the Coxey raid and the great strikes on the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railways. But a reason stronger, it appears to me, than any other, is that the marshal is required to serve all civil processes for private persons. He may be called upon to-day to libel a ship and to-morrow to serve an attachment 100 miles away, next to make an arrest in a remote part of the State, and in every case acts at his peril. He and his sureties on his official bond are liable at all times, yet the fees and emoluments of this work are to be turned over to the Government; but the Government will not share in the risk and responsibility upon his bond. I find in a table of the report made by the Attorney-General that the marshal of the State has received $4,390.07 fees from individuals for work done in that office. Under this bill that will be paid over to the Government. Indeed, the net emoluments of the marshal of the State of Washington for the fiscal year 1895 were $11,064.57. Out of this he was paid $6,000. For all that business the marshal and his sureties are responsible upon his official bond, and I remember a case recently decided in the court of appeals at San Francisco, where he was mulcted in damages, under that responsibility, for nearly $10,000. Under my amendment, Mr. Chairman, the salary of the office will be reduced $1,000. I think that is fair and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, when the case was up for the district of——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the pending amendment?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir; I am in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume time in discussing this matter. This marshal gets $4,000, the same as the district attorney of the district; he is provided with facilities for obtaining abundance of assistants and deputies; his expenses and subsistence are provided for; and I hope there will be no change made in the bill as it stands.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out "three thousand," after the word "each," in line 2, page 6, and insert "thirty-five hundred."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because, in my judgment, the amounts which the pending bill fixes as the salaries of the marshals of the northern and the southern districts of Florida will not compensate those gentlemen for the services which they are called upon to perform. The southern district of Florida, for instance, embraces 29 out of the 45 counties in the State, and extends from the southern line of the State of Georgia to the city of Key West, a distance of nearly 500 miles. There are in that district three places where circuit and district courts of the United States are held twice each year, Jacksonville, Tampa, and Key West. Those terms of court extend over a period of nearly eight months, usually from some time in October until the following June. Of course it is necessary for the marshal to be present during this entire time, because the United States statutes provide that he shall attend the sittings of the court to serve its mandates and execute its process. He has scarcely a moment at his own command during the session of the court, and even during its vacation, four months of the year, he is kept busy the entire time. The same thing may be said to a certain extent of the marshal of the northern district of Florida. It is true that he has not the same extent of territory to look after; but the records of the courts in his district show that his duties are equally burdensome. Neither of these officers has any time to engage in outside business, or to earn a dollar except their salaries. They are therefore compelled to rely upon the emoluments of their offices for the support of themselves and their families.

Now, sir, these officers earn more than $3,000 a year. A report of the Attorney-General, which I have before me, shows that the earnings of the marshal for the northern district of Florida for the year ended June 30, 1895, were $4,775, and of the marshal for the southern district, for six months of that year, $2,700, making more than $5,000 for the year. I submit, then, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that $3,000 is too small a salary in view of the amounts these officers are now receiving under the present system, the labors they are called upon to perform, and the responsibilities they assume.

I am not opposed to this bill as a whole. I, on the contrary, sympathize with the motives which prompted its introduction into this House. No one could listen to the statement made on this floor by the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and of the gentleman who has charge of the bill here without coming to the conclusion that a change in the law should be made; and while there may be some doubt as to whether it will, in its present shape, make any great saving, yet it will tend in that direction and will tend to remedy the abuses which have arisen under the existing law. This measure is a step in the right direction, and if the necessary amendments are made, so that as little injustice may be done as possible, I should not hesitate to vote for the bill. I am under the impression that this committee has done the best it could under the circumstances. I know that it is not possible to perfect a measure embracing the features that this bill embraces in a day or a week or a month, because it is intricate in detail and far-reaching in its effects. But I think, when it is shown to the committee and the members of the House that injustice is being done or might be done by the bill as it stands, that marshals or other officers whose salaries are fixed in the bill will not receive under it sufficient compensation for their services, there should be a change. I think the committee should be brave enough to consent to the necessary changes.

Whenever this question of salary has come up in my own State I have always been in favor of properly compensating officers for what they are called upon to perform; because I know that the Government, whether State or national, can thus obtain the very best material to fill the respective offices. If salaries are cut too low, you can not obtain the best material, as the experience of the past has in many instances demonstrated. Hence, as I have said, I have always been in favor of paying a fair compensation for the services which public officers are called upon to render.

I therefore hope that the amendment which I have just offered may be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, of course it is ungracious to oppose these requests for advances in salaries in the several districts. I will only say with respect to Florida that under this bill she receives above the average in the amount of compensation accorded to the officers there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 4 by raising the schedule of all salaries provided in that section 25 per cent.

The amendment of Mr. POWERS was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that there is a substitute now pending for the section.

Mr. POWERS. I was not aware that there was any substitute pending.

Mr. HENDERSON. The substitute was read for information. There is no substitute formally pending.

Mr. BAILEY. This is an amendment—not a substitute. It merely takes the section as it stands and raises the salaries.

Mr. POWERS. Then it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. POWERS. I understand it is conceded that the amendment is in order—that the other proposition was simply read for information. The chairman of the committee [Mr. HENDERSON] so states.

Mr. HENDERSON. But let us dispose of the other amendments first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order in its present form.

Mr. POWERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the amendment is not in proper form, I beg to inquire of the Chair what would be proper form?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair scarcely thinks that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. POWERS. If the Chair excludes the amendment in the form in which it has been offered, I think the Committee of the Whole is entitled to some reason, so that the proposition may be modified.

The CHAIRMAN. When the attention of the gentleman from Vermont is called to the amendment, the Chair thinks he will certainly see that it is not in proper form. It reads:

Amend section 4, raising the schedule of all salaries provided in section 4, 25 per cent.

Mr. POWERS. The substance may be bad; but I wish to inquire what is the trouble with the form.

The CHAIRMAN. How would the gentleman apply that?

Mr. POWERS. I would apply it just as it reads.

The CHAIRMAN. Where would the gentleman put it?

Mr. POWERS. I would apply it to every one of the salaries named in section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it would certainly be out of order, because there would be too many amendments pending at one time.

Mr. POWERS. It is a single amendment, going to the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is out of order.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the resolutions relating to Cuban affairs, Mr. HITT, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 1, page 8, "three thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand"; so that it will read: "for the eastern district of Virginia, $4,000."

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to detain the committee with lengthy remarks in support of the amendment I have offered. I simply base it on what I claim to be just compensation to a faithful officer for work done for the Government.

If you take into consideration the large area comprised in the eastern district of the State of Virginia, I think you will reach the conclusion that the marshal, if he has anything to do at all, has very much territory to cover. Under the fee system the compensation of the marshal there amounted to $4,500. At one fell swoop it is proposed by the committee to cut him down to $3,500, a cut of $1,000. I do not know how I can use stronger language in regard to the propriety of increasing the compensation fixed by the Committee on the Judiciary for the marshal in this district than has already been used in reference to other districts in other States.

I think it would be only just under the system proposed by the bill of the committee, which system I heartily indorse, that the salary of this official should be estimated by the labor done, and when that estimate is made on the basis of the amount of work done in his office I am satisfied that the increase proposed will be granted.

I hope the committee will look favorably upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer at this point, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4, by striking out, in line 21, page 5, the word "four" and inserting "five," so that it will read "for the northern district of California, $5,000."

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is intended to raise the salary of the United States marshal for the northern district of California from $4,000 per annum, as fixed by the committee, to $5,000. The committee has reduced the salary of the marshal for that district $2,000 per annum. It seems to me that this is an unreasonable reduction.

The office is one of the most important in the Union, and has always made good the maximum salary of $6,000 per annum allowed by existing law. It seems to have fallen a little below that sum during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, probably owing to the circumstances that have been so frequently referred to in this discussion.

The marshalship of the northern district of California ranks in every respect with those for which the committee has allowed $5,000.

The work of the marshal in that district is constant and arduous. He has charge of the United States circuit court, of which there are now two judges, the United States district court, and the United States circuit court of appeals. He is under heavy bonds and has large responsibilities always resting upon him. In addition to his ordinary duties, the great bulk of the work under the Chinese exclusion act falls to his office. It requires a man of a high order of executive ability to fill the position satisfactorily.

His maximum salary as now fixed by existing law is $6,000 per annum, and when compared with the salaries paid to our corresponding State and local officers, even that salary appears to be low rather than high. For example, we pay to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco a salary of $8,000 per annum, and we pay the salaries of all of his deputies and clerks. The $8,000 per annum is the net salary allowed him, out of which he is not required to pay any of the expenses of his office.

This bill reduces the salary of the marshal, who performs similar duties and bears equal responsibilities, to $4,000 per annum—just half the amount that we pay our sheriff.

It seems to me that a cut of $1,000 in his salary—that is to say, from $6,000 to $5,000—is all that can be reasonably asked at this time. Indeed, the suggestion of the committee was that the great purpose of this amendment to the appropriation bill was to change from the odious, obnoxious fee system to a salary system. I am in accord with the change so proposed. I agree that salaries should be substituted for fees as speedily as possible in all branches of the public service. But the committee, in addition to this very excellent reform, have proceeded, on a sweeping horizontal plan, to reduce the salaries of district attorneys and marshals one-third, and I do not approve of that feature of their bill. It is said that a few exceptions have been made to this general rule of reduction, and the fact that those exceptions have not been satisfactorily explained makes this bill less satisfactory than it would otherwise be. Equality is the essence of justice, and the rule of equality fairly applied would raise the salary of the marshal of the northern district of California to $5,000 per annum.

All that I said on yesterday in favor of increasing the salary of the district attorney applies equally to the salary of the marshal. It has been suggested that the marshal's salary should not be higher than the district attorney's. I do not think that the one case should govern the other at all. I think both salaries should be increased. But regardless of the district attorney's salary, $4,000 is inadequate for the marshal.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. A single word in response to the gentleman from California.

The northern district of California received in net emoluments $4,852. The net emoluments for the year ended June 30, 1895, reached that sum. The bill cuts that district to $4,000, and the members of the committee will see at a glance that it is a smaller cut than is ordinarily made with reference to the other districts, and much less than that made in the southern district.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I am speaking only of the northern district, not of the southern. But are you not reading from the returns of the district attorney's office?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No; the net emoluments for the fiscal year named amounted to $4,852. Now, California is under the double-fee system. That is, this marshal, in order to earn this $4,852, had to charge double the fees that are charged ordinarily by marshals, so that there is no earthly reason for changing it except to reduce the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE], to amend line 4, page 5, by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "five."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 19, on page 7, by striking out the word "three" where it occurs in said line and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four."

Also strike out the words "five" and "hundred" where they occur in said line 19; so as to read: "For the district of South Dakota, $4,000."

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to raise the salary proposed in the bill in the district of South Dakota from $3,500 to $4,000. It was my intention yesterday when the amendment was offered by my colleague [Mr. PICKLER] raising the salary of the district attorney to ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments. On account, however, of what appeared to me at that time a somewhat arbitrary disposition in the committee to unfavorably consider any amendment, it seemed idle to obtrude my judgment and I refrained from speaking. I feel there are inequalities in regard to the salaries named in the bill, and especially as it relates to my own district, and believe, as well as others, it should be corrected. Mr. Chairman, I most heartily indorse the proposed legislation, and believe if enacted into law it will result in a great saving to the Government and will promote the due and orderly administration of justice. I commend the wisdom and good judgment of the committee for presenting this bill for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chairman, I do feel that something aside from population, something aside from geographical extent, should be considered in this matter when fixing the salaries of these officers. If geographical extent alone were considered the State of South Dakota, which I have the honor in part to represent, embraces an area greater than the whole of the States of New England, New Jersey, and Delaware combined.

Being large in area, and as yet not fully developed, many localities are inaccessible, and it requires the constant attention of an able and competent officer. In the many violent, just, and bitter denunciations and criticisms indulged in before the committee in regard to the conduct of many of these officers, I have heard no criticism against either the United States marshal or the district attorney for South Dakota. These officers have faithfully discharged their duties. Their returns are not padded, but represent actual service to the Government, and their honesty should not work to their prejudice as a basis in fixing their salary. I am free to acknowledge the wisdom of the committee, but I hardly think their report should be considered as absolutely infallible, at least so much so that every amendment proposed of necessity should be voted down. It occurs to me the Representatives from the different districts have as intimate an acquaintance as to the character of the duties to be performed and as accurate a knowledge as to what is a just compensation to these officers as the members of the committee who have reported this entire schedule, at least as far as they relate to their particular districts.

I do not believe in too high compensation to officers, but I believe in that character of compensation that will give us the best service and in the end result in economy to the Government.

I would even go further in the reform, for which I believe there is the greatest need, than the measure proposed by the committee. I would have included clerks of the United States courts as well as the marshals and district attorneys. I would also have required, in cases where complaint is made before a commissioner maliciously and without probable cause, that the cost of prosecution in case of the discharge of the defendant be charged up against the complaining witness.

The duties of these officers in the district of South Dakota are very laborious. Their whole time is occupied. The area over which they have to travel in properly discharging their duties is very extensive. Diverse and varied conditions exist in our State. We have large and extensive Indian reservations, and the means of communication and travel in those particular localities are both unpleasant and sometimes have been dangerous. Much time is consumed, and in traveling from the place where the court is held in the southern division to the western it requires a journey of nearly 700 miles. As a rule the offenses for which prosecutions are brought are for the graver crimes, and not the trivial and less serious offenses. Mr. Chairman, I believe the committee ought to recognize the justice of the claim made in behalf of these officers in this district and grant the increase which we ask.

As I stated at the outset, it was my intention yesterday to indulge in a few remarks when the amendment was offered relative to the salary of the office of district attorney in this district, but I then felt delicate about obtruding my judgment, as I recognized the adverse position then taken by the committee. But observing the more careful consideration and friendly disposition displayed to-day, I feel constrained at this time to offer the amendment, and to submit it to the judgment of the committee. I wish simply to again say that among the many charges made as to excessive and corrupt charges by United States marshals none have been made against the marshal of the district of South Dakota, who is a most competent and able officer. The net emoluments of the office for the past year amounted to $5,974.50. It is proposed by this measure to strike this compensation down and reduce it nearly $2,500, which I think, considering the compensation proposed in other districts, is inequitable, unfair, and unjust. Did I not believe it was right I should not make the suggestions and urge them in good faith to the committee. This State is yet in its infancy, and has developed with remarkable rapidity. Even under the salary proposed by the amendment its growth will soon place the requirements of the position beyond what I have named as a just compensation for the responsibilities of the position. I respectfully ask the favorable consideration of the committee in behalf of the amendment.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], which has been read by the Clerk.

The amendment of Mr. GAMBLE was rejected.

Mr. POWERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 4, in line 25, on page 7, by striking out the words "two thousand" after the word "Vermont" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twenty-five hundred"; so that it will read: "For the district of Vermont, twenty-five hundred dollars."

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, every member who has raised his voice in respect to this bill has been fulsome in his praises of this committee. I will not take the time to repeat what has been so well said upon that subject. I feel it all, but in connection with that feeling I have also the belief that this committee have done what every reform body are very apt to do when they start out upon a reformation.

They swing the pendulum a little too far the other way. The principle of the bill is all right, to establish salaries in place of fees for United States officials, but in their zeal to make the radical change which the bill proposes, they go altogether too far, and put these salaries too low. Now, then, every gentleman almost on this floor feels that in his respective district the committee has made a serious mistake, that they have fixed the salary at too low a figure. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, how this matter can be remedied, and that is for every member that feels that way to vote for my amendment and then let them adopt a similar amendment in their cases, and we will all vote for them. In other words, while the Committee on the Judiciary has organized a "combine" to carry this bill through, let us, the suffering people, organize a "combine" to correct the evils which they are making. Now, then, gentlemen, all vote with us to put this amendment on, and you will every one get your salaries raised as you want them. [Laughter, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 44.

Mr. POWERS. I am radically opposed to the enactment of legislation without a quorum of the House. It is a dangerous precedent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the question of no quorum?

Mr. POWERS. I raise the point that there is no quorum. I would like to see the Chairman count. [Pending the count.] In deference to the wishes of my friends here, I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn; the noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 25, page 6, after the word "Nebraska," the words "thirty five hundred" and insert the words "four thousand" in lieu thereof; so as to read "$4,000."

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say anything upon this amendment. I know, of course, that it ought to receive the support of the gentleman from the western district of Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who has been opposing all of these amendments. The marshal in his district gets $4,000 a year by this bill, and yet the net earnings of his office are only about $4,000 a year, while the net earnings of the marshal in the district of Nebraska were more than $7,000 last year. This bill provides for a salary of $4,000 for the western district of Missouri, and for the marshal of Nebraska only $3,500. That is certainly inequitable and unjust. A comparison of the salary provided for the marshal of Nebraska with the surrounding districts shows that it is inequitable and unjust. The two districts in Iowa, on the east; the district of South Dakota, on the north, and the district of Colorado, on the west of us, earn much less. The committee has fixed the salary at $4,000 in each of these, except South Dakota, and for the district of Kansas, on the south of us, $4,000. So that I insist that this salary ought to be increased to $4,000, to make it equitable and just in comparison with districts surrounding us.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I feel called upon to say this, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska: That

I have never suggested to any member of the Committee on the Judiciary, either directly or indirectly, what the salary of this marshal or any other marshal should be, or what the salary of the district attorney of the western district of Missouri should be, or any other attorney, or anything directly or indirectly in connection with the preparation of this bill.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. STRODE of Nebraska, and it was rejected.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Will the Clerk please proceed with the reading?

Mr. CORLISS. Before that is done, I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 17, page 6, after the word "Michigan," the word "three" and insert the word "four."

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I am very proud of the fact that I represent the district in which the committee recognizes the inequality of the allowance in this bill. It is shown by the report of the Judicial Department that the marshal's fees for the five years immediately preceding the present amounted to $5,627 each year. The salary of the district attorney has been fixed at $4,000, and there is no place in this bill in which the marshal does not get an amount equal to that of the attorney, and in some cases the allowance to the marshal exceeds that to the attorney. I have the assurance, I believe, of the committee that that should be corrected. I therefore ask that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word. In the case of the Detroit district of Michigan the salary of the district attorney of Michigan was advanced a thousand dollars. That was done upon the advice of the Department of Justice, and the committee consented to it. The motion is now to make the bill symmetrical, and give the marshal an additional thousand; and that also I understand to be in accordance with the wishes of the Department of Justice. These wishes the Committee on the Judiciary have some knowledge of, but they do not entirely concur in them; but on the whole the committee thinks the Department of Justice was correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 6, on page 7, the word "three" and insert the word "four."

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment relates to the eastern district of New York. The eastern district of New York comprises the whole of Long Island and Staten Island, and within its jurisdiction are the cities of Brooklyn and Long Island City. The population of the district is dense and amounts to one million and a half. In the city of Brooklyn are located 75 per cent of all the storehouses, both free and bonded, of the port of New York. Now, sir, it has been my pleasure, if I may call it such, to listen to the answers made by the different members of the Committee on the Judiciary to the various amendments that have been proposed by gentlemen upon this floor to sections of this bill, and I can only say that they remind me very much of a Wagnerian opera. Each member of the committee has been assigned to play a particular instrument, and while it seems that each instrument is out of accord with the other, yet, like the different parts of a Wagnerian opera, taken together they make up one harmonious whole. [Laughter.]

When some gentleman has risen and asked that the pay of the district attorney in his district be increased upon the ground of the importance of the business of that office, the answer has come from a member of the Committee on the Judiciary that the district in question is not an important one, and upon that ground the amendment has been voted down. In the case of another district another member of the committee has risen and said that the fees of the office in question were large because of the pernicious activity of the marshal and the district attorney, who had built up a system whereby these fees had gone beyond legitimate limits, and that it was for the purpose of cutting down the excess and curbing this pernicious activity that the compensation in the bill had been determined upon. In one district they have claimed that there is much territory to cover but little business, and in another they have claimed much business but a compact and small territory to cover, and yet they give the same salary to each.

Again, coming to the district which I have the honor in part to represent, we went on to show that the district was an important one and that the compensation provided in the bill should be increased, and the members of the committee when approached individually agreed that it ought to be so changed, but that, it appears, was "not for publication." [Laughter.] When we reached the question upon this floor, a member of the committee, assigned to play his particular instrument in the orchestra, arose and said that the earnings of this office were not large enough to justify the increase, and accordingly the proposition to change the amount in the bill was voted down. Then came the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], who wanted the compensation in his district raised on account of the earnings of the office, and the committee said, "Yes; your district is larger than the eastern district of New York, but we must cut you down as well."

Now, to be honest in this matter, Mr. Chairman, we take it that an important city like Brooklyn, which comprises only a portion of the eastern district of New York, is entitled to better treatment in this respect than it has received thus far in the pending bill. To show you how incorrectly the bill has been drawn with respect to amounts, I call attention to the fact that the committee has fixed the pay of the marshal in the northern district of New York at $5,000, and, apparently regarding the services of the attorney as of comparatively no value, they have fixed the marshal's salary at $1,000 more than that of the district attorney. The members of the committee have recognized some of these inequalities and have admitted that they ought to be changed, but, with the peculiar idea which committees sometimes possess, that that which is done in the committee room ought not to be changed on the floor, they are not willing to admit their faults in public. [Laughter.] The general tenor of this bill meets with the approbation of every member on this floor, but as I fear that some gentleman has already copyrighted that phrase, I think I shall omit it. [Laughter.]

However, the bill is a good bill, though some faults have crept into it with respect to the schedule of salaries fixed. In the eastern district of New York we have some of the best lawyers in this country, and I want to say to the committee now that it is false economy to fix the salary of the district attorney of that district at $3,000, because he may be called upon at any time to meet gentlemen who stand among the foremost lawyers in the land—men like Joseph H. Choate, James C. Carter, and others. It is, I say, false economy to fix the salary at this low rate, because when important issues arise the Government will be compelled to employ extra attorneys at enormous expense, when, by fixing a proper compensation for the district attorney in the first instance, the Government could secure the services of a man who would be competent to look out for its interests. Let me quote a few figures from the report of the Attorney-General.

By unanimous consent, the time of Mr. FISCHER was extended for five minutes.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, a gentleman behind me [Mr. BROWN] who is solicitous about the affairs in the committee [laughter] wants to know whether I am directing my remarks to the compensation of the marshal of the eastern district of New York. I have said something with regard to the district attorney's compensation, to show how unfair it is in that district and to give me an opportunity to present the facts with regard to the marshal. The marshal of the northern district of New York and the marshal of the southern district of New York are each given $5,000 a year. That is as it should be; but the marshal for the eastern district, a district with more than a million inhabitants, is put at $3,000 a year.

Now, the earnings are $8,200 in the northern district, $5,800 in the eastern district, and $5,200 in the southern district of New York. So that the marshal for the eastern district of New York, who earns $600 more per annum than the marshal for the southern district, is to receive $2,000 less salary. Now, I ask whether this is fair, just, and right? That is an important jurisdiction. Our city is upon the harbor of New York. True, it may be but a small place in the imagination of the members from the city, and the cost of living trifling, but we think this needs some attention.

Mr. BROWN. I want to correct the gentleman in regard to the fees of the district attorney of the southern district. According to the report of the Attorney-General the district attorney for the southern district receives $10,000——

Mr. FISCHER. I am talking about the marshal.

Mr. BROWN. Well, I will confine myself to the marshal. Now, for the southern district of New York the emoluments of that officer, as reported in the Attorney-General's report, are given for only six months——

Mr. FISCHER. Well, I will say to the gentleman I am not responsible for the printing of this paper. It has been used here by the committee as a basis in fixing these salaries; if the committee now disowns it, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BROWN. But the report itself shows that the return is for only six months.

Mr. FISCHER. I am speaking of the net results.

Mr. BROWN. So am I.

Mr. FISCHER. I ask the gentleman to look at the end of the column. It is possible I may not be able to read these figures correctly; but I am referring to this statement for what it is worth.

Now, I appeal to gentlemen on this question in the interest of good government. The committee has taken this statement as the basis for its figures, and I am willing to accept it. If the committee now disowns it, I am also willing to do that.

As I was saying, the eastern district of New York is an important jurisdiction, and I appeal to members of the committee in the interest of the administration of good government. I ask the Committee on the Judiciary to remember that sometimes equity may go with law; let them wipe out the impression sought to be given by the lines in Trial by Jury that "if you can not get justice you may get plenty of law." In this particular instance they should not ignore considerations of equity and rely on the law alone. My amendment asks simply that this salary be fixed at $4,000, which will still be $1,000 less than that paid to similar officers in two other districts in the State of New York.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FISCHER, it was rejected, there being—ayes 25, noes 50.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I now ask that the substitute which I offered yesterday afternoon for the section be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to be offered to this section? If not——

Mr. MILNES. I have a substitute pending for the section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a prior substitute, which the Clerk will now report.

Mr. MILNES. I believe mine was the first substitute offered.

The CHAIRMAN. This substitute of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN] was offered yesterday.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute of Mr. OGDEN, as follows:

That the United States marshal for each of the following judicial districts of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000, to wit:

The northern district of the State of Alabama, the middle district of the State of Alabama, the Territory of Arizona, the eastern district of Arkansas, the western district of Arkansas, the northern district of California, the district of Colorado, the District of Columbia, the northern district of Georgia, the northern district of Illinois, the southern district of Illinois, the district of Indiana, the northern district of Iowa, the southern district of Iowa, the district of Kansas, the district of Kentucky, the district of Massachusetts, the district of Minnesota, the eastern district of Missouri, the western district of Missouri, the district of Montana, the district of Nebraska, the district of New Mexico, the northern district of New York, the southern district of New York, the eastern district of North Carolina, the western district of North Carolina, the district of North Dakota, the northern district of Ohio, the southern district of Ohio, the district of Oklahoma, the district of Oregon, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the western district of Pennsylvania, the district of South Carolina, the district of South Dakota, the eastern district of Tennessee, the middle district of Tennessee, the western district of Tennessee, the eastern district of Texas, the western district of Texas, the eastern district of Virginia, the western district of Virginia, the district of Washington, the district of West Virginia, and the eastern district of Wisconsin.

That the United States marshal for each of the following judicial districts of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $3,000, to wit: The southern district of the State of Alabama, the southern district of California, the district of Connecticut, the district of Delaware, the northern district of Florida, the southern district of Florida, the southern district of Georgia, the district of Idaho, the eastern district of Louisiana, the western district of Louisiana, the district of Maine, the district of Maryland, the eastern district of Michigan, the western district of Michigan, the northern district of Mississippi, the southern district of Mississippi, the district of Nevada, the district of New Hampshire, the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of New York, the district of Rhode Island, the northern district of Texas, the district of Utah, the district of Vermont, the western district of Wisconsin, and the district of Wyoming.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in thorough accord with the principle of this bill—that the expenses of the United States courts should be reduced by adopting fixed salaries for the United States district attorneys and marshals. But, sir, I think the committee has gone too far in extending classes, especially in reference to United States marshals. In this bill they provide for seven classes. In ten districts the marshals receive $5,000 each; in 4 districts, $4,500; in 26 districts, $4,000; in 6 districts, $3,500; in 15 districts, $3,000; in 4 districts, $2,500; and in 7 districts, $2,000, which (including the amendment in reference to the western district of Pennsylvania) makes the aggregate $262,000.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to have been the idea of the Committee on the Judiciary in framing this bill to base the salaries of the district attorneys and United States marshals upon the fees which have been earned under the present system. Following that line they provide for seven classes of United States marshals. The amendment which I propose divides the marshals into two classes. Those of one class will receive $4,000, and those of the other $3,000. This amendment will not add one dollar to the amount appropriated, for it figures out exactly the same result as the plan of the committee. The seven classes in the bill foot up $262,000. Under my substitute providing for 46 marshals at $4,000 and 25 at $3,000 the aggregate is $262,000.

I believe this amendment cures an evil to which many gentlemen on this floor have objected. For instance, the marshals in the districts of Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, the western district of Texas, and the eastern district of Virginia would, under the classification of my amendment, receive $4,000, instead of $3,500. Those officers who are in the five-thousand-dollar class will be reduced to $4,000. Those receiving $3,000 under the bill will receive $3,000 under the substitute. Those receiving less than $3,000 will be increased to $3,000. Practically this amendment makes only two classes. It obviates the introduction in future Congresses of bills providing for a change in the pay of these marshals; it fixes for a long time to come the salaries of marshals at $4,000 or $3,000, respectively.

I commend it to the consideration of the committee. I am not making any assault on the Judiciary Committee for their action in preparing this bill. But no three-thousand-dollar places appear on the schedule of this committee for the members of it. There are 17 members, representing 13 States, 4 States having a dual representation. The committee have closed their ears to any appeal of gentlemen to change or modify in any degree the schedule that they have approved and brought in here with the exception of western Pennsylvania and Michigan.

Now, I believe this amendment of mine will prevent future legislation. When a marshal is paid $4,000 a year, as the bill provides, he is also allowed for necessary assistants, clerks, assistant marshals, and field marshals. His duties are in no wise increased; and why not, therefore, dignify the office of the other marshals, who give the same amount of time and labor, and who go into the field, bare their breasts to the work, and perform equal duties, perhaps often at the risk of their own lives if necessary? Why not dignify them?

I know that away up in New Hampshire they have probably little consideration; but New Hampshire is a prohibition State, and they are law-abiding citizens, and the same is also true of Vermont.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OGDEN. I would like to have a few minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Louisiana proceeding for five minutes?

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. OGDEN. Then I move to substitute $3,500 for the salary of the marshals——

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Unless this substitute is withdrawn——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor in opposition to the substitute.

Mr. OGDEN. I will only say that I have listened to the gentleman from Iowa, and he has occupied much of the time of the House, whereas I have not raised my voice in connection with this matter; and I hope I may proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. HENDERSON. The "gentleman from Iowa" did not make the objection. And besides, having charge of the bill, it is his duty to be heard for the information of the committee.

Mr. OGDEN. I expect the gentleman to be heard, of course.

Mr. HENDERSON. The objection was made elsewhere. I knew that you were laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. OGDEN. I bow to the objector, and yield the floor.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say a very few words in reference to the pending proposition.

The substitute proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana would seriously mar the bill, impair its value, and create such absurdity in the bill that all of us would be laughed at if we agreed to it.

I can easily see how some man mistaking himself, or living in the State of Louisiana, might wish to have the substitute adopted, especially when in one of the districts of Louisiana the marshal earned, net, $1,166, whereas this classification would give him $3,000. There are other absurdities, too, when you consider the proposition, but I have not the time to explain them all.

There are a few $5,000 salaries given in this bill. At Fort Smith, Ark., where they hang a man every morning for breakfast, pretty nearly, to which is attached a large portion of the Indian Territory, where there was at one time, as stated by the judge before the Committee on the Judiciary last year, 90 murder cases pending, where it requires a very superior man for marshal and to discharge the duties in such a place as that, as he takes his life in his own hands every hour in the day and every day in the year, a larger compensation was fixed.

Mr. FLYNN. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No; I decline to be interrupted in the short time I have.

Mr. FLYNN. I only wish to say——

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I decline to be interrupted, and when I say I decline I mean it.

Again, in the eastern district of Texas, to which is attached also a portion of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, there exists a condition similar to that at Fort Smith, Ark.

Now, the gentleman proposes to give to some State where the attorneyship is a sinecure, where from 1885 to 1890 one of the best lawyers in New England could only earn $400—he proposes to give $3,000 a year, and reduce the marshal at Fort Smith, Ark., and the eastern district of Texas to $4,000.

But I repeat I have not time to explain and do not think it necessary to explain the numerous inconsistencies in the proposed amendment. In one district, where the earnings last year were only $1,400, this classification would give the marshal $3,000. What an absurdity! I admit that it has the merit of simplicity. But so has capital punishment. We could make it even more simple by making all of the districts alike. But we would not accomplish justice thereby, nor make up a good bill or one that would be satisfactory to the people of this country. It is a little singular that the propositions for simple classifications come from places where those classifications would make the salaries double what they ought to be.

Mr. Chairman, how can we make an entire substitute for this classification in a five-minute debate in this committee? Is the work of the Judiciary Committee of this House, extending over two or three months, to go for nothing, to be worked over here in a five-minute debate? I apprehend not. If it were to change some obvious mistake, if it were to change some simple matter in which the Judiciary Committee may have been mistaken, it would be quite a different thing; but this is a substitute for the whole marshals' classification, a work of weeks of inquiry at the table in the committee room, where everything can be considered, where documents can be examined. This is a reclassification which would destroy the symmetry of the bill, rob it of many of its merits, and make it, in respect to this section, a laughingstock.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. OGDEN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. OGDEN. Is not an amendment to the substitute in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will remember the position of this whole bill. It is in itself an amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his proposition again?

Mr. OGDEN. I move to amend by striking out the last word of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no word to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] in regard to the wisdom of this committee. I would not set up my own unaided judgment against all the wisdom of this great Committee on the Judiciary; but they are the servants of this House. On yesterday I heard strange words fall from the lips, I believe, of the very gentleman who last addressed the committee, charging conspiracy upon various members because they thought they had not been fairly treated in the projet of this bill. Why, to have heard the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] one might have thought he was a second Cicero come to earth again and launching maledictions against some Catiline and his fellow-conspirators in this House instead of the Roman forum. And all this, forsooth, because some gentlemen in the far West, in Montana, or Nebraska, or South Dakota, or perhaps in the jungles of eastern Virginia [laughter] got up and asked a fair consideration at the hands of this Judiciary Committee. In charging them with conspiracy the gentleman made a serious charge.

A man guilty of conspiracy is false to American principles. He is false to the people whom he represents. I admit that all of these gentlemen went down, and no one answered. My genial friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], a member of the Judiciary Committee, did not rise and repel this foul charge. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BURTON], who is usually fair, did not rise in his seat. I looked around and did not see the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT], who is usually quick to take down words that offend the dignity of this House. None of these gentlemen came to the rescue in defense of the charge of conspiracy made against these gentlemen.

Now, I should like to investigate this charge of conspiracy, with the consent of the House. I feel that it is a foul charge against other members who have asked that this bill be fairly considered. I do not find any member against whom this charge could be laid. Then the question entered my mind, against whom are they conspiring? Not against their constituents, not against the American people, not against the members of this House; then it must be against the Judiciary Committee itself.

The Judiciary Committee consists of 17 members, and we find that four States have a dual representation on that committee. We find in the project of this bill which they have brought in here that they have provided fairly well for their various States and districts. We find two members from Iowa on that committee, and they provide for both districts of Iowa with salaries of $4,000. Going to New York, we find $5,000 and $4,000. Going to Kansas, they have provided $5,000. In Massachusetts they give $5,000. Going to Ohio, they give two places at $4,000. Going to Illinois, they give two places, one of $4,000 and one of $4,500. In Missouri they give two places at $4,000. In Tennessee they give three places at $4,000. In Kentucky there is one place at $5,000. Texas seems to have got lost in the shuffle, but they have poor Lo down there, and they do give $5,000 in one place and $3,500 in another. Going to Arkansas, they give $5,000 and $4,000, but there they also have poor Lo. Those two places are properly brought into this bill.

The inquiry has naturally come to other members as to why their just claims had not also been fairly considered, and hence the many amendments offered to this bill.

In proposing this amendment, in the face of this charge of conspiracy against other members, and in presenting it to the attention of this committee, I do so because I believe that it will cover the case completely and will prevent future demands for legislation from coming to this House. It places marshals at $3,000 and $4,000 a year. The four-thousand-dollar marshals give no more of their time than the three-thousand-dollar marshals. They have their clerks, their assistant marshals, their field marshals, all paid by the Government. And in presenting this amendment in the face of the report of the committee, I have done it with the utmost deference to them and to this Committee of the Whole House, and I trust it will be adopted.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time nor is my friend the first gentleman who has suggested a sort of "blind pool" in the Judiciary Committee to take for their States and their constituencies what they have denied to other States and other constituencies. I think that I owe it to myself to repel this charge so far as it might relate to me, and I leave the other members of the committee to answer for themselves. More than once I have heard it whispered, as I was protesting against the increase of salaries, that Texas was well provided for. The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that I opposed every salary in that bill that is over $4,000, for I believe that $4,000 is a fair compensation for the service which any marshal or district attorney will render. The accusation that I am seeking, or that I have sought, for my people that which I do not freely and cheerfully accord to other people is entirely without foundation. The fact is, that in the judicial district which embraces two-thirds of my Congressional district, this bill fixes the salary of the marshal and district attorney at $3,000, which is lower than any similar district with similar business in the country; and yet I am drawn up in the presence of this House and charged with entering into a conspiracy with my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee to take for myself what I am not willing to give to others.

Mr. OGDEN. Will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. OGDEN. I made no charge against the gentleman, and if he will allow me to correct a statement, I will say that I listened to his speech yesterday, in which he said that he had voted consistently to reduce the salaries of all officials, and inadvertently that escaped my mind. I call attention to that fact, and after listening to his speech fully, I give him credit for being one member of this Committee on the Judiciary who has voted for and advocated the reduction of salaries instead of raising salaries.

Mr. BAILEY. That is entirely satisfactory, and restores the cordiality between my friend and myself. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. OGDEN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The substitute was rejected.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I offer a substitute for the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another substitute pending.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I desire to be recognized, then, when the other substitute shall have been disposed of.

Mr. MILNES. I ask that my substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 4 after the word "follows," in the third line, and insert the following: "each three thousand dollars, except the districts of Connecticut, Delaware, southern Georgia, Idaho, eastern Louisiana, western Louisiana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Vermont, to whom shall be paid an annual salary of $2,000 each."

Mr. MILNES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up but a moment or two of the time of this House. I offer this amendment in good faith, and I believe that it ought to pass. The effect of the amendment or the substitute, if it should prevail, would be to fix the salaries of the larger districts or those fixed by the committee at over $3,000 at $3,000 per annum, and those districts fixed by the committee at a salary of less than $3,000 at $2,000. That is an entirely different substitute or amendment to that which has been offered to this bill and would save to the Government the sum of $60,000. The distinguished gentleman who has charge of this bill said upon this floor yesterday that he would consent to any reduction that might be made in the salaries, but would not consent to any increase. I am heartily in sympathy with the general principles of the bill and have supported the committee upon all their propositions, but I believe that the bill might yet be bettered. I believe that $3,000 is ample compensation for United States marshals. I believe they should be made as nearly uniform as possible. And where it is fixed at $2,000 the districts are very small and the business done in those districts not important. I therefore hope that the substitute will prevail. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the substitute. On the 3d day of March, in the city of New York, in Carnegie Hall, at a religious meeting, the President of the United States gave utterance, or is reported in the public press to have given utterance, to the language which I send to the Clerk's desk to be printed in the RECORD, certain portions of which I desire now to bring to the attention of the committee.

The President says:

But it is not only as your fellow-citizen, but as the Chief Executive Officer of your Government, that I desire to speak, for I am entirely certain that I serve well our entire people, whose servant I am, when I here testify to the benefit our country has received through home missionary effort and when I join you in an attempt to extend and strengthen that effort. * * *

It must also be confessed that removal from old homes and associations to a new and more primitive home has a tendency among honest and respectable settlers to smother scruples and to breed toleration of evils and indifference to christianizing and elevating agencies.

These conditions, if unchecked and uncorrected, fix upon the new community by their growth and expansion a character and disposition which, while dangerous to peace and order in the early stages of settlement, develop into badly regulated municipalities, corrupt and unsafe Territories, and undesirable States.

Mr. Chairman, whatever may be my individual opinion of the President of the United States matters not, and it would not be proper for me to state it here. For the high office of President of the United States I have a supreme regard. The legitimate functions of that office are limited to those enumerated in our Constitution and laws. Under the Constitution and laws, I deny the right of the Chief Executive to willfully and wantonly, in public address or otherwise, insult any of the citizens or any State of the Republic over whom he has been called to preside. I deny the constitutional authority of the President to give utterance, in public address or otherwise, to sentiments favorable or adverse to proposed legislation pending in either House of Congress. When the President made the foregoing remarks he knew there were pending in Congress bills for the admission of certain Territories into the Union of States. He had been advised that a majority of the citizens of those Territories were antagonistic to his peculiar financial and economic views, and, under the cloak of a supposed religious address, before a religious organization, and with gross impropriety, and for the purpose of preventing the achievement of the rights of statehood to which they aspire and are entitled, he gave utterance, as Chief Executive, to this unfounded slander against those citizens and States of the Republic whose interests he is sworn to protect and uphold.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont rises to a question of order.

Mr. POWERS. If there is nobody on this floor that is related to the President by ties of affinity or consanguinity, social or political——

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want the point of order stated. I do not propose that my time shall be consumed in this way.

Mr. POWERS. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not permissible here to reflect upon a coordinate branch of the Government. The President is a coordinate branch of this Government, and I think the language of the gentleman from Montana is not only——

Mr. HARTMAN. I am not reflecting upon the President, Mr. Chairman, I am reflecting upon the sentiments which the President utters, and I have a right to do it.

Mr. POWERS. I want a ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not feel that he is called upon to rule on that point; that is to say, that the remarks of the gentleman from Montana come within the rule.

Mr. POWERS. I do not propose, however, to be classed as an Administration man. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the remarks of the gentleman from Montana are not relevant to the matter pending before this committee, and I call for the reading of the rule on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. What rule does the gentleman desire to have read?

Mr. MILES. I do not remember the number of the rule, but it is the one which requires that remarks on this floor shall be relevant to the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that in the five-minute debate the largest liberty is accorded to gentlemen to discuss questions, and they are not held rigidly to the rule which he invokes.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. This is a liberty which I do not believe has ever been countenanced in the American Congress before. [Derisive laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is unnecessary. The question is, Shall the opinion of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Committee?

The question being taken, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana will proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN (continuing). The percentage of crime in those States and Territories will not exceed that found in the State of New York, where the President seems to think all virtue resides. The per capita of wealth of the citizens of our State exceeds that of any State in the Union, save one. Our educational facilities are equal to those of any section of the Union, and if some of the patriotism of the people of the West had been possessed by the President and his friends, the citizens of this Republic would not have been called upon to witness the national humiliation of hauling down the American flag at Honolulu, of begging the bankers of Wall street and Great Britain to save us from financial ruin, and, under the behests of the powers behind the throne, of denying to the oppressed citizens of Cuba the recognition which the dictates of humanity and common right demand. [Applause.] It is true we do not get our patriotism from Wall street, where the President gets his. [Laughter.] It is true none of our citizens have possessed that particular style of patriotism which would enable them to save, by thrift and strict economy, five times as much as their entire income amounts to, and it is also true that the patriotism of these "corrupt and unsafe Territories and undesirable States" have never yet been able to rise to that lofty plane of supreme wisdom and virtue——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute the word "two" for the last word in the bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order.

Mr. HARTMAN (resuming). Which enables those who claim to occupy it——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MILES. In the interest of decency, I object.

Mr. SULZER. I object, Mr. Chairman. There is another amendment pending.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

Several members objected.

Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the Chair, and was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. HARTMAN. I do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out the last two words, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SULZER. I object, as there is another amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The other amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman can not withdraw it without unanimous consent.

Mr. SULZER. Can a gentleman withdraw an amendment without unanimous consent? I object.

The CHAIRMAN. To what does the gentleman object?

Mr. SULZER. I object to the gentleman from Montana proceeding. He is out of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He is not going to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has said that debate is in order. If any gentleman objects to the withdrawal of the amendment, that objection would be pertinent.

Mr. SULZER. I object to that.

Mr. BAILEY. Then let us have a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment to strike out the last word of the proposed substitute, it was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last two words. I think, sir, that my friend from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] overlooks one very important fact. When we get on our feet in a deep religious frame of mind [laughter], and it is a new field; when we are plowing in virgin soil, as it were [laughter]——

Mr. SULZER. I raise the point of order that the gentleman is out of order, because the other day he said on this floor that he had no religion. [Laughter.] Having no religion himself, I submit that he is incompetent to discuss the question of the religion of any other man.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I never said that I had no religion; but I would rather be without a very large modicum of religion than without the slightest intimation of common sense. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been so interfered with——

Mr. SULZER. I am sorry for a gentleman who has neither.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is always unfortunate when a gentleman is possessed of such a knowledge of his own failures that he constantly advertises them to the public. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been diverted from the serious argument that I was about to present [laughter]; and I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. HARTMAN. And it is also true that the patriotism of these "corrupt and unsafe Territories and undesirable States" has never yet been able to rise to that lofty plane of supreme wisdom and virtue——

Mr. ERDMAN. I object to the gentleman from Ohio yielding his time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe it has never been done under the five-minute debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is often done. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Ohio to yield.

Mr. HARTMAN. And it is also true that the patriotism of these "corrupt and unsafe Territories and undesirable States" has never yet been able to rise to that lofty plane of supreme wisdom and virtue which enables those who claim to occupy it to justify the sale of thirty-year Government bonds of a year ago for 104 when that very day ten-year bonds were selling to 116.

Mr. SULZER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How many minutes has the gentleman left?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the citizens of the States and Territories thus slandered and maligned by the Chief Executive, I here and now repel the insult and respectfully suggest that the greatest need of this country for the work of the missionary, the schoolmaster, and the statesman will be found at the White House. [Laughter and applause.]

I append the extract from the President's speech as published in the Post of March 4:

But it is not only as your fellow-citizen, but as the Chief Executive Officer of your Government, that I desire to speak, for I am entirely certain that I serve well our entire people, whose servant I am, when I here testify to the benefit our country has received through home missionary effort, and when I join you in an attempt to extend and strengthen that effort.

IMPORTANCE OF WESTERN MISSIONS.

No one charged with the duties and responsibilities which necessarily weigh upon your Chief Executive can fail to appreciate the importance of religious teaching and Christian endeavor in the newly settled portions of our vast domain. It is there where hot and stubborn warfare between the forces of good and evil is constantly invited. In these days the vanguard of occupation in a new settlement is never without its vicious and criminal element. Gambling houses and dramshops are frequently among the first establishments in a new community. It must also be confessed that removal from old homes and associations to a new and more primitive home has a tendency among honest and respectable settlers to smother scruples and to breed toleration of evils and indifference to Christianizing and elevating agencies.

These conditions, if unchecked and uncorrected, fix upon the new community by their growth and expansion a character and disposition which, while dangerous to peace and order in the early stages of settlement, develop into badly regulated municipalities, corrupt and unsafe Territories, and undesirable States. These are serious consequences in a country where the people, good or bad, are its rulers, because the conditions to which I have referred would certainly menace, within a circle constantly enlarging, the safety and welfare of the entire body politic, if we could not hope that churches and religious teaching would from the first be on the ground to oppose the evil influences that are apt to pervade the beginning of organized communities.

These churches and this religious teaching were never more needed than now on our distant frontiers, where the process of forming new States is going on so rapidly, and where newcomers who are to be the citizens of new States are so rapidly gathering together.

For these instrumentalities at the outposts of our population, so vitally important in the view of the Christian men, as well as patriotic citizens, we must depend to a very great extent in home missionary exertion. How can we excuse ourselves if we permit this exertion to languish for the lack of proper support?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MILNES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] rise?

Mr. MILNES. I rise simply to say that it is quite evident that during the religious discussion which has been going on my substitute has been lost in the shuffle [laughter], and therefore I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the informal amendment been withdrawn? The Chair understands that it has.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I offer as a substitute the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for section 4:

"That the United States marshal for each judicial district of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $3,000."

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, after the diversion of this morning, now just concluded, and which may not be without its useful phases, I desire to recall the attention of this committee to the section we are considering. My amendment proposes to place each of the marshals upon a salary of $3,000. Let me call the attention of members of the committee, and especially the lawyers of the committee, to the duties of these marshals. While reasonably familiar with their practice and duties, I have never yet seen a marshal perform any other function than that of bringing a prisoner into court and having him plead, visiting in his office with callers, and doing political work, most useful, I admit, to his party, but of no sort of use to the country which pays him. I never yet have seen or known a marshal of the United States to perform any of the real work out on the field. This, as we all know, is performed by deputies. If any one of them has ever risked his life in the capture of some person charged with a criminal offense, I do not know the name of such an officer; I do not know the color of his hair, or of his eyes. And I do not believe any gentleman on this floor can inform me.

Now, the marshals when they do the duty contemplated by the law simply perform duties similar to those that an ordinary sheriff performs throughout the country. Marshals are simply the executive officers of the court. They are supposed, either by themselves or by their deputies, to serve the processes or the writs of the court. They are supposed to devote their entire time to the business of the United States while engaged in its service. They can not engage in any other business. So the objection made to a corresponding reduction of the salaries of the United States attorneys do not apply in this case. I urged on yesterday, when making an amendment as to the district attorneys, that their emoluments derived from private business were not reduced and need not necessarily be reduced while they held the office as district attorney, but that in a majority of cases they received salaries drawn from private business which in some cases were even greater than before they assumed official duties. Their salary is clear gain.

Now, the marshals perform duties, as I have said, which are in no sense of the word of a higher order of ability than those performed by the ordinary sheriffs of our various counties. They are not required to possess an intelligence greater than that possessed by the ordinary school-teacher. They are not required to possess intelligence or more skill or require a higher quality of personal courage than possessed by an engineer on any of the railroads of this country who pulls the throttle valve of a locomotive. Three thousand dollars is a splendid salary for any person performing the duties of a marshal. The man who performs the duty of a marshal could not earn in the United States or anywhere in any other business requiring the same degree of ability and application that his duties as a marshal would require more than the sum of $3,000. Indeed, it is doubtful if he could earn so much.

Now, further, we find here 72 United States marshals, which, by the amendment, at $3,000 a year, would amount to $216,000 compensation annually. This bill as it stands carries for this purpose $262,000. In other words, my amendment proposes a reduction of exactly $46,000 from the salaries of the marshals, and still pays them amply for every particle of work that they do and for the time expended by them in the service of the Government.

Now, if gentlemen are bent on economy, if they propose to heed the petition in bankruptcy which has been transmitted to us by the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury, this is a good time and a splendid place to accomplish this saving to which I have referred. We can save $46,000 right here; and we can do it without the slightest injury to any branch of the public service, and without impairing in any degree the efficiency of the men, who will perform the duties required of them by the law. No marshal will resign if this amendment becomes a law; and if he will, for every one so resigning a thousand bankrupt Democrats, but who are now capable men, knowing very much more than they did in November, 1892, will apply for the place.

Mr. Chairman, no gentleman on this floor can say that I am prompted by a desire to increase the salary of the marshal in my own district; for, as a matter of fact, that is fixed at $3,500 by this bill, and the amendment would reduce it. I want simply the fair thing to be done; that every man receiving the amount due to him by the Government shall render an equivalent service for it. There is no reason for saying that any marshal is of a higher order of ability than any other performing a similar duty, or that he performs more than his legitimate duty when he gives his entire time to the service of the Government for his pay. For he puts in no more of his time than is due, and all of his time may be claimed by and belongs to the Government if that time is demanded. If he can not by devoting his entire time do the necessary work, the bill makes ample provisions for deputies. We all know that in actual practice, with but few exceptions, the deputies are expected to and actually do the real work.

So, from whatever standpoint you may view it, work done, the responsibility attaching to the office, the ability and the courage required, I submit that the amendment should meet the approval of the committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute proposed by Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That when in the opinion of the Attorney-General the public interest requires it, he may, on the recommendation of the marshal, which recommendation shall state the facts as distinguished from conclusions, showing necessity for the same, allow the marshals to employ necessary office deputies and clerical assistance, upon salaries to be fixed by the Attorney-General, from time to time, and paid as hereinafter provided. When any of such office deputies is engaged in the service or attempted service of any writ, process, or subpœna, or when necessarily absent from the place of his regular employment, on official business, he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only, and his necessary and actual subsistence, not to exceed $2 per day; and he shall make and render accounts thereof as hereinafter provided.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I propose the amendment I send to the desk to this section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 5 the following:

"Provided, however, That such office deputies shall not be required to serve writs or do the work of field deputies, as provided in section 6 of this act, except in cases of emergency when there are no field deputies available for that purpose."

Mr. McRAE. I stated why this amendment should be adopted in the general debate upon this bill. It appears to me that there ought not to be any opposition to it. If we allow the office deputy or the clerk to be ordered out by the Attorney-General we will find the office work will be neglected, and, as I think, there will also be a constant irritation and row between the Department of Justice and the marshals as to whether certain writs should not have been served by men in the office or the field deputies.

Men qualified to keep the books of account and attend to the work of the marshal's office proper are not, as a rule, the most competent men for the work in the field, and the men best fitted to do work in the field are not, as a rule, able to do the work required in the office. I think the amendment ought to be adopted so that the marshals would know just what to depend upon.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to ask whether there is not even a further objection to the clause as it stands, and a reason why it should be amended that the expense of the services of these men in the field and near the scene of action would be less by reason of the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly; it would save mileage to send the writs to the field deputies. I intend to offer another amendment to reduce the compensation of deputies to $2 per day, and if we can adopt both, then the cost will be reduced to the lowest possible sum.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas could not be accepted by the committee. These deputies were denominated office deputies to distinguish them from the field deputies in dealing with them in the law and in the Department of Justice. But the office deputies provided in the bill are in fact nothing but the general deputies of the marshals, and I know of no reason why an office deputy should be kept by a warm stove and the field deputies be required to do the work. All the work of the marshal's office is to be done by the marshal and his deputies, and none of them are too good to do any part of the work when it is necessary to be done. There is, therefore, no reason to my mind for any change whatever in the bill. It was carefully considered by the Department of Justice, and is just as the Department of Justice wanted it in order to make the operations of the office efficient and convenient. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

The amendment of Mr. McRAE was rejected.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment. I should like to state to the committee that it also involves section 6. If it is in order, I will let the Clerk read the next section. My amendment goes to the two sections combined. It is to put field deputies on salaries instead of letting them have fees.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Let the amendment be offered in regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman from Virginia has a substitute for the two sections I want to state that I have an amendment to the text of the next section which will take precedence over a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is a substitute for sections 5 and 6.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to ask the Chairman, if I permit this section to be passed and the next section to be read, will it still be in order to offer this as a substitute for the two sections?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would. It applies to both sections, and would not be applicable to either one alone. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman withhold it until the sixth section is read.

Mr. SWANSON. I was under the impression that unanimous consent was given that we should simply offer amendments to each section as we proceeded. I desired to know whether, if the fifth section was passed, it would then be open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's substitute for the two sections would be in order after the sixth section is read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 6. That at any time when, in the opinion of the marshal of any district, the public interest will thereby be promoted, he may appoint one or more deputy marshals for such district, who shall be known as field deputies, and who shall each, as his compensation, receive three-fourths of the gross fees, as provided by law, earned by him, not to exceed $2,500 per annum, or at that rate for any part of a year; and he shall hold his office during the pleasure of the marshal. The marshal, immediately after making any appointment or appointments under this section, shall report the same to the Attorney-General, stating the facts as distinguished from conclusions constituting the reason for such appointment, and the Attorney-General may at any time cancel any such appointment, as the public interest may require.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have an amendment to that section. It is as follows:

On page 9, line 4, after the word "year," insert "And in addition shall be allowed his actual necessary expenses, not exceeding $2 a day, while endeavoring to arrest under process a person charged with or convicted of crime: Provided, That a field deputy may elect to receive actual expenses on any trip in lieu of mileage."

This is the amendment to which I referred in my general remarks, the necessity of which is stated by the Attorney-General in his letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will allow the Clerk to report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 4, after the word "year," insert the following words: "And in addition shall be allowed his actual necessary expenses, not exceeding $2 a day, while endeavoring to arrest under process a person charged with or convicted of crime: Provided, That a field deputy may elect to receive actual expenses on any trip in lieu of mileage."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propose a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF].

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. A substitute is not in order until the text of the bill is perfected.

Mr. McRAE. But this is a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a substitute for the proposition just offered by the gentleman from Iowa, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. McRAE. It is a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words: "Three-fourths of the gross fees, as provided by law, earned by him, not to exceed $2,500 per annum, or at that rate for any part of a year"; and insert the following: "two dollars per day when engaged in the service or attempted service of any writ, process, or subpœna, and when necessarily absent from the place of his official residence on official business he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only and his necessary and actual subsistence, not to exceed $2 per day, and he shall make and render accounts thereof as hereinafter provided."

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I understood the Clerk to read section 6 of the printed bill.

The CLERK. Section 6 of the printed bill, but section 12 as it will be if this whole amendment is adopted.

Mr. McRAE. I followed the numbers of the bill as they will be when the bill is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I withdraw it upon the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. HENDERSON. The present occupant of the chair may not have been in the Hall when we commenced the consideration of this matter; but by unanimous consent it was agreed that when we referred to sections in the printed bill we should refer to the sections as numbered in this printed bill for purposes of amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I thought it was exactly the reverse. My amendment is proposed as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF], and it makes no difference what may be the number of the section. This is the section I want changed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before the gentleman proceeds, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman in charge of the bill be now reported, and also the substitute, so that the committee can have both propositions before it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, both the amendment and the substitute will now be reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment of the committee and the substitute of Mr. McRAE were reported.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, in short, the difference between the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] and that which I propose is that, under his, deputies would receive three-fourths of the fees earned—not to exceed $2,500 per annum—and expenses, while under mine they would only receive $2 a day while in the discharge of their duties in serving or attempting to serve writs. The annual compensation under my amendment could not exceed $730 and expenses. I think both propositions allow the same subsistence and expenses. I think it is better that we should say just what these field deputies, located here and there over the district, will get, and that we should pay them all the same for similar work and not give so much power to the Attorney-General. You can get good men to do the business for $2 a day and expenses. That is the simplest and most equitable method of payment, requires less bookkeeping, and would, I think, be more satisfactory to everybody; certainly it ought to be to the Department, for then all it will have to do is to fix the number necessary for each district. The plan proposed by the committee will produce inequalities and in the end prove expensive and unfair.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I see this trouble and this difference between the committee amendment and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas: Under his amendment a deputy receiving a writ can take just as many days as he chooses to serve that writ, knowing the Government is paying him $2 every day and his subsistence at the rate of $2 a day. I would not like to leave it to the discretion of the deputies to fix their own fees in that way. Under the committee amendment it will be in the interest of the deputy to serve the writ as quickly as possible. Under your amendment it is to his interest to postpone the service of that writ as long as he decently can, and thereby promote his own compensation.

Mr. McRAE. But the gentleman from Illinois must remember that under my amendment no deputy can get more than about $700 per annum, while under the committee bill he may get $2,500. You certainly will not object to my amendment for the reason that it is not in the interest of economy, whatever else you may say about it. You must also remember that I do not propose to interfere with the right of the Department to fix the number of field deputies.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Practically the difference between the working of your amendment and the working of the committee amendment would be this: It would multiply these deputies who would be getting this $700, so that as to the aggregate amount it would cost the Government a great deal more to pay these salaries than the amount that would be paid under the committee amendment. Each deputy will take all the time he needs. Now, the fact is the Government must have its writs served, and if deputies procrastinate the service, deputies must be multiplied in order to get a decent service of the writs of the Government. Gentlemen should remember that the effect of that very amendment will be to cripple the strong arm of the law, for if processes are not served the courts sit idle and crime will go unpunished. In our desire for economy we must not go so far as to practically close the doors of our courts and shut them up against the enforcement of the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to amend the substitute by striking out the word "two" and inserting "one."

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas. I do not think the reasons given by the gentleman from Illinois against the substitute are adequate. The other day, in his very able speech on this bill with reference to district attorneys, he said that the whole cause of the trouble had been at the head; that the cause of that trouble lay in the fact that the United States district attorneys did not attend to their business, and that if we would put them in a position where they would attend to their business we would have no more trouble. I can repeat the words of the gentleman and say that if you have a United States marshal who will attend to his business he will employ deputies and see that they attend to their business; that they will serve these writs with all due diligence. There is no necessity for undue delay in the service of these writs. Let them have the right man at the head, so as to see that they attend to their business; and if they do not attend to it, it lies in his power to discharge and remove them from their positions. The Attorney-General himself has the power to remove them, so that if any one of these deputies is found to be unnecessarily delaying the service of these writs, so as to make additional compensation, it remains in the power of the head to remove the man and put one in his place who will attend to those duties.

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN was recognized, but yielded temporarily to Mr. UPDEGRAFF.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. This provision for field deputies was inserted in the bill with very great reluctance by the Committee on the Judiciary. The reluctance arose from the fact that it was a limited departure from the principle of this bill. But when we came to look the actual business of the country in the face, we found ourselves obliged, in order to perfect our measure, to permit this limited departure. When we had agreed to the field deputies, we applied to the Department of Justice to say whether or not the bill would weaken the arm of the Government in the enforcement of the law, and the head of that Department said he could not conscientiously say that the bill, even with the field deputies in, without the amendment I have offered here, would not weaken the Government in the enforcement of the law and in the punishment of crime. Under such circumstances, the committee consented to the insertion of the field-deputy clause in the bill, and of the clause for their compensation for actual expenses in addition to the three-quarters of their fees.

Mr. TATE. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. TATE. I understand that your committee framed this section on the idea that experience had demonstrated that it would not do to put these deputies upon a salary. The question I wish to ask is this: Why is it that the deputy collectors of internal revenue, who receive a salary of from $1,000 to $1,200, are among the most vigorous and efficient officers in the revenue service? How does the gentleman explain that fact if experience demonstrates that it will not do to put deputy marshals upon a salary?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE] does not correspond with the experience of the Department of Justice. The amendment which I recently offered is in the words of that Department. Writing on this subject, the Attorney-General says:

> The committee commenced the consideration of this yesterday, but, at my suggestion, it was dropped, because I did not at the moment realize the necessity of this provision. By section 5, page 8, lines 15 to 21, this same provision is made for office deputies in addition to their salaries. There is no reason in natural equity why the same provision should not be made for field deputies in addition to their limited emoluments under section 6. But the chief reason is the fear, which is justified by experience, that field deputies will not be zealous in endeavoring to arrest persons charged with crime, if they have to risk not only their compensation, but also their expenses while engaged in the attempt. One of the questions which will undoubtedly be put when the bill is upon its passage is, whether there is any just reason to fear a relaxation in diligence on the part of the officers concerned by reason of the change made by this bill. Unless this assurance of actual expenses while honestly engaged in attempting to arrest criminals is made, I can not conscientiously say that the field deputies can be expected to display proper zeal.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think it well to try any experiment which even promises well, looking to a diminution of the vexatious prosecutions which are instituted and carried on in our Federal courts. I earnestly advocate reform in that regard. I am not, however, one of those sanguine persons who can be brought to believe that the remedy proposed here will be entirely efficient to accomplish the object desired. We already have a large number of marshals and district attorneys, the receipts of whose offices amount to more than their salaries. I have in my hand a letter from the district attorney in the district in which I reside, Mr. Tully Brown. I think it is a clear statement, and is well worthy of consideration, especially as this officer does not desire to be classed among those who are responsible for the vexatious litigation that is instituted and complained of. I will ask that the letter be read at the Clerk's desk. Let us struggle by every possible means to so frame this bill as to reduce the hardships incident to Federal court prosecutions, and to diminish the number of petty and frivolous prosecutions.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Why not let your district attorney's letter be published without reading?

Mr. McMILLIN. Some of the suggestions in the letter concerning mileage and other matters are, I think, well worthy of attention, and I prefer to have it read. Before the Clerk begins the reading, I wish to say that upon the casual glance that I have been able to give this bill, not being a member of the committee which framed it, it strikes me that the marshals and the district attorneys may, if they are disposed to do so, largely increase the compensation proposed to be allowed by the bill. As will be seen by the letter which I send to the desk, there are fees now allowed by law for which the officers do not charge. I know the futility of offering any amendment concerning these salaries, because the half hundred already offered by others have been voted down. The majority are determined to pass the bill substantially as reported, evidently.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Nashville, Tenn., March 3, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to some facts connected with the administration of justice in this district bearing upon the pending bill to change from the fee system to salaries in the payment of district attorneys and marshals of the United States courts. The salary of the district attorney is now $200 per annum, and he is permitted to earn by fees a maximum annual compensation of $6,000. In the two years of my incumbency, 1894 and 1895, the emoluments here reached in 1894 about $10,000, and in 1895 about $12,000, and this without effort on my part to avail myself of the opportunities legally at my disposal to increase the business; but, on the other hand, everything has been done by me to keep down or restrain the constantly growing business of the United States courts. In carrying out this desire, I have resorted to very stringent rules, such as to approve but one warrant against the same party; requiring commissioners to look into the character of suits sought to be commenced and see if the proof to be offered is reliable and shows probable cause of guilt; limiting the number of witnesses in each case, and after trial before commissioners I carefully examine the proof filed in each case bound over, and where the same appears frivolous or doubtful of conviction I dismiss, with the sanction of the court, without docketing, thus saving much costs to the Government and depriving myself of the emoluments I could earn; these dismissals in the two years amounting to quite 100 cases. In addition to this, the law permits me to attend all commissioner's trials, for which I am allowed a per diem of $5 and mileage of 10 cents per mile traveled. The mileage is not embraced in the limit of $6,000, and in this district could easily be swelled to make it $7,500, thus making my compensation annually $13,500, but in my two years' service only two commissioner's trials have been attended by me or my assistant, and no charge was made for either case.

I recite these facts to refute, in so far as this district is concerned, the general charge against district attorneys and marshals made in the discussions reported in the RECORD on the bill under consideration. There are 38 counties comprising this district; it is one of the largest distilled spirits producing districts in the Union, and so long as there are internal-revenue laws to be enforced the business of the district will of necessity be large, and I submit whether it is just that the compensation of the district attorney and the marshal shall be limited to the amount fixed for districts in which the business will not amount to one-fourth of what it is and will continue to be in this.

I desire to further call your attention to the fact that we have had since my incumbency several very important cases, consuming weeks in their trial, of parties charged with wrecking national banks, for which no extra compensation has been claimed, and we have had also a large number of cases for violations of the pension and postal laws, for which no extra compensation was asked. All the emoluments charged for and allowed have been for cases tried in the court.

At the last term of our court we had about 550 cases on our trial docket, and there will be quite as many on the April docket. This entails a large amount of work upon me for which I get no compensation, as 400 cases per annum would more than enable me to earn my maximum of $6,000; hence all above that is "love's labor lost," except that I find violations which are numerous and flagrant, and I felt it my duty to prosecute them, regardless of my own personal comfort and convenience.

In these efforts to save the Government the needless costs, I am sure that every Federal officer in this district has given his cordial aid. Another fact to the credit of the district that should not be overlooked is this: The cases are set so many per day for trial, and the witnesses are summoned for the day the case is set, appearing in the morning before the grand jury and in the afternoon before the court and trial jury, and in that way rarely get more than one day's attendance.

In other districts of the country, so I am imformed, all witnesses are summoned for the first day of the term and remain until the case is disposed of, and in some instances that amounts to as much as three weeks.

I take pains to give you these facts, because I see in the discussion in the RECORD on the proposition to include clerks of courts that it was said that "district attorneys and marshals are the fountain head of this corruption," and I don't care to stand branded under the general charge without a protest on my part.

I have no objection to the plan to make fixed salaries for these offices, but they should be based upon the services rendered, or to be rendered, and if made to take effect June 30, 1897, instead of 1896, it would give time to adjust the machinery to the new order of things and lose nothing to the Government. In the Stone bill, the instance is cited to show the bad workings of the present system, in so far as it applies to this office applies to the mileage charged. There is no necessity for the district attorney appearing before a commissioner, and if so, let him be paid actual mileage paid by him, as contemplated in the Stone bill, and it will remedy the whole trouble. Then the fees will be based upon the cases tried in court, with no "extras," and the district attorney, who has the work to do, will get the pay for it, and the one whose office is a sinecure will be paid as all sinecures should be.

Yours, most truly, etc.,

TULLY BROWN.

From my personal knowledge I know the facts stated in the above letter to be true.

JNO. W. CHILDRESS.

Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I was originally one of those who voted in the committee to put all these deputy marshals upon salaries. The Attorney-General, however, came before the committee and argued, first, that as a matter of fact, judged by experience, that system would not do. He informed us that this policy had been adopted in the Indian Territory and had resulted in the deputy marshals sitting down and absolutely failing to serve the process of the United States court. It was also stated that under the old system of spies and informers the deputy marshal, after he had spied out and worked up a case, would send word to the prosecuting attorney asking for an "O. K.," whereupon the district attorney, knowing that the prosecution would put money in his pocket, would "O. K." it, and the prosecution would be instituted. But we have taken the teeth out of that dragon. Now, there is no inducement on the part of the district attorney to "O. K." the prosecution, and none on the marshal to father it.

Mr. TATE. I will ask the gentleman whether, in the first place, the informer or reporter does not get $10 for finding the distillery?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. He can not get that under this bill.

Mr. TATE. He can; the bill does not interfere with it at all.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The gentleman is talking about the internal-revenue collection.

Mr. TATE. I understand that.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, bring in your bill to amend that system. It has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. TATE. But my question is this: After the property is found and seized, and the reporter has his $10, why should he not under this bill sit down, make out the usual affidavit, and forward it by mail to the district attorney; and how is that officer going to tell whether a warrant ought to be issued or not? When the information is furnished in that way, how is he going to determine the character of the reporter?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The gentleman from Tennessee, at the proper time, will introduce a committee amendment which will annihilate all the matter which is now troubling the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE]. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCRAE, it was rejected; there being—ayes 41, noes 70.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to offer a formal amendment, so that where the text speaks of the calendar year it may be changed to the fiscal year.

The amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was read, as follows:

On page 9, in line 2, strike out the word "annum" and insert "fiscal year"; and in line 4 of same page insert before the word "year" the word "fiscal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now wish to offer an amendment which I hope the committee will agree to.

The amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was read, as follows:

After the word "require," in line 11, page 9, insert:

"No per diem for attendance on court shall be allowed to field deputies except when it is physically impossible for such attendance to be by the marshal or his office deputies; but this provision shall not apply to attendance before commissioners."

Mr. DOCKERY. I will only say in explanation of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, that this is suggested by a very competent authority in connection with the administration of justice, and it seems to me, so far as I have knowledge of the amendment, to be a proper one and in the line of reform contemplated by this bill. I hope, therefore, the committee will accept it, unless there be some objection to it which has not come to my knowledge.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not see the necessity for the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. The point is simply this: The amendment requires the office deputies to attend upon the court unless it be physically impossible for them to do so. Now, if the office deputy does not attend upon the court the field deputy will do so, and his compensation will be increased to the extent of such attendance.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But the field deputies only receive compensation for writs actually served by them, and get three-fourths of the amount of the fees.

Mr. DOCKERY. This amendment was prepared by a reliable gentleman and comes to me in this shape, and I think, therefore, there must be some mistake in the gentleman's suggestion that it is unnecessary. Are not the marshals allowed compensation for attendance on court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. The marshal is, but not the deputies.

Mr. DOCKERY. Not the deputy?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No. The marshal gets his pay, and the district attorney, but not the deputy.

Mr. DOCKERY. But does not the existing law allow the marshal and the deputy that attend upon court compensation for that service?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Not at all. The law allows the marshal $5 a day for attendance on the court. The marshal and the district attorney are allowed this compensation; but no assistant of the marshal or of the district attorney is allowed attendance fee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I understand the gentleman to claim that no deputy marshal is allowed anything for attendance on court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; none at all. There is only one per diem allowed, and that is allowed to the marshal. The accounting officers of the Attorney-General's Department regulated this section of this bill, I will say to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, if the gentleman is correct, and I do not question his statement, of course there is no necessity for the amendment. I am surprised that an officer of the Department should suggest an amendment of this character, and feel somewhat inclined to think that there must be an error somewhere in reference to the matter.

Mr. CONNOLLY. This bill went through the hands of the entire Department, and was pronounced to be satisfactory in that regard.

Mr. DOCKERY. A competent officer made the statement on which the amendment was prepared, but in view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 3, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, the whole theory of this bill is that fees shall be reduced where fees have been received heretofore, in order to make the service more perfect and to save dishonest transactions and unnecessary annoyance of the people by frivolous prosecutions. The marshals are put on salary on the theory that it will cut off present dishonest prosecutions which have been instituted in certain sections, but as I understand the bill they will be able to institute these prosecutions through the aid of the deputy marshals. It is said in answer to this that it can not happen, because the marshal and prosecuting officer are both on a salary. But a man who, working on fees, would prostitute his office and use it for the purpose of instituting prosecutions which are frivolous and not founded in justice for the purpose of obtaining fees would be willing to secure that same result through other channels if the opportunity were afforded.

The committee states to us that the average pay of the deputy marshals of the United States is about $100 per month. The amendment proposes that they may receive that amount provided they earn it. The original bill proposes that they may receive pay to the limit of $2,500, which is too much for the services of the men who, as a rule, hold these places, as compared with the salary and wages of men in other vocations. I am speaking, of course, of the great majority of them when I say this, nor do I refer to them as dishonest in the performance of public duty, taken as a class, because they are not. But they do not come from the ranks of life that can compel $2,500 a year as compensation, and should not be allowed to receive it from the Government of the United States.

I trust the amendment will therefore be adopted, in view of these facts.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah, to make the maximum compensation of field deputies $1,200 a year, I have but this to say: That this $1,200, for a large number of the deputies, would undoubtedly be a sufficient compensation, and more than they could possibly make under the bill. But there are many other cases where deputy marshals of the right character could not be obtained if a salary of that limit is fixed. The purpose of the bill was to place it in such shape that the Attorney-General would hold a check all the time over the field deputies. None of them can be appointed, their salaries can not be fixed—the maximum amount—except with the approval of the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General, who is in touch with the actual, legitimate business in every district in the United States, knows better than any one member of this House can know, better than all the members of this House put together can possibly know, at one session of Congress, what the business is of a legitimate character and what should be the legitimate earnings of a deputy in the proper service of the processes of the Government.

Now, if you put it down to the limit of $1,200, you exclude the possibility of obtaining the services of the right character of men in very many districts, but probably in the larger number of districts in the United States $1,200 will be sufficient. Who shall judge, who shall fix this maximum, and say how much they shall earn? You will find it practically the case that, when a maximum is fixed, as the Attorney-General stated to the committee, he is clamored at from every district in the United States to give to those officials the maximum. He therefore desired that the maximum should be put as low as it was safe to put it, and he was invited to suggest, from the experience of his office, containing gentlemen who have been there settling these accounts, some of them for twenty-five years, what would be safe, considering the interests of the Government and the Treasury and of the service of our process. He said $2,500 would be the lowest figure he would feel safe in putting it at; not that there would be very many deputies that would require the $2,500, but that there would necessarily be some, and he felt, as I feel, that the Department of Justice, which controls and directs all the litigation of this great Government, is the safest place to lodge the discretion of saying to each of these deputies how much he shall have, provided the earnings amount to that much.

Mr. LACEY. This does not seem to give that discretion.

Mr. SHAFORTH. No; it does not.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Sections 5 and 6 must be taken together to determine the purpose in this field-deputy matter and the manner of paying them. Now, the committee strongly desired to fix a salary for these deputies, but we were met first with this difficulty: How many deputies are necessary in any given district?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute "$1,000" in the place of "$1,200." I do this for the purpose of obtaining the floor. What the gentleman has so well said simply accentuates what I so poorly said. He says that there are a few districts in the United States where deputies ought to have more than $1,200 a year. If that be true, then provide for those districts in a proviso. You can obtain good men, able men, to serve the United States at $100 a month. The Departments in this city prove it. Most of the men who are serving here receive not more than $1,200 a year, and the Government is well served, and it would be well served by men receiving that maximum compensation in this calling.

The gentleman says that this is within the control of the Attorney-General. There is not a provision in the fifth or sixth section of this proposed act which gives him that control. It leaves the whole question open, and we shall have the same evil that we have had in years past. Deputies will be seeking to lift up their compensation to $2,500 a year. Gentlemen have started in here to reform this service. Why not strike it at the root? We have said that attorneys shall receive $3,000, $3,500, $4,000, and $4,500 a year. Compared with their salaries, a salary of $1,200 a year for a deputy marshal is good.

I withdraw the substitute.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman, relative to the matter of compensation of deputy marshals, that there is a very wide and emphatic difference between the services rendered——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. Did the gentleman from Utah withdraw his substitute?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, he did.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I withdrew the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Then debate on this proposition is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Utah.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Utah) there were—ayes 30, noes 56.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last sentence of this section. The Attorney-General, writing to the member of the committee [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] having this matter in charge, said:

Detroit is an important point, and, for the reasons we spoke about, in Philadelphia, Boston, and other places, the district attorney's salary should be increased.

Just why the Attorney-General recommended the increase of the salary of the district attorney at Philadelphia I confess to not having understood clearly yesterday, when the matter of the proposed increase of compensation of the attorney for the western district was under consideration. I supposed it was probably upon the basis suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], namely, the supposed higher standing of the Philadelphia bar. We who live in or near Philadelphia are always ready to concede that there is just as high an order of legal talent at Pittsburg as at Philadelphia, and therefore do not recognize that proposed difference as being any reason for giving to the district attorney at Philadelphia a higher rate of compensation than to the district attorney at Pittsburg. But upon looking at the business of the office, as shown by the reports of the Attorney-General for the last five years, it is very apparent why the Attorney-General recommended that the salary of the district attorney at Philadelphia be increased and why a difference in the compensation of these two officials should exist.

As this committee has done the right thing in raising the salary of the district attorney at Detroit, I take it that it will be entirely willing to follow in the same line when the facts are presented to the committee. Now, the committee was convinced yesterday that $4,000 was the right amount of compensation at Pittsburg, and in my judgment it was. Therefore I take the contrast between Philadelphia and Pittsburg as the basis for an appeal to the members of the committee to permit a return to the third section in order to increase the compensation of the district attorney at Philadelphia from $4,000 to $5,000.

I have a tabulated statement which, without objection, I shall print in the RECORD, showing the business done in the respective districts of Pennsylvania, and I present this brief summary. The number of civil suits terminated during the last five years, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, and 1895, in which the United States was a party, averaged per year, in the eastern district, 45; in the western district, 4. Criminal prosecutions terminated in the eastern district, 128; in the western district, 79. Judgments obtained, the average amounts per year, in the eastern district, $40,559.59; in the western district, $1,800. Fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed, average per year, in the eastern district, $5,108.80; western district, $2,272.40. Civil suits terminated in which the United States was not a party, average number per year in the eastern district was 335; in the western district, 69. So that we have a showing of somewhere in the neighborhood of from three to seven times greater volume of business in the eastern district of Pennsylvania than in the western district; and on the basis of work done, as shown by the report of the Attorney-General, there is ample foundation for his recommendation, and for this committee, following the precedent which it set in the case of the eastern district of Michigan, to make the raise of $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WANGER. I offer, as a substitute, to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not retain the floor in that way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be a pro forma amendment.

Mr. WANGER. I propose to ask unanimous consent. I shall also withdraw the objection which I made some time ago if I can have just a couple of minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman's amendment to be a pro forma amendment, to strike out the last sentence. Is it withdrawn?

Mr. WANGER. That is what it was really, a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it withdrawn?

Mr. WANGER. If the House will give me a moment to submit a request.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am entirely willing to yield if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. WANGER. The amendment I introduced was merely a formal amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am entirely willing to yield if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. WANGER. I therefore ask unanimous consent to return to page 3 to offer an amendment, to strike out the word "four," in line 23, and insert the word "five."

And in further support of this amendment, I beg to call attention to the very important litigation arising under the customs laws and tried at Philadelphia. The hat-trimmings cases conducted by District Attorney Read were of national renown, and the present district attorney left a position to become such in which the Government had been paying him, if my recollection is correct, $6,500 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to page 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I object.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I am not animated by any spirit of unfairness or desire for retaliation, and am entirely willing to withdraw the objection I made some time since to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. I submit the following table:

The CHAIRMAN. What the Chair wants to understand is this: Was your amendment simply a formal amendment?

Mr. WANGER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I now renew the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] for unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the sole purpose of making that trifling amendment by adding the word "eastern" in the case of South Carolina, and I send the amendment up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the committee return to page 3 for the sole purpose of offering the amendment he suggests, which was objected to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 25, after the word "the," insert the word "eastern"; so as to read: "for the eastern district of South Carolina, $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "deputy marshal," in the twenty-fourth line, page 8, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "temporary deputy marshals for a period not to exceed one month, and, upon the certificate of the district judge of such district that the same is necessary, may appoint one or more regular deputy marshals."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to place a limit upon the power of the marshal to appoint deputy marshals. It gives him the power to appoint temporary marshals in case of necessity, but in the case of the appointment of regular deputy marshals it requires that the judge of the district court of that district shall certify that they are necessary. I submit to the committee that, although there are safeguards in this bill, we can not be too careful upon this point. The marshal has now a stated salary. There is no incentive upon his part to limit the number of deputies. He is in a position to have as many deputy marshals as he desires. The number does not cut at all into his salary.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; he can not have any except those that the Attorney-General approves.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The marshal has in the first instance the right to make the appointments. Since he is upon a salary and since his salary can not be increased in any way by the emoluments of the deputies, there is no inducement upon his part to limit the number of deputies. Now, we all know that the marshal's office is a political office. We know that the marshal obtains his appointment by influential people procuring it for him. We know that he is under obligations to them, and therefore that when they desire the appointment of a deputy it is quite likely they will get it, especially if it does not diminish the marshal's own salary. It is true that there is a limit in the bill, that the Attorney-General may cancel the appointments of deputy marshals, but the difficulty with that is that the Attorney-General is often 2,000 miles distant from the district and does not and can not know whether the deputy marshals are needed or not, as the judge of the district court knows.

The judge of the district court does know the necessities of the office; he knows how many deputy marshals should be appointed to perform the duties, and consequently the safest plan is to vest in him the power to determine and certify how many deputy marshals are needed. With this power in the judge and with the power in the Attorney-General to cancel appointments, it seems to me that no abuses can arise. It must be borne in mind that when the marshal is provided with his salary he may desire to satisfy his friends by making numerous appointments, and in that way building up political power for himself. This unlimited power of appointment in the marshal, it seems to me, is liable to produce abuses which could not occur if the judge of the district court were permitted to indicate or to certify the number of the deputy field marshals that should be employed.

This amendment provides that in the case of temporary deputies the marshals shall have power to make the appointments without the concurrence of the judge, because sometimes an emergency arises when the judge is not conveniently at hand, and in such cases the power ought to be vested in the marshal to make the appointments.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I now move that all debate on this section be limited to one-half minute.

A MEMBER. There is a substitute pending.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I will ask consent that debate on this section be limited to one-half minute.

Several members objected.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make that motion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman in charge of the bill will pardon me, I desire to make a suggestion with reference to perfecting the bill. I have been thinking and conferring with other gentlemen with reference to this maximum amount of $2,500. I confess that it has troubled me somewhat, for this reason: My experience with maximum amounts as compensation for any class of officials is that all or nearly all of those officials finally reach the maximum by various devices. Now, the suggestion I desire to make is this: Would it not be wiser to make the maximum limit $1,500 and then to provide that in special cases the Attorney-General may allow an additional sum, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,500, in cases where the public interest seems to require it? In that way you will have the maximum of $1,500 for the great body of these officials, and then there may be a few cases, probably there will be, where a larger amount, perhaps even as high as $2,500, should be allowed, and in those cases you can give the Attorney-General power to allow up to the maximum of $2,500, the general limit being fixed at $1,500. In that way you will reach the few exceptions and avoid the difficulty of having a general pushing up of these salaries to $2,500. I know that the Committee on the Judiciary have carefully investigated this whole matter, but it occurred to me that this view might not have been thoroughly considered by them, and therefore I have ventured to make the suggestion.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I am willing to adopt that suggestion, Mr. Chairman. Now I ask that my motion to limit debate on this section to half a minute be put.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been recognized to offer my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] to limit debate on this section to one-half minute.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I have been recognized by the Chair to offer my amendment, and I am entitled to five minutes in which to present it. Now, can I be taken off the floor by the gentleman from Iowa by a motion to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the motion of the gentleman from Iowa interferes at all with the rights of the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia will be recognized for the purpose of offering his substitute.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that in Committee of the Whole debate can be closed only by unanimous consent; that the committee would have to rise and get the House to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SWANSON. My point, Mr. Chairman, is that the effect of my being taken off the floor by the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is that I shall be given only half a minute upon my amendment, although I was recognized to offer that amendment, with the right to debate it for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] does not affect the status of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] a particle. He will be recognized to offer his substitute, and will then be entitled to five minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. That is all right.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. We have no objection to the gentleman from Virginia occupying five minutes. In seeking to limit the debate, I am only acting in behalf of gentlemen who are impatient and desire to proceed with business.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF to limit debate, it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] will now be recognized to offer his amendment, and will then be entitled to five minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that my amendment, which has been sent to the desk, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out sections 5 and 6 and inserting:

"SEC. 5. That the Attorney-General may appoint, on recommendation of each United States marshal, one clerk and one chief deputy, whose salaries shall not exceed $1,500 per annum each. No clerk or chief deputy shall be appointed in any district unless the United States district judge shall certify and the Attorney-General be satisfied that such appointment is necessary for the efficient performance of the public business. The Attorney-General shall also appoint, on recommendation of the marshal, such number of deputy marshals for each district as he shall deem necessary for the efficient performance of the public business, whose salaries shall not exceed $1,200 per annum and their reasonable and necessary expenses of travel and subsistence actually incurred while on duty, such expense to be approved by the United States district judge of each district. But the Attorney-General shall in no case appoint for a district more deputy marshals than the United States district judge of each district shall certify to him as necessary for an efficient performance of the public business, and he may remove said deputies for cause or whenever he thinks there are more than the public business requires. In all cases, civil or criminal, where services are performed by marshals or their deputies and the costs are taxed against other parties than the United States, the amount of fees for such service shall be collected and paid to the Treasurer of the United States."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment abolishes absolutely and entirely the whole fee system in regard to marshals and deputy marshals. It is universally admitted that if this can be done in a safe way, without increasing expenses and without impairing the efficiency of the service, it will do a great deal toward perfecting this bill. If the deputy marshals are to be continued on fees, we are going to have the same difficulties that exist to-day. Every deputy marshal, if his maximum salary is fixed at $2,500, depending upon the amount of fees that he earns, will go to work and try and make that $2,500. My amendment provides that no deputy marshal shall receive a salary in excess of $1,200. These officers are to be appointed by the Attorney-General on the recommendation of the marshal. In order to prevent too many deputy marshals from being appointed, the amendment provides that the Attorney-General shall not appoint deputy marshals for any district in excess of the number certified by the district judge to be necessary for the economical administration of the law in that district.

Thus the marshal, being himself upon a salary, and having no inducement to swell his own fees needlessly, will not recommend the appointment of more deputies than may be required. Again, the district judge, a nonpartisan officer, will look simply to the proper execution of the power of the court. Then the Attorney-

General, supervising the recommendation of the marshal approved by the district judge, will have the power to limit any excessive number of appointments. He can not appoint any greater number than those recommended to him, though he may appoint a smaller number. And the salary may be limited, if it be thought proper, to $100 or $200, but it can not in any event exceed $1,200.

I believe that by this system we shall save money in the fees of the deputy marshals, the fees of witnesses, and the fees of jurors. I believe that there will not be appointed any more deputy marshals than there are deputy collectors. In reply to the objection that under the salary system the deputies will not render efficient service, I refer to the experience in connection with deputy collectors in the internal-revenue service. A few days ago we made an appropriation for 992 of these officers. Every district in the United States has a deputy collector on a salary, and these officers do their work efficiently and properly. The same number of deputy marshals would suffice for efficient performance of duty in connection with the United States courts.

The only reason as stated by gentlemen of the committee that induced them to change their first view in favor of the policy of my amendment was the experience in the Indian Territory. But, sir, there is an important difference between the administration of the law in the Indian Territory and its administration in the other districts of the United States. In the Indian Territory the United States courts administer the law with reference to all local matters such as in the States are under the administration of the State courts. There might be difficulty, therefore, in the Indian Territory in securing under this system efficient service with reference to all the local details in the administration of justice. But no such difficulties can exist in any of the States of this Union.

If the Committee of the Whole will adopt this amendment, it will make this bill perfect up to the present point. Reject the amendment, and you will pay as much for many jurors and witnesses next year as you have paid this year. The expense for witnesses and jurors in the United States courts during the last year amounted to $2,600,000. One-half of the entire expenditures in connection with the courts was for the payment of witnesses and jurors.

Mr. Chairman, if you can not trust this matter to the marshal, whose action is to be approved by the district judge, and the action of both of them supervised by the Attorney-General, then there can be no efficient means of providing any check upon the appointment of any officials. It affords a safer system than the requirements thrown around the deputy collectors; it is safer than is thrown around the appointment of any of the officials to-day in connection with the Government of the United States. I believe it will give us good, honorable, efficient men; that it will be better for the people, the officers, and for the Government, and decidedly in the interest of the public service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to do right, and to present legislation which is perfect, let us complete the bill at this time and make it perfect. When you come in here by piecemeal in the future and undertake to perfect the legislation that we have begun to-day you can not do it. Mark me, if this bill becomes a law it will be years and years and years before further reforms can be added. And so, I repeat, if you want perfect legislation complete it now.

No objection can be urged against putting deputy marshals on the salaried list except the fear that too many will be appointed. That, however, I have guarded against in the amendment. Then, again, you can not pay in excess of $1,200 and expenses for any salary; and the Attorney-General can designate in those districts where little business is done what the salary shall be, whether it be $400, $500, or $800. In every respect, therefore, the amendment is guarded so as to protect the interest of the Government, the interest of the people, and to secure the efficiency of the service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia for section 6.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWANSON) there were—ayes 28, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as an independent section, to be inserted between the last section read and the one following.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not understood whether the last section has been adopted by the committee or not.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment in reference to section 6, the Chair will submit it to the committee.

Mr. McRAE. This is not an amendment to section 6 or a substitute for the section. I propose to insert it as an independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. Following section 6?

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I suggested an amendment to this section a few moments ago to the Committee on the Judiciary which would come in before the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, I wish to state that amendment now, with the understanding that I shall not undertake to offer it unless the committee in charge of the bill regards it as a wise provision. I will read it for the benefit of the committee.

First, in line 3, page 9, amend by striking out "two thousand five hundred" and inserting "one thousand five hundred," so as to make that the maximum of the compensation allowed under the law to the deputy marshal.

Again, at the end of the paragraph, or after the word "year," in the fourth line, insert this proviso:

Provided, That in special cases, where in his judgment justice requires, the Attorney-General may make an additional allowance, not, however, in any case to make the aggregate annual compensation of any field deputy in excess of $2,500, nor more than three-fourths of the gross fees earned by said field deputy.

This is to carry out the idea I suggested a few minutes ago, that as to the great body of the field deputies the maximum allowance ought to be $1,500, arising from the fact that ordinarily, where we fix the maximum of a salary of an official, no matter how it is guarded, by some process or other they always manage to reach the maximum. But the proviso declares that in special cases the Attorney-General may make an additional allowance not in any case to make the total compensation in excess of $2,500, or three-fourths of the gross fees earned by such deputy.

I am not going to offer the amendment unless the committee regard it as wise. They have of course studied the bill, and understand its provisions in the light of the circumstances surrounding them. They understand better than we do, who have not studied the matter, what is wise and proper in this regard. But it seems to me, on the superficial view I have been able to give to the question, that an amendment in this direction is altogether a wise one.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to the gentleman that we have cut the salary already from $3,000 to $2,500. It used to be $3,000.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to ask a question, or make a suggestion, rather, to the gentleman from Maine in addition to what he has stated, that the commissioner who issues the warrant places it in the hands of a deputy for service, and the very purpose of the bill might be defeated by a zealous and active deputy combining with the commissioner. I think the suggestion of the gentleman is a wise one, and that the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me. Of course I have no authority to speak for the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this debate is proceeding only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be understood for the present that the amendment is offered. I will withdraw it if it does not meet the approval of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I was going to say that I presume the committee will disagree with me, but I fully agree with the gentleman from Maine. I would much prefer, however, for his amendment to leave out the exceptional cases. I know and other gentlemen here know the character of the men who are usually employed as deputy marshals; and while many of them are good men, few of them could earn in private pursuits anything like a compensation equal to $1,500. And, moreover, I believe that if we leave the deputy marshals to earn as high as $2,500 a year, the expectation of good results to be derived from the bill will probably be largely disappointed.

I should myself be glad to see the House adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, even without provision for the special cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section is exhausted.

Mr. McMILLIN. This, I think, is conceded by all to be a very important amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that debate be allowed upon it, in order that it may be explained. I think it would meet with the approval of both sides of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Maine offered his amendment?

Mr. TRACEY. For purposes of discussion, I understand he has.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine give the Chair his attention?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will offer the amendment simply for the purpose of discussion, merely remarking that I shall withdraw it unless the committee in charge concur in the view that it is wise.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] asks unanimous consent that debate may be allowed upon this amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to ask what is the amendment? Let us have the amendment read. I want to see whether there is to be any amendment or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move, with the conditions that I have suggested, to amend the bill in the third line of page 9, by striking out "two thousand five hundred" and inserting "one thousand five hundred," and to add a proviso after the word "year," in the fourth line, which proviso I have sent to the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 9, amend by striking out "two thousand five hundred" and inserting "one thousand five hundred," and after the word "year," in the fourth line, insert:

"Provided, That in special cases where, in his judgment, justice requires, the Attorney-General may make an additional allowance, not, however, in any case to make the aggregate annual compensation of any field deputy in excess of $2,500 nor more than three-fourths of the gross fees earned by such field deputy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] asks unanimous consent to rescind the order with reference to debate, as far as it applies to this amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. How much debate is desired?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Upon this amendment only.

Mr. CANNON. For how long?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will say fifteen or twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate may be allowed upon this amendment for fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I have so much respect for the judgment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that I dislike very much indeed to disagree with the amendment offered by him; but experience has taught me that the amendment is in the wrong direction, and the bill as it is, having reduced the maximum which a deputy marshal may earn from $3,000 under existing law to $2,500 under this bill, is more than a sufficient reduction. No harm could ever come, under the operations of this bill, if the maximum had been allowed to remain at what it is under existing law. It is impossible for any gentleman to point out where harm can come in the practical workings of this bill should it become a law with the maximum fixed in it for the earnings of the deputy marshals in the field. On the other hand, the matter of economy, so to speak, may be carried entirely too far.

Now, it certainly is desirable—and I am sure that the gentleman from Maine will agree with me in this proposition—it certainly is desirable that the work shall be done as effectively in the future as in the past. What it is sought to accomplish by this bill is not to reduce the effectiveness of the service, but it is sought to take out of the courts a large class of cases which have produced more or less scandal for years. That is accomplished, and you do not restore that feature, so much animadverted upon, by permitting these field deputy marshals to receive three-fourths of their gross fees earned in the service up to a maximum of $2,500. You do not restore that feature that exists under the present law, because it does not begin with the deputy marshal in the first place; and I want to say for these men that the deputy marshals of the United States are not the thieves that some gentlemen think them to be. I know a large number of them personally, and they are generally a fair class of men, so far as I have known them. The evil is not in the man or the men. The evil has been in the system, which began above the deputy marshals and not with them. There is an evil, and we have taken that evil out of the law when we enact this bill.

Now, a further suggestion. When you come to employ deputy marshals under this bill, should it become a law, you want to employ an equally good class of men, certainly, to those employed at the present time, but unless you are able to offer the possibility of earning a fair compensation for the character of service performed you will not get that good class of men. This maximum fixed in the bill only offers the possibility of earning a fair compensation for the hardest service performed by any class of men in the United States outside of the Army in time of war. There is no other service performed by any other class of men in time of peace in the United States equal in severity and exposure and in arduous labor to the services performed by deputy marshals in the field. Therefore I say that it will be a most vital mistake if, when we have this bill almost perfected, a feature like this is ingrafted in it.

Gentlemen talk about this provision of the bill as though it left entirely open the door we are attempting to close; as though the deputy marshal in the field, having the same inducement as now, will continue to bring into court the character of cases it is sought to exclude. They evidently forget that the deputy marshal can not begin a prosecution. He can not begin it with the aid of the commissioner. He may file a complaint, but before a warrant can issue the approval of the district attorney must be had. When you have taken away from the district attorney the necessity to make cases in order to earn a fair compensation for his services, you have struck a very severe blow at the possible earnings of a deputy marshal. In addition to that, under an amendment to be offered by the committee, it will require the cooperation of an internal-revenue officer to begin a prosecution for a violation of the internal-revenue laws. That removes from his possible earnings another class of cases. Then you make his tenure of office dependent solely upon the pleasure of the marshal, who has no interest whatever in the size of the court docket. In spite of all these things, however, you regard him as so much the enemy of a decent dispensation of Federal justice, so arch an adept at breaking through legal restrictions, so conspicuous a success at the manufacture of fees without the raw materials, so skillful a maker of bricks without straw, that you propose to make it practically impossible to earn more than fifteen hundred dollars per annum for a service that has no counterpart for severity of exposure or arduousness of labor. When you do this, in my judgment you will seriously impair the service and seriously interfere with the enforcement of the laws.

You are not, as many gentlemen seem to suppose, offering these deputies $1,500 per annum, you are merely offering them a shadowy chance to earn that sum, surrounded by the restrictions to which I have called attention. The character of the men occupying that position now, with a maximum of $3,000, is often complained of; how, then, can you expect to improve their character by cutting the maximum in two and adding restrictions not now imposed. It should also be remembered that a large majority of the deputy marshals earn less than $1,500 per annum now. A few months of the practical workings of this provision would demonstrate the truth and justice of what I have said to the entire satisfaction of my distinguished friend from Maine, and all others who now disagree with me. If I had the same opinion of deputy marshals that I have heard expressed upon this floor, I would move to abolish them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to differ with my colleague [Mr. TRACEY], who has had a very large experience in the administration of the marshal's office. Ordinarily in respect to such questions I would follow his judgment without hesitation; but I cordially concur with the gentleman from Maine in the amendment he has offered, except it does not go far enough. The amendment should, in my judgment, fix the salary at $1,500 per annum and, in the discretion of the Attorney-General, allow in extraordinary cases additional compensation to the extent of $500. In other words, I think that under all circumstances the maximum compensation of a deputy marshal should not exceed $2,000. Now, then, the issue is simply this, Mr. Chairman: What is the proper compensation for deputy marshals? In my judgment $2,000 will be ample compensation for a field deputy in any district of the United States. This as a maximum. Under ordinary circumstances $1,500, as proposed by the gentleman from Maine, will be adequate compensation. I trust this amendment will prevail, because, as has been well stated and as the experience of the members of this House will vindicate, wherever there is a maximum fixed by the law in some way or somehow that maximum is always reached. I am opposed to the proposition now in the bill, because I do not desire to pay $2,500 to field marshals. That is the maximum fixed by the bill, and I believe it will be reached in every case if it is allowed to stand. I believe that $1,500 is an ample salary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Missouri that competent men can not be employed as deputy marshals at $125 per month, it seems to me, is erroneous. I hold in my hand the letter of the Attorney-General of the United States, showing numerous statistics concerning the fees of marshals in this country. There is a column which shows the total amounts earned by the deputies during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895. There is another column that shows the total number of deputies employed. Dividing one by the other gives the amount of compensation that the average deputy received for that year, and by figuring that I find it is $557.13.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. What is the highest and lowest amount received by anyone?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine covers that. In extraordinary cases it gives the Attorney-General the right to fix——

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. What is the highest amount received by any one particular deputy?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no table showing that. I have tried to ascertain the highest amount, and I can not find that there are any receiving over $100 a month. There may be exceptional cases. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine remedies that condition. If there is any extraordinary duties to be rendered, the Attorney-General can fix the compensation of that deputy. It seems to me, however, that the amendment ought to be for $125 a month instead of $1,500 a year, which would overcome the objection of the gentleman to my left, which was to the effect that these men would accept the positions and serve for six months, get the $1,500, and then resign; but if the deputy is paid $125 a month he would serve the whole year and devote all his time to the duties of his office. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the section which I offer as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the section offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That in all writs of venire facias and of subpœna for witnesses summoned on behalf of the United States it shall be the duty of the clerk issuing the same, so far as practicable, to ascertain and insert therein the post-office address of each person named therein; and when the marshal shall receive any such writ, if the time is sufficient for service by mail, as provided in this section, he shall address to each person named in such venire or subpœna, whose post-office address is given or can be ascertained promptly by him, a notice requiring such person to be and appear at the time and place and for the purpose mentioned in the writ. The marshal shall sign such notice officially, mail and register it at the post-office, addressed to the person therein mentioned, with a request indorsed on the envelope in the usual form for the return of the letter to him if not delivered within ten days. The postmaster to whom any such letter shall be delivered, inclosed in a Department of Justice penalty envelope, shall transmit the same without charge for postage or registry fee. The receipt of such registered letter by the person to whom the notice was addressed shall be deemed valid service upon him of the subpœna or venire, and the return registry receipt card, signed by such person, or proof of the delivery of such registered letter on his order, in writing, to any other person for him, shall be taken as prima facie evidence of service, and the marshal shall make return accordingly. Whenever any such notice shall be returned through the post-office undelivered, the marshal shall serve it as other writs are served; and whenever practicable all such returned notices and all process and writs, the costs on which would be chargeable to the United States, other than writs of venire facias and subpœna for witnesses, shall be sent by mail, directed to the deputy marshal residing nearest the locality where such writs, process, or returned notices are to be served or executed, or to a special deputy appointed by him to serve the same in such locality, and such deputies shall make return of such writs, process, or notices to the marshal by mail; and in no case in which the United States would be chargeable with costs for the service of any writ, process, or notice of whatever character shall mileage be charged or allowed for travel from the place of issue to the place of execution or service thereof, if the same was sent or could have been sent by mail to a deputy marshal or other suitable person in the neighborhood of the place of service."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman in charge of the bill, I ask leave to move this amendment as a proviso to the section which we have just passed instead of as an independent section.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It refers to nothing but venires.

Mr. McRAE. And witnesses.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having passed away from the section, the Chair thinks it would require unanimous consent to make this in order as a proviso to that section.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I would like to see that amendment in print, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McRAE. It has been in print four or five days.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Then I ask that it be passed over until it can be examined.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section or to this bill.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to be heard on that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. I would like first to hear what the gentleman from Illinois has to say in support of his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I can state it in a moment. This is a bill to abolish the fee system of compensating United States attorneys and marshals and to substitute the salary system. Section 6 provides what the salaries of these deputy marshals shall be, but this proposed amendment is part of a code which provides how subpœnas and writs and venires shall be served. It seems to me that it is not at all germane to this section or to the bill. If we go on in this way, the remainder of the session will be taken up in settling questions of legal practice. [Laughter.] The amendment is not germane. It does not come within the terms of the order.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, the section to which I have proposed this as an amendment provides for what it calls field deputy marshals. The duties of these deputies will be—if they have any—to serve these processes, unless some other method is provided for in this bill. The bill appoints deputies to serve venires, while my amendment provides another and a very economical and satisfactory way—by using the mails. I know that this can be done, and I am satisfied that it is in order on this bill. As to these writs, it is only a difference in the method of service.

If the gentlemen in charge of the bill really mean to economize, they ought not to object to it. It deals directly with the subject that we have under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The section that we have just been considering is one relating to the compensation of these officials. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas provides a method of serving judicial writs, an entirely different subject, it seems to the present occupant of the Chair, from the one contemplated by the section under consideration. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. Would such be the judgment of the Chair if the amendment were offered as an independent section? I at first offered it in that way, but agreed to offer it as a proviso at the suggestion of the gentleman in charge of the bill, so as to save him any confusion in the numbering of the sections, and I understood him to say that he would accept it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Offering it as an independent section would not change its character.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the Chair is advised of the general purpose of this bill, he is inclined to think that the amendment would not be germane. The Chair, however, is not familiar with every section of the bill and possibly the amendment might be germane to some sections.

Mr. McRAE. I offer the amendment as an independent section. That is the way I proposed at first to offer it, but I agreed, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill, to present it as a proviso to section 6. Now I propose to offer it as an independent section.

Mr. CANNON. But there is another wicked man who makes the point of order that it is not germane, no matter what may be the form in which it is offered.

Mr. McRAE. I will take the judgment of the Chair upon that without further argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not prepared at this moment to rule upon that point, as there may possibly be some section to which it is germane.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There is no section in the bill that has any relation to the service of any process of any kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, page 9, strike out the words "the principal place" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one of the places:"; so that the clause will read:

"The marshal's official residence shall be deemed to be at one of the places of holding court in the district," etc.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That whenever in this act an officer is allowed actual expenses the account therefor shall be made out quarterly, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Attorney-General. When made out the account shall be verified on oath before an officer authorized to administer oaths.

The expense accounts of the marshals and their office deputies and the accounts of the field deputies shall be paid by the marshals; said accounts and the expense accounts of the district attorneys and their assistants when made out in accordance with this act shall be submitted to and examined by the circuit court or district court of the district and when approved by the court shall be audited and allowed as now provided by law.

Mr. COOPER of Florida (before the reading was concluded). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I rose and endeavored to offer an amendment to the seventh section, but another gentleman was recognized. I have an amendment of some importance that I desire to offer to that section—an amendment touching civil services, which are largely affected by this bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. To what section does that apply?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Section 7, page 9.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is already passed.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I rose and tried to offer my amendment. I brought this amendment to the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF]. It is an important amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida was not recognized. He was not claiming recognition at the time that the reading of section 8 began, so that he is too late; and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. One moment——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] will permit me to offer my amendment. It is an amendment concerning civil services to which I called his attention. It is very essential to the civil administration in the United States courts. I rose and endeavored to offer the amendment in time.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I can not overrule the Chair.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer this amendment. It relates to the civil business of the courts, which the committee in preparing this bill has not had in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the seventh section. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Let us hear it read.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. If I may be permitted to explain the necessity of the amendment, the point of order being reserved, I am sure there will be no objection to recurring to it.

The amendment of Mr. COOPER of Florida was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "Provided," in line 18, page 9, section 7, the following:

"That in any civil case or proceeding to which the United States shall be a party mileage or traveling expenses and subsistence, as the officer may select and as provided by law, shall be paid to the marshal or deputy making any service by the party to the litigation against whom the same shall be chargeable, and the same shall not be paid to the clerk of the court or covered into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Now, permit me to occupy a moment in explaining the necessity of that amendment pending the point of order.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is covered by existing law.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Oh, no; it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I understood that consent was given for me to make an explanation. This is an important matter; and we were assured that when the bill came up we would have the opportunity to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent has not been given to revert to section 7 for the purpose of offering the amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes to explain his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent being asked to offer the amendment, the right to object was reserved until the amendment had been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Florida will proceed.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the first section of this bill provides that all costs and fees shall be covered into the Treasury. That provision applies to civil as well as criminal cases. Therefore, whenever we want a civil writ served, we shall have to pay mileage, which will go into the Treasury of the United States. Section 7 provides for the payment of traveling expenses and subsistence to marshals. Now, in view of those provisions, one of two things is inevitable, either we must pay mileage into the Treasury as well as subsistence and traveling expenses to the marshal, which makes us pay a double expense for the service of every civil process, or else there is no provision for paying to the marshal the necessary expense of travel or subsistence in serving a civil writ, and we shall have no means of having such process served.

The attention of the committee was directed solely to the service of criminal process; they did not take into consideration the service of civil process. I have, I presume, as much civil practice in the United States courts as most men here, and I am not concerned with the marshals, but with the fact that we shall have some adequate provision made for getting these civil processes served.

This, gentlemen, does not change existing law. It only provides that as to the mileage and expenses for serving process in civil suits they shall be paid to the marshal or the deputy as now, instead of being covered into the Treasury and making the party pay twice.

I submitted this matter to the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. UPDEGRAFF, the gentleman from Texas, Judge CULBERSON, and several other members of the committee, and, as I understood it, none of them differed with me as to the fact that they approved some proposition of this kind, that they recognized the defects existing, and that they ought to be cured. Now, to object to some provision at this time will not be a matter of reason or right, but I think will be unreasonable. I had understood the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill at least to say that he saw no objection to some such provision. If you pass the bill without some such provision I do not think you can make it into a law, because you interfere with civil processes all over the United States.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to return to that section of the bill in order to move the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent has already been given to recur to the paragraph in question.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have this amendment read again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Now, if gentlemen wish to examine this amendment I hope it will be permitted to go over until to-morrow, and be printed in the RECORD, so that they can see and understand its provisions.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Our theory is altogether different from that of the gentleman from Florida. We propose that all of these fees, whether they be fees originating in criminal or civil cases, shall be taxed and collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States; and that the compensation in this bill shall be for all services both on behalf of the United States and private parties. That is the idea.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me make a suggestion.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Florida first.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: Are you going, by the bill, to make us pay mileage into the Treasury of the United States, and then the subsistence and traveling expenses of the officer who serves the civil process, and make no definite provision whatever for the expense of serving such civil process? You can not expect that the marshal's salary shall be used by him to pay his traveling expenses, on the one hand, or on the other you ought not to make a party to a civil suit pay the mileage of the officer into the Treasury of the United States and then pay again the expenses of the officer for traveling and incidental expenses in serving the writ.

I repeat, I think that if gentlemen will allow the amendment to be pending until to-morrow and look at it they will find it to be necessary, and I am satisfied there will be no objection to that or some other adequate amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who wishes to ask a question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; I do not wish to ask a question, but only to suggest that it is getting very late, and to know if it is the intention of the committee that this matter shall run all night.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The matter is in the hands of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the legislative appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 167) for the relief of John O'Keane, of the State of Washington;

A bill (S. 1767) to provide for subports of entry and delivery;

A bill (S. 772) to provide for the purchase of sites for public buildings in the cities of Hastings and Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a port of delivery;

A bill (S. 2053) to provide better facilities for the Federal courts in New York City;

Joint resolution (S. R. 79) directing the Secretary of War to furnish an estimate for deepening the channel from Hampton Roads to the navy-yard at Norfolk, Va., and also for improving the Western Branch of the Elizabeth River;

A bill (S. 490) to indemnify the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863;

A bill (S. 75) for the relief of St. Charles College;

A bill (S. 717) for the erection of a public building at Fergus Falls, Minn.;

A bill (S. 190) for the relief of J. M. Billings;

A bill (S. 728) to compensate Elihu Root for services rendered by direction of the Attorney-General; and

A bill (S. 477) to repeal section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring the district judge for the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3964) to reorganize the customs collection district of Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 162) regulating proof of death in certain pension cases; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House concurrent resolution relative to printing additional copies of the Eighth Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House concurrent resolution relative to printing additional copies of Second Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, be printed as required by law.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 24) for the return to the State of New Hampshire of the flag of the Eleventh Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

Joint resolution (S. R. 85) granting the county of Cole, Mo., permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 636) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak.

RECONSTRUCTION OF ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to report a bill from the Committee on Appropriations covering an item of appropriation, and I should like to consider it at once.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider the following bill, which he reports from the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $96,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the reconstruction of the Rock Island Bridge, as authorized by the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, approved March 2, 1895.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRISP. We should like to have some explanation of this before consent is given for its consideration.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the Rock Island bridge has to be reconstructed. It passes over the Rock Island Arsenal grounds. The rights of the Government, as between the Government and the railway company that passes over the bridge, are settled by agreement of many years' standing, each to pay half and half. In considering the last sundry civil bill, the railway company waived its rights, and agreed to pay 60 per cent, the Government to pay 40 per cent. The whole matter was fully looked into. The sum of $100,000 was appropriated, which leaves $96,000 yet to be appropriated. This important work must stop, or else this appropriation must be made. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is thoroughly familiar with it, as are the other members of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PROOF OF DEATH IN PENSION CASES.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 162, to which there is a Senate amendment, be taken up and considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 162) regulating the proof of death in certain pension cases was read.

The Senate amendment, to substitute the word "act" for the word "proviso," was read.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the Senate is merely a clerical one. It does not affect the bill. Therefore I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ERDMAN. I object to the consideration of that at this time.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman will not object. It is simply to insert the word "act" where the word "proviso" is used.

Mr. ERDMAN. The bill itself is a bad one, and I object to the consideration of it now.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The bill can be presented in the regular order to-morrow morning.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest a correction as to the reference of the bill (S. 1340) to repeal in part and to limit section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which bill was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Without objection, that change will be made.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LIVINGSTON, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MCCLURE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. RUSK, for four days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BOWERS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

And then, on motion of Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Steamboat Channel, California, and from junction thereof with Sacramento River to mouth of said river—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of an appropriation for the purchase of a piece of ground adjoining the Puget Sound naval station, Washington, for water-supply purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, for the consideration of Congress, estimates of appropriations for the rental of the office now occupied by the agent of the Post-Office Department to supervise the distribution of stamps—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. WELLINGTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1247) to establish and provide for the maintenance of a free public library and reading room in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 634); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. COX, from the Committee on Claims:

The bill (H. R. 506) for the relief of Stewart & Co., A. P. H. Stewart, agent, Weed, Witter & Co., and C. A. Weed & Co. (Report No. 635.)

The bill (H. R. 584) for the relief of Joseph H. Thompson. (Report No. 636.)

The bill (H. R. 6529) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in case of James H. Dennis. (Report No. 639.)

By Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russell N. Reynolds. (Report No. 640.)

The bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly. (Report No. 641.)

By Mr. BAKER of Kansas, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (H. R. 1500) granting a pension to George W. Bagley. (Report No. 642.)

The bill (H. R. 3113) granting a pension to Margaret A. Kidwell. (Report No. 644.)

The bill (S. 1522) granting a pension to Catherine Smith. (Report No. 645.)

By Mr. DE WITT, from the Committee on Claims:

The bill (H. R. 3725) for the relief of Columbus F. Hayward and the executor of Charlotte G. Hayward. (Report No. 637.)

The bill (H. R. 1882) for the relief of John Ruhm, sr., Nashville, Tenn. (Report No. 638.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 1435) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Kimball. (Report No. 643.)

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5050) for the benefit of and granting a pension to Ransom C. Hazelip, late a private soldier of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and first lieutenant of Company B, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers. (Report No. 646.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 145) granting a pension to Maud Ardelle Bliss. (Report No. 647.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 6881) to prevent unjust discriminations in freight rates on agricultural products by common carriers by amending section 16 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended by an act approved March 2, 1889—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 6, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS BY CHECKS.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 2921.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2921) to repeal section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define the duties of pension agents, to prescribe the manner of paying pensions, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1870, and now being section 4784, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define the duties of pension agents, to prescribe the manner of paying pensions, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1870, and now being section 4784, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. I should like to hear the report read, reserving the right to object.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2921) to repeal section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define the duties of pension agents, to prescribe the manner of paying pensions, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1870, and now being section 4784, Revised Statutes of the United States, and report as follows:

The only sections of the statutes that bear upon the method of payment of pensions are sections 4764, 4765, and 4784, Revised Statutes of the United States, all of which sections were part of the law of July 8, 1870, which provided for the execution of vouchers, and the quarterly payment of pensions, through the established agencies of the Government. The three sections are as follows:

"SEC. 4764. Within fifteen days immediately preceding the 4th day of March, June, September, and December in each year, the several agents for the payment of pensions shall prepare a quarterly voucher for every person whose pension is payable at his agency, and transmit the same by mail, directed to the address of the pensioner named in such voucher, who, on or after the 4th day of March, June, September, and December next succeeding the date of such voucher, may execute and return the same to the agency at which it was prepared, and at which the pension of such person is due and payable.

"SEC. 4765. Upon the receipt of such voucher, properly executed, and the identity of the pensioner being established and proved in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the agent for the payment of pensions shall immediately draw his check on the proper assistant treasurer or designated depository of the United States for the amount due such pensioner, payable to his order, and transmit the same by mail, directed to the address of the pensioner entitled thereto; but any pensioner may be required, if thought proper by the Commissioner of Pensions, to appear personally and receive his pension.

"SEC. 4784. Agents for the payment of pensions, and any clerks appointed by them and designated in writing for that purpose, which designation shall be returned to and filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, are required, without any fee therefor, to take and certify the affidavits of all pensioners and their witnesses who may personally appear before them for that purpose, in which case the check for the pension, when due and payable, shall be given direct to the hand of the party entitled thereto, if desired, and not mailed to his address, as required by section 4765."

The evident intention of the law expressed in section 4784 was to accommodate those pensioners who resided in the cities at which the pension agencies were located, and until the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, few, if any, pensioners not residents of such cities appeared at the agencies and obtained payment in person.

Statistics furnished the committee, obtained by correspondence with the 18 agencies of the Government, disclose that but 10 per cent of all pensioners avail themselves of this provision of the law and obtain their pension payment in person at the agencies, and that of such number all but about 2 per cent are pensioners under the act of June 27, 1890, a large number of whom are soldiers' widows, who, influenced by the growing practice, seek the agencies in person, notwithstanding their expenses are largely increased by the necessity of two witnesses who must accompany them, at extra expense of transportation, and in many instances of compensation for their services as witnesses.

The custom of social intercourse that was at first occasioned by the meeting upon "pay day" has been displaced by the baneful practice of designing men and women, who prey upon the weaknesses of the veterans and surround them with pitfalls of vice and temptations, into which they frequently soon deposit the pittance which a grateful Government has provided for their support and the maintenance of their families.

The custom prompts thousands to visit the agencies from long distances, at greater expense than their incomes warrant, and leads to habits that are injurious to their morals and ruinous to their purses. The desire to be early "in line" to receive their pay keeps hundreds upon the streets or in shelter in the corridors of the agency. After a night spent in cold corridors or upon the streets, waiting for the pay day of the morrow, many fall easy victims to those who for a small fee cash their checks, or by poisonous politeness lead them to drink and debauchery, from which they emerge penniless into the presence of the police judge.

The proposed legislation will wholly abolish personal payment and establish the universal rule of payment by checks transmitted through the mail to the post-office of the pensioners, as now provided in section 4765, Revised Statutes United States, but in no particular disturb the business of the agencies as now established. The result will be that 100 per cent of the pensioners will be paid by check instead of 90 per cent.

The object of the proposed legislation is the protection of the veterans and the protection of their families, who sorely need the pension money of which they are too often robbed, and the protection of the honor of the veterans and their families, darkened as it is by the practices an abused law has permitted.

In view of the great good that will result to those pensioners who now suffer by the practices herein mentioned, and because such legislation will improve the system of pension payments without in any manner disturbing the established methods of the pension agencies, and resulting in a saving of expense to the Government, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? If I caught the reading of the report right, this simply provides that all pensioners shall be paid by checks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is correct. Instead of 90 per cent of the pensioners being paid in checks, 100 per cent will be so paid.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Is not this bill drawn in the line of the recommendation of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Reynolds, in his last annual report?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is in the line of that report. This bill receives the approval of the entire Pension Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OVERSTREET, a motion to reconsider the vote last taken was laid on the table.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the sum of $50.90 be, and it is hereby, appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House for the pupose of paying the expense necessarily incurred by the Committee on Elections No. 3 in obtaining from the secretary of state of South Carolina certified copies of the returns of the election for member of Congress held in the city of Charleston, S. C., on the 6th day of November, 1895, the same to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MILES. Has the report been read, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. There is no report. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCMILLIN. While this is a small sum, Mr. Speaker, the expenditure seems to have been incurred without direction of the House, and I think it is due that the House should know why any expense is made without its approval.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that the Committee on Elections No. 3 found the record in one of the contested-election cases of South Carolina defective, and with the consent of both parties the committee unanimously decided that they should have certified copies of certain returns. The amount is small—only $50.90—but we thought the returns were necessary for us in order to properly consider the case, and I have therefore been requested by the committee to offer the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM P. CARLIN, RETIRED.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 422) for the relief of Brig. Gen. William P. Carlin, retired.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Brig. Gen. William P. Carlin, retired, be, and he is hereby, relieved and discharged from any and all liability for the amount of $1,108.85, expended by Capt. J. McE. Hyde, assistant quartermaster, by his direction, while in command of the Department of Columbia, for expenses incurred in the search for, and rescue of, a party of citizens lost among the Bitter Root Mountains in a great snowstorm in the autumn of 1893.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I object.

Mr. HULL. Before objecting, I wish the gentleman would wait one moment, for one word. It is a case where a party was lost in a canyon on the Bitter Root Mountains in a big snowstorm.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We can not hear a word that the gentleman is saying.

Mr. HULL. The Regular Army was brought into service to save the lives of some young students who were completely invested by snow, and without assistance from without they would have been lost. They were found snowed in in the canyon, entirely without food, without supplies, and without ability to still continue the struggle to reach the outside world. The General of the Army recommended the War Department to pay it, and if it could not be paid under the law, that Congress should be called upon; and the Secretary of War and General Schofield, then commander of the Army, both recommended this to Congress.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. One moment. General Carlin simply acted from the dictates of humanity; and in addition to the $1,100 expended by the Army, he himself expended over $1,500, because he had a son in the party that was lost. Now I will answer a question.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Is not this the expedition where a son of General Carlin and four gentlemen from New York went on a hunting tour in the Bitter Root Mountains in Idaho?

Mr. HULL. I think it is.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. And that same party deserted a citizen of Idaho whom they had taken along as a cook and left him there to die, leaving him in their health and strength and his misfortune to die in the mountains, and they came out?

Mr. HULL. I do not know anything about that. The War Department does not submit any case of that kind to us. This was a party of students led by a professor, who, in the fall of 1893, were snowed in. Several expeditions went out to rescue them. One expedition, forcing its way through the snow, rescued the party from death. I want to say to the gentleman from Idaho that it is no unusual thing for the Government to help people in distress.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. But how about the statement that those young men had previously deserted one of their comrades?

Mr. HULL. There is nothing in the record to show anything of that kind, and we know nothing of it.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. But it is a fact.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If that were so, how would it affect this case?

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I have not heard a satisfactory explanation from the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PITNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute the medals and diplomas awarded by the World's Columbian Commission to the exhibitors entitled thereto, and that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Both committees consent to this change.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I ask to take from the Speaker's table and immediately consider, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 477) to repeal section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring the district judge for the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West. A similar bill has been favorably reported by the House committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 553 of the Revised Statutes, requiring the United States district judge for the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. A House bill corresponding in its provisions with this has been favorably reported from the Judiciary Committee by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER].

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Florida, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 3742, corresponding in its provisions with the Senate bill just passed, be laid on the table.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 162) regulating proof of death in certain pension cases.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 10, the word "proviso" and insert "act"; so as to read: "And any pension granted under this act shall cease," etc.

Mr. POOLE. I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate, which changes but a single word and does not affect the substance of the provision.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

ISSUE OF BONDS BY NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that this bill and the amendments of the Senate be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HEPBURN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is one offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary have consented to offer to a subsequent section of the bill an amendment which they think will meet the objection which I urged yesterday to the bill as it stands and which I was endeavoring to cover by my amendment. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The expense accounts of the marshals and their office deputies and the accounts of the field deputies shall be paid by the marshals; said accounts and the expense accounts of the district attorneys and their assistants, when made out in accordance with this act, shall be submitted to and examined by the circuit court or district court of the district, and when approved by the court shall be audited and allowed as now provided by law.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to put an inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary in reference to this clause of the bill:

The expense accounts of the marshals and their office deputies and the accounts of the field deputies shall be paid by the marshals.

In connection with this provision, the marshal of the western district of Virginia has suggested to me that it is not quite clear from the language used whether the marshal must pay these expense accounts before they are audited or allowed by the Department at Washington, or whether he must wait until such action of the Department. It is a serious question whether he must take the risk of their being favorably acted upon by the Department here at Washington. He requested me when this portion of the bill should come up to call the attention of the committee to the difficulties that might arise in connection with this language. I do not know whether the committee has considered the question or not. If not, I would like to offer an amendment, to add to the clause I have just read the words, "when audited and allowed as now provided by law." Without some amendment of this kind the marshal must take the risk of auditing and paying these expense accounts himself, and then sending them to the Department here, which might not allow them, in which event he must look to the field deputies and others to pay back what they have received.

Now, I have not read the bill carefully enough to know whether that exception would lie or not, but I think it will. If it would, I can see how the marshal might be placed under a great disadvantage and probably in a position that would involve a serious personal risk in these matters. So I offer the amendment, after the word "marshal," in line 5, for the purpose I have suggested.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will allow me, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make this suggestion: Some confusion arises in my own mind in respect to this paragraph, and for the purpose of determining the matter I called at the Department of Justice this morning for information. The understanding there is that these deputies will be paid as now provided by law. That is, that the marshal is a disbursing officer under the law, and will be able to advance certain sums of money, placed in his possession to cover these expenses, under the general authority of law. That is the view taken by the Department.

I suggested that perhaps there was a little confusion and that the provision itself was not exactly clear, but the Department thinks that this will give ample opportunity under the existing law in all cases that may arise.

But let me suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that the amendment he proposes ought not to be adopted in the specific form he presents it, for its provisions are not by any means clear. The amendment would require the accounts of the marshals and the deputies to be audited first. Now, these men are on salaries, as I understand the bill, and under the law there is no occasion whatever for salaries to be audited before being paid.

Mr. TATE. But this refers to the expense account, not the salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. That, of course, would present a different feature.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, my objection to this provision as it now stands in the bill is that the field deputies by the operation of this bill are to be paid 75 per cent of the fees. Now, the fees under the present law must be audited and allowed by the officers of the Department before they can be paid. This, however, would make it imperative on the marshal to pay them in advance. The marshal does not know under this provision of the law whether he shall pay them before or after their allowance. In that respect the bill is confusing, and for that purpose the amendment has been suggested with a view to making clear that which is not otherwise intelligible. If this amendment is adopted, it will make it entirely clear as to when these payments should be made.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, a word in reply, by way of explanation, to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia. The expense accounts of the marshal and the field deputies under the provisions of this bill are to be paid by the marshal. A sum of money is to be advanced to the marshal for the purpose of their expenses, and he pays the accounts of the field deputies——

Mr. TATE. Right there will the gentleman permit a word of explanation?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I prefer to finish my explanation first and then will yield to the gentleman. The bill provides as follows:

The expense accounts of the marshals and their office deputies, and the accounts of the field deputies, shall be paid by the marshals.

He pays them their accounts. Now, then, the bill goes further and provides:

Said accounts, and the expense accounts of the district attorneys and their assistants, when made out in accordance with this act, shall be submitted to and examined by the circuit court or district court of the districts—

But that is not final. It goes on and provides:

And when approved by the court shall be audited and allowed as now provided by law.

Now, these accounts are made out at brief periods. If the marshal in paying the deputies pays them more than they are entitled to, he is not credited against his advance for anything more than the law authorizes him to pay, and he must take these chances; because these accounts must pass the auditing offices of the Government before they are officially and conclusively settled.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me that this language is unfair, and that the responsibility put upon the marshals is unreasonable.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It puts no more responsibility upon them than they have now.

Mr. SWANSON. The marshal, as I understand it, under the present law makes no advances to the field deputies, but only pays jurors and witnesses when a specific sum is allowed and the amount of the account is made out and ascertained by the court and the clerk who gives a certificate of the amount. It is simply a cashing of what may be called an order of the court to pay the allowance to the witness or the juror. As the marshal of the western district of Virginia has said to me: "There will be thousands of dollars that I will have to pay for the field deputies, their expense accounts and other expenses involved under the pending bill; I do not know whether I will get credit for a cent of it until it is sent to the auditing department and allowed. I may be entirely out of all the amount I pay on this account." Suppose, for instance, the marshal has paid the account and it is disallowed by the Department. He is compelled to bring suit against the field deputy and against other people to recover the amounts allowed them for their expense accounts. And so it seems to me that we should allow the field deputies and those other parties, as now provided by law, to send, at regular intervals, the expense accounts to Washington and have them audited and allowed, and then authorize the marshal to make the payment.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is true that it has been the regular, uniform practice among United States marshals to make advances to their deputies as they think prudent; but these accounts are always subject to the final auditing in the Department of Justice. That may involve a period of years, covering, in fact, the term of the marshal; and therefore he is compelled to so carefully scrutinize these accounts, and to take such action within his own office as will in all probability result in favorable action by the Department of Justice. All these accounts are dependent upon the final auditing in the Department. It has, within my knowledge, been the practice of United States marshals to carry the accounts of their deputies within reasonable limits, so as to secure themselves in the final adjustment.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand the law, the marshal——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Let us have a vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There has been so much confusion, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment of Mr. SWANSON was again read.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the foregoing sections of this act shall not be so construed as to prevent or affect the taxation of costs against the unsuccessful party or against defendants convicted of crimes or misdemeanors.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, to that section there is a committee amendment on page 10. It is as follows:

On page 10, line 24, after the word "the," insert the words "amount of or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, in line 24, after the word "the," insert the words "amount of or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Now, on page 11, in line 1, after the word "party," I move to insert the words "in civil proceedings."

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 11, line 1, after the word "party," insert the words "in civil proceedings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 14. That the terms of office of all commissioners of the circuit courts heretofore appointed shall expire on the 30th day of June, 1896; and it shall be the duty of the district judge of each judicial district to appoint such number of persons, to be known as United States commissioners, at such places in the district as may be designated by the Attorney-General, which United States commissioners shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are now imposed upon commissioners of the circuit courts. The appointment of such United States commissioners shall be entered of record in the district courts. That such United States commissioners shall hold their offices, respectively, for the term of four years, but they shall be at any time subject to removal by the district judge; and no person shall at any time be a clerk of a United States court and a United States commissioner: Provided, That all acts and parts of acts applicable to commissioners of the circuit courts, except as to appointment and fees, shall be applicable to United States commissioners appointed under this act.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF].

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have a committee amendment to the section just read. On page 11, at the end of line 23, insert the words "and notice thereof shall at once be given by the clerk to the Attorney-General."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, in line 23, after the word "courts," add the words "and notice thereof shall be at once given by the clerk to the Attorney-General."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 6, page 12, after the word "at" the following words: "Warrants of arrest for violations of internal-revenue laws may be issued by United States commissioners upon the sworn complaint of a United States district attorney, assistant United States district attorney, collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent, or private citizen; but no such warrant of arrest shall be issued upon the sworn complaint of a private citizen unless first approved in writing by a United States district attorney.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is that amendment germane to this bill under the ruling made yesterday?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill provides——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas upon his point of order.

Mr. McRAE. Under the decision of the Chair made on yesterday, nothing except matters that relate to salaries or the change from the fee to the salary system is in order.

Mr. BROWN. In section 14, lines 19 and 20——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that this so inheres in the duties of these deputy marshals that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BROWN. The amendment, Mr. Chairman, is a committee amendment. It has been submitted to the Internal Revenue Commissioner and approved by him.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the amendment? I should like to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. McRAE. I propose a substitute for the amendment.

The substitute was read by the Clerk, as follows:

That no fees shall be paid to any United States commissioner on any warrant issued, or any other fees, in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless said fees have been taxed against and collected from the defendant, or unless the prosecution has been approved either before or after arrest of the defendant by a circuit or district judge, or the attorney of the United States in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, and unless said prosecution shall have been commenced upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, or upon a sworn complaint by a United States district attorney or his assistant, a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McRAE. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 72.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. BROWN. I call for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is not now in order.

The amendment offered by Mr. BROWN was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, to be inserted after the word "act," in line 6, page 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 6, after the word "act," page 12, the words: "Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, the district judge of the southern district of New York, the commissioners of the circuit court, or the clerks of the United States courts in or for the southern district of New York."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment, to be inserted after the word "act," in line 6, and I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed ten minutes, on the ground that I am a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to address the committee for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment which I have offered is to exempt the southern district of New York from the general provisions of this section. In other words, we in New York City desire to have our commissioners of the circuit court remain commissioners of the circuit court; and we desire also to have the clerks of our district and circuit courts remain masters in chancery and committing magistrates. You will remember that on this Committee on the Judiciary there is no representative from the city of New York, and the representative from another part of the State of New York naturally, it must be assumed, knows little about the practice of our bar in the southern district of New York. I think I can safely assert that in this request I make I have the hearty indorsement of the Federal judges in our city and county, that is to say, for the whole southern district of New York, and that I have the approval of all the members of our Federal bar. You must remember that the commissioners of the circuit court in our district are only 23 in number, and the circuit court in the southern district of New York is by express statutory provisions differentiated from the circuit courts throughout the United States; by special provisions of statutes in the chapters concerning the organization and concerning the sessions of the circuit court trial terms of that court for the exclusive trial and disposal of criminal cases are provided to be held seven times a year within the southern district of New York.

Mr. BROWN. Is the clerk of the circuit court also the clerk of the district court of the southern district of New York?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir. The clerk of the circuit court is John A. Shields; the clerk of the district court is——

Mr. BROWN. He is a United States commissioner?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The clerk of the district court is Samuel H. Lyman. They are both United States commissioners.

Mr. BROWN. Then you are asking a change in the bill for two men?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am asking a change in this bill in the interest of the whole city and county of New York, in the interest of our judiciary, and in the interest of our litigants, not in the interest of one or two men, but in the interest of hundreds and hundreds of thousands of men. Now, why should these commissioners in the southern district of New York remain commissioners of the circuit court? It is because that court transacts all our criminal business. It is urged that a change should be made; that is, that the power of appointment of these commissioners, which has been vested in the circuit courts of the United States ever since February 20, 1812, should be taken away and given to the district judge. I care very little about that for the rest of the United States; but I say that it should be vested in our district in the court which has the transaction not only of the criminal business, but of the great volume of the civil business.

Now, what is the other thing which I ask? And I must say that it seems to me to be only fair that we should have some voice about the matters within our own district. I wish to allude later for a moment or two to the mode of this report, and to show that it has been impossible for us to secure that full and careful consideration to which we are entitled, considering the enormous volume of business transacted in our Federal courts. There are special reasons why the clerks of the circuit court and district court for the southern district of New York should be commissioners. The reasons are based upon the necessities of our litigating community, upon the interest of the great mass of litigants who come before the district court or before the circuit court. The judges of those courts are in favor of the existing system. I call attention to the fact that you can not get a man of first-class ability and of the requisite capacity who will take one of these positions without the additional emoluments of the other.

The two gentlemen who hold these offices in New York, Mr. John A. Shields, clerk of the circuit court, and Mr. Samuel H. Lyman, clerk of the district court, are able, efficient, honest public servants, although they are Republicans in politics. Now, what is the reason that these clerks should be commissioners? It is because they act in a twofold capacity. They act either as masters in chancery, or as committing magistrates in extradition cases or criminal causes, and in civil cases it is a great convenience to have all the exhibits, cumbrous often, at other times frail in their nature and easy of destruction or liable to destruction—it is a great convenience to have those exhibits kept within the walls of our Federal Building and in the custody of the clerk, who at the same time has to act as a commissioner. In criminal cases it is of vital importance that the committing magistrate should be in the same building as the judge, and it is of general interest to the public of New York that we should have one or more commissioners easy of access in the Federal Building. The only way to secure that is to have the clerk of the district court and the clerk of the circuit court continued as commissioners.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word as to this mode of legislating. I think it is a very sad spectacle to behold this great Committee on the Judiciary, composed of leading lawyers from all parts of the country, asking this House to legislate in a wrong and improper manner. I for one protest against salient changes in existing law being incorporated in appropriation bills. Gentlemen are aware that the Committee on Rules, headed by the distinguished lawyer from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], has enormous, arbitrary, and coercive powers. Why did not that Committee on Rules bring in a rule providing that the Updegraff bill should be taken up for consideration and considered immediately? Why did it not bring in that rule before the consideration of this appropriation bill? I call the attention of members of this committee to the fact that when, on the 11th day of January last, we were considering the rules, when the distinguished gentleman from Iowa brought up the twenty-first rule for consideration, and when, in the House, we were considering the last clause of the second section, containing the provision, "nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill," the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], also an able lawyer and one of the leaders on that side of the House, gave this reason for the adoption of that salutary rule. He said, in substance: "If this House desires to legislate upon any subject, let it be done—how? Out in the open, and in a manly way," so that the Senate and the Executive shall be free to consider the legislation without the burden which would be imposed upon them by being obliged to consider it in connection with an appropriation bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, is not the real motive for tacking——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask unanimous consent to have three minutes more.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized for a few minutes upon the amendment offered by my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. In opposition to the amendment?

Mr. QUIGG. No, sir; in support of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon that side of the question is exhausted.

Mr. QUIGG. Is there any procedure by which I can be recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. QUIGG. Then I ask unanimous consent that I may be heard three minutes in support of this amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention, especially the attention of gentlemen who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary, with whose bill, in the main, I am in thorough sympathy, to some passages of a letter that I have received from Judge Lacombe, of New York, bearing upon this question. Gentlemen will recognize the fact that the conditions of the public business in the courts of New York City are entirely exceptional, and it has been the policy of Congress and is the policy of this bill, as its author very well knows, to except the southern district of New York from many of its provisions.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The district attorney's office.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes; I appreciate that fact, and am not in the least disposed to impose upon the kindness of the committee. I desire, however, to present these considerations which have been urged by Judge Lacombe, and they are so much better stated by him than they could be by me that I will read a portion of his letter. He says:

It is essential, of course, to the proper and efficient dispatch of this volume of business——

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman kindly inform me what he is reading?

Mr. QUIGG. A letter from Judge Lacombe.

Mr. SULZER. Ah! I have one of a similar nature.

Mr. QUIGG. Judge Lacombe says:

It is essential, of course, to the proper and efficient dispatch of this volume of business with entire satisfaction to the litigants, who are, I conceive, the persons first entitled to consideration, to have the office of clerk filled by a man of more than ordinary capacity, industry, and application. It goes without telling that it is and always will be more practicable to secure such an incumbent of the office in this city, where the expenses of living in the most quiet manner are so high, if he be allowed to supplement his salary by the doing of some other remunerative work of a character which will not interfere with a thorough and efficient discharge of his duties as clerk. He can, of course, do nothing which will take him away from his office, where his constant attendance is required every day in the year, except a brief vacation in summer, from an early hour in the morning until late in the evening. A narrow restriction of the hours when the office is open to outsiders for business is not practicable here, and has never been attempted. The conditions of practice at the bar are such that lawyers and clerks from the different offices necessarily have frequently to present themselves at the clerk's office in the United States circuit court for the transaction of such business as is necessary at an hour long subsequent to that at which the outer doors of most public offices are closed.

The clerk of the circuit court, however, can very well, and without interfering in any way with the discharge of his clerical duties, discharge as well those of a master in chancery or of a commissioner of the circuit court. Moreover, there are other circumstances which make it extremely desirable that in particular cases such functions should be discharged by the clerk. There are no quarters available in the Federal Building in this district for a United States commissioner or for a master in chancery, as such. Nor will there be any, even should the bill which you have yourself so kindly introduced become a law. There are, however, very many causes in equity where it is extremely desirable that the testimony taken before the master should be given in the Federal Building. Expensive and cumbrous exhibits, and other exhibits which are not cumbrous, but frail in their character and liable to destruction or material alteration by frequent transportation, are on file in the circuit court or int he circuit court of appeals (also held in this building) and ought to stay here, as some branch of the case is still being considered by the circuit court or by the circuit court of appeals, while at the same time testimony as to damages or profits under some interlocutory decree, requiring the presence of the exhibits, is being taken before a master. Under these circumstances it would cause no end of delay, inconvenience, and trouble to litigants and counsel, and frequent embarrassments to the court itself, if no master in chancery could be found to whom the case might be sent except one whose office was in some private building, which might not be a fireproof structure, as this one is, and between which and this building the exhibits would have to be repeatedly transported to and fro. Again, it is not an infrequent occurrence during the examination of witnesses for counsel, disagreeing as to some line of testimony, to present themselves informally before the circuit judge, when he happens to be sitting in his private chambers, to settle some point of difference between them as to procedure or the taking of proofs. And this, of course, can be done with less interruption to the proceedings, less waste of time to the counsel, and in consequence less expense to the litigants, if the judge is to be found in the same building as that in which the testimony is being taken.

This port is also the principal focus of immigration, and, while I do not profess to know anything with regard to other Federal districts, I infer that the number of extradition cases is larger here than it is in most of the others. And there is, of course, by reason of its large population, a very large number of criminal prosecutions in which the commissioner of the circuit court sits as a committing magistrate. Past experience has shown me, at least, that it is convenient for all concerned to have the commissioner near the chambers of the judge who is to sit in review of him. Repeatedly within my experience persons who have been held to bail by the clerk of this court, when sitting as commissioner, have, with their counsel, come at once to the judge's chambers, and, with no delay or incarceration overnight, have had the amount of bail fixed at some sum sufficient to insure attendance at the trial and not in excess of their ability to procure.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat surprised at the gentleman from New York who first spoke on this amendment [Mr. BARTLETT], who announced that New York was without a representative on the Judiciary Committee——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What I did state, if I mistake not, was that the city and county of New York, the southern district of New York, was without a representative on the committee.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, yes. It is in the same fix in that respect as Cook County, Ill., and the city of Chicago. That county and that city have no representative on the committee who resides within the limits of the city or the county. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it would be practically impossible to constitute a committee made up of one member from each city in the United States that regards itself as entitled to be placed outside the pale of the law which applies to every other city and to all the rest of the country.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Not at present. From the letter of Judge Lacombe, read by the second gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], it is clear to me, as I suspected to be the case when the first gentleman was on the floor, that neither Judge Lacombe nor the first gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] understands the effect of this bill as prepared by the committee. Judge Lacombe in his letter, which evidently furnished the basis of the argument of the gentleman from New York, says it is highly important to the dispatch of business to the satisfaction of litigants that the master in chancery and the taking of testimony and hearings of causes in equity shall be in some office convenient to the court, and shall be conducted by some one learned in the law. Will the gentleman from New York undertake to say that the taking of evidence by a master commissioner or by a master in chancery is affected in any manner at all by this bill?

Mr. QUIGG. I undertake to say so.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That may be; but the leading lawyer from New York will not undertake to say so. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have not time. I prefer to address myself to the leading lawyer from New York.

Mr. SULZER. There are others. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will answer the gentleman if he will allow me.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have not time now.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I just want to answer the gentleman's remark.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York (to Mr. CONNOLLY). Will you yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. If you want to ask me a question.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No; I want to tell you something about the law. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNOLLY. I am too old to go to law school now.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, I ask the gentleman to allow me a moment to——

Mr. CONNOLLY. To instruct me as to the law, and I decline to allow you to do it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask the gentleman to allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Very well.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Are you not aware that in the original act of February 26, 1812, under which these commissioners of the circuit court were created, power in civil causes is given, and also by various amendatory acts? So I am of opinion that if this bill were passed in its present form it might well interfere with jurisdiction in civil cases.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Are you through with your question? Please mark it with an interrogation point, so that I may know where it ends. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Are you not convinced?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I am not. This bill undertakes to provide that these United States commissioners, whose business it is to deal with criminals that are brought before them for violation of Federal law, shall be appointed by the district judge, the judge of the court that is given original criminal jurisdiction to try causes arising under the Federal law. It provides that these commissioners, who are to act as the fingers and hands of the court outside of the court, shall be appointed by the district judge. They are appointed for the purpose of holding preliminary examinations in criminal causes.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman kindly inform me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CONNOLLY. If the gentleman desires to ask a question, and needs the information, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. Why do you not provide in this bill that the circuit court shall have the right to appoint the clerk for the circuit court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. We do not do that because the law already provides for that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BARTLETT of New York, it was rejected; there being—ayes 16, noes 66.

Mr. SULZER. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "commissioner," in line 15, page 12, insert:
"That nothing herein contained shall apply to the clerk of the United States circuit court for the southern district of New York."

The CHAIRMAN. The section to which this amendment applies has not yet been reached, and the gentleman's amendment is not in order.

Mr. SULZER. I will ask the Chair to recognize me when the proper section is reached.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, the present manner of paying fees to officers of the United States should be changed. If the objectionable reve nue laws now in force are to be retained to perplex and harass the people, they should not be rendered more odious by allowing fees to the officers who execute them. The present fee system is a direct inducement for the officers to increase to the utmost the number of criminal cases, so as to make their fees as large as possible.

The unscrupulous deputy marshal has all the advantage under this miserable system over the marshal who will not resort to questionable methods to make fees. Petty prosecutions are instituted by him, and persons arrested on frivolous charges taken for examination or trial by the longest route from their homes to the commissioner's court—and for what purpose? Solely, Mr. Chairman, to make fees and mileage, and to secure larger accounts against the Government. In this way the rights and liberties of our people are outraged and disregarded for the purpose of enlarging the fees of the officers.

We are told that it will not do to put these officers on a salary; that we must perpetuate this indefensible system so far as the deputy marshals are concerned; we are assured that putting the marshals and district attorneys on a salary will prevent frivolous prosecutions being instituted to make fees and put a stop to arrests for petty offenses.

Under the present system the district attorneys and marshals are powerless to stop these abuses, and those who believe that putting these two officers in each district on a salary, and leaving deputy marshals and United States commissioners still on the fee system, will stop this abuse will find that the making of frivolous cases for the sake of securing fees will continue to exist.

It is urged that deputy marshals, if put on a salary, will not be active in the discharge of their duty, and for that reason this system, which is admitted to be a reproach, must be perpetuated. Why, Mr. Chairman, what officer is more vigilant than the deputy collector? He is paid a salary and in most instances he is more active than the average deputy marshal. In a few instances, I have been reliably informed, they set fire to and burn up everything in the distilleries they seize, thus violating the law themselves. Had I the power, such a stretch of authority would cost the officer doing it his position. But under this oppressive system the people are forced to submit. I refer to deputy collectors only to show that there is nothing in the argument that deputy marshals would not discharge their duties if put on a salary.

All prosecutions begin in the commissioners' courts and by the deputy marshals, and to correct this much-abused system you must commence where the prosecutions originate, for as long as you pay fees to deputy marshals so long will every prosecution that will make fees be brought forward, for the greater the number of cases made the larger will be the fee account of the deputy marshal.

Instead of apologizing for this bill by saying that it is a step in the right direction, let us put all these officials on salaries and stop this miserable practice. You can not do it unless you put the deputy marshals upon salaries. They are the men interested in originating all these idle or malicious prosecutions.

You give one of these men $2 a day for hunting for a fellow and 6 cents a mile while he is looking for him; you pay him $2 for arresting and 10 cents a mile for taking him to court, and mileage for the spy or reporter, that the deputy employs as a "guard," who is also, when he gets to court, used as a witness and paid as such; and do you expect to break up this system while you continue to pay the deputy marshals by fees in this way? The spy or reporter gets his $10 for reporting, his pay as a guard, his fees as a witness, and the deputy marshal his fees, as set out in the fee bill, and yet we are told that by merely putting the district attorney and the marshal on salaries and leaving the deputy marshals to get their compensation by the same fees and to employ the same "guards" and spies and informers this miserable system is to be broken up. You can not break it up in that way.

I grant you that, under the change made in this bill, the district attorney will probably attempt to stop some of these prosecutions, as many of them have heretofore done, by not approving warrants; but when a complaint is filed with him and when an oath is taken that a certain person has violated the law who may be living 100 miles away, how is the district attorney going to determine whether the person making the affidavit is a reputable citizen, or whether the complaint itself is well founded or not? The only way that you can cure these evils is by wiping out this whole miserable fee system.

There is no use in talking about "steps in the right direction." Let us go to the bottom of the matter and abolish the entire system. It is this system, Mr. Chairman, which develops that creature that has been and will continue to be the despised of all men—the reporter, the informer, the spy. The professional informer is usually one who has violated every law known to the revenue service. He is a daily attendant at commissioners' courts and is never happier than when being used as a witness or a guard. He can not look honest men in the face. He has the appearance of the most hardened criminal, and a stranger entering one of these commissioners' courts would invariably take him for the prisoner instead of a witness or a guard. All that is necessary to prove any desired fact is to intimate to him what evidence is wanted or needed and he can always be relied upon to give it. To put deputy marshals on a salary will elevate these positions and remove those holding them from contact with such degrading influences as the professional informers. These officers, if put on a salary, will not be subject to the criticism of arresting and prosecuting people for the purpose of making fees. Their testimony for the Government in criminal cases would not be questioned, because their pay would not be increased by committing and imprisoning any party they might testify against.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "act," on page 12, line 6, the following:

"Provided further, That in all cases where a prisoner is brought before a United States commissioner charged with a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment for less than one year, or when in the opinion of such commissioner the facts in any case only make a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment for less than one year, such prisoner may waive in writing a trial by jury and file a plea of guilty, which shall be entered of record, and in such cases authority is hereby given United States commissioners to sentence such prisoner; and in the event of imprisonment such prisoner shall be confined in the nearest jail where such prisoner can be safely and economically kept, and all fines assessed and collected shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. BROWN. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. TATE. I trust I may be heard a moment on the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which, among other things, defines the duties of the United States commissioners. The fact, therefore, that there is a law already applicable to circuit-court commissioners does not have any application in this case. The very section to which I offer the amendment defines the duties of these officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the amendment is in order. The pending section contains this language:

Which United States commissioners shall have the same powers and perform the same duties that are now imposed upon commissioners of circuit courts.

This language defines the duties of these officers; and the amendment is germane to that general provision of the section.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This is an important matter, and I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be limited to three minutes.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to deprive me of my five minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HENDERSON. I modify my motion so as to close debate in five minutes.

Mr. TATE. All right, if I can be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that debate on the pending amendment be limited to five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TATE. I offer this amendment for two reasons. In the first place, it will relieve the district courts of a large number of cases, and, in the second place, it will allow a prisoner, if he so desires, to plead guilty and to enter at once upon the service of his sentence in his county jail without being sent to some distant jail. Every one familiar with the practice of these courts knows that at the opening of a term the court resembles very much a police court. Men are there in large numbers for the purpose of filing pleas of guilty. Under this bill commissioners are allowed 75 cents for taking a bond and 50 cents for committing a prisoner, but if the case is disposed of by him under this amendment he gets neither of these fees. The amendment also reduces the fees of the deputy marshal, because if the prisoner is committed the marshal gets his fee for commitment and if he is carried to jail the marshal gets his mileage.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman think that this amendment is likely to afford an opportunity for marshals or others interested in the prosecution to bring influence to bear upon ignorant men who may be brought before the commissioner to induce them to plead guilty, thus depriving them of the right of trial by jury?

Mr. TATE. Not at all. That can be done just as well by inducing the man to plead guilty in the district court as before the commissioner, and, besides, this amendment cuts down the fees of the marshals, and he would not likely use his influence against his interest and to reduce his pay.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the prisoner has then an attorney to represent him.

Mr. TATE. He may not have.

Mr. TAWNEY. At any rate, he has the court to protect his rights.

Mr. TATE. There is no danger; the deputy marshal will have every reason to oppose a plea of guilty, for it cuts down his fees.

Mr. BROWN. Will not this amendment dignify and make more important these cases before commissioners, instead of making them less important, as the bill undertakes to do?

Mr. TATE. Well, suppose it does; it relieves the United States of the expense of paying a large number of witnesses for their attendance at court, and the expense necessarily involved in trials by jury and otherwise, and lets a poor prisoner plead guilty, be sentenced, as soon as he is arrested, if he desires to, and also allows him to serve out his sentence in his local jail. This will save the trial of many of these cases, and will be the cause of saving more for the Government than any other feature of this bill.

I send to the Clerk's desk the recommendation of the President, in his annual message, on this subject, which I ask him to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The report of the Attorney-General contains the usual summary of the affairs and proceedings of the Department of Justice for the past year, together with certain recommendations as to needed legislation on various subjects. I can not too heartily indorse the proposition that the fee system, as applicable to the compensation of United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of Federal courts, and United States commissioners, should be abolished with as little delay as possible. It is clearly in the interest of the community that the business of the courts, both civil and criminal, shall be as small and as inexpensively transacted as the ends of justice will allow.

The system is therefore thoroughly vicious which makes the compensation of court officials depend upon the volume of such business, and thus creates a conflict between a proper execution of the law and private gain, which can not fail to be dangerous to the rights and freedom of the citizen and an irresistible tempation to the unjustifiable expenditure of public funds. If in addition to this reform, another was inaugurated which would give to United States commissioners the final disposition of petty offenses within the grade of misdemeanors, especially those coming under the internal-revenue laws, a great advance would be made toward a more decent administration of the criminal law.

Mr. TATE. There is the direct recommendation of the President of the United States, asking that an amendment similar to this should be adopted, and going further and recommending that the commissioners may be permitted to try persons in cases of this kind. If this amendment is adopted, this will allow certain persons to plead guilty before the commissioner and waive trial by jury, and thus avoid the expense of bringing witnesses, going through the form of commitment, and in other ways will save to the Government a great deal of expense that is now involved in keeping prisoners who can not give bail and are forced to remain in jail until the courts convene. In addition to that, it will save a poor man from lying in jail two or three months waiting for court to meet to plead guilty. He can file his plea, if he desires, before the commissioner, and actually serve out his sentence in the same time he is required to remain in jail waiting for the district court to meet.

I regret that this bill does not put both the deputy marshals and United States commissioners on salaries, for in this the committee's substitute differs from the bill introduced by me. This would be better for the people, better for the officers, and a saving to the Government. The expenses, under the present system, have been gradually growing until they have increased from $3,210,000, in 1885, to the enormous sum of $6,461,600, paid last year, under the present fee system, to United States marshals, their deputies, district attorneys, clerks, and United States commissioners alone.

There were 2,750 civil suits tried in which the United States was a party, and 1,691 were decided for the Government and 1,061 against the Government. During last year 25,949 criminal cases were disposed of in United States courts, and a conviction was had in 15,421 cases, while in 10,521 cases the Government failed to convict. This shows that almost half of these cases should never have been instituted, and that the Government, under the present fee system, paid the marshals, their deputies, district attorneys, and commissioners $225 in each case tried, and for every conviction it cost the Government in fees to marshals, deputy marshals, district attorneys, commissioners, and clerks alone $377.60.

The President, Attorney-General Olney, and Attorney-General Harmon have recommended the abolition of this system in the following words:

[President Cleveland's message to Congress, December, 1885.]

The present mode of compensating United States marshals and district attorneys should, in my opinion, be changed. They are allowed to charge against the Government certain fees for services, their income being measured by the amount of such fees within the fixed limit as to their annual aggregate. This is a direct inducement for them to make their fees in criminal cases as large as possible in an effort to reach the maximum sum permitted. As an entirely natural consequence unscrupulous marshals are found encouraging frivolous prosecutions, arresting people on petty charges of crime, and transporting them to distant places for examination and trial for the purpose of earning mileage and for fees.

The district attorneys uselessly attend criminal examinations far from their places of residence for the express purpose of swelling their accounts against the Government. The actual expenses incurred in these transactions are also charged against the Government. Thus the rights and freedom of our citizens are outraged and public expenditures increased for the purpose of furnishing public officers pretexts for increasing the measure of their compensation.

[Attorney-General Olney's report for 1893.]

The system by which United States district attorneys, marshals, clerks, and commissioners are paid by fees has been so often and so emphatically condemned, is so indefensible in principle, and works such gross injustice in practice that its survival to this time is nothing less than a wonder and a reproach. In recommending its summary abolition I merely indorse a change of policy which has received the earnest advocacy of every Attorney-General for the last twenty years.

[Attorney-General Harmon.]

THE FEE SYSTEM.

Great vigilance has been exercised and every effort made to keep down the expenses connected with the Federal courts. Excessive and illegal charges can in some measure be avoided by watchfulness and laborious investigation, but arrests and prosecutions on frivolous charges and flimsy proof, to which part of these expenses is due, can not be prevented by this Department. This can be accomplished only by abolishing the system which, by making the fees of commissioners, marshals, clerks, and attorneys the source of their compensation, presents a constant inducement to unnecessary arrests and litigation.

The 40 per cent of unsuccessful prosecutions during the past year, which is less than usual, does not, of course, include the cases wherein persons arrested are discharged on preliminary hearing, or those wherein the charges are ignored by grand juries. Not only do the fees of commissioners, and those of marshals and witnesses, with mileage, in these cases, cause a large annual expense to the Government, but annoyance and loss of time are inflicted on those involved as parties and witnesses, which indirectly work both material and moral injury to the public. Besides, a class of professional witnesses and informers grows up in many sections, to the scandal of the administration of justice.

The discovery in northern Alabama of a widespread conspiracy among commissioners and deputy marshals to defraud the Government by means of fraudulent charges of fees, and the recent conviction of such of the conspirators as failed to escape, only call renewed attention in a striking way to the evils of the fee system. These have been so often mentioned to Congress by different Presidents and Attorneys-General that anything I might say would be mere repetition. I will simply refer to the report of Attorney-General Olney for 1890 (page xxiii), where the subject is fully and forcibly discussed.

Considerations of mere economy should not prevail when the tone of such an important branch of the public service is involved; but as such considerations are always of weight, I wish to call attention to the fact that little if any additional expense need be involved in the change from payment by fees to payment by salaries. Indeed, that change may well be hoped eventually to prove a measure of economy, as I think the experience of many of the States has shown.

The Attorney-General says it is "indefensible in principle." So it is. It works gross injustice in practice.

That a law so indefensible and grossly unjust should have so long survived is certainly a wonder and a "reproach," and I appeal to this House to abolish it; and, I repeat, if you intend to continue the present objectionable and odious internal-revenue system, let the officers who execute this law be free from the criticism of using the power of the Government to enrich themselves, and let them be paid a stated salary, so that, uninfluenced by fee reward or the hope thereof, they will do equal and exact justice between the Government and the people. Thus the officers and the people will be equally benefited.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this indefensible system, I am carried back through the years of suffering, humiliation, and hardships imposed on a brave, honest, and true people. In their name I appeal to this House to wipe out this system; a system under which innocent people have been dragged from their homes and robbed of their liberty by the testimony of the miserable wretches used as reporters, informers, and spies. The tears of the wife and the cries of the innocent children go unheeded as the husband and father is dragged from his home. Under this system prosecutions have been inspired by hatred and malice and sustained for the sole purpose of making fees, while the honest and just officer, who should be commended for his manly action in refusing to be a party to such prosecutions, makes no fees.

Mr. Chairman, why should this powerful and just Government longer tolerate this indefensible system; a system that has wrought so many wrongs; so much misery, injustice, and terror; a system that encourages petty and frivolous prosecutions, pays a premium on perjury; breeds strife among neighbors and communities, and causes so much misery, want, and wretchedness? The people demand that it be abolished. Let us respond to that demand by wiping out this entire system. [Applause.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TATE) there were—ayes 41, noes 60.

Mr. TATE. I ask for tellers on this vote.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chairman appointed Mr. TATE and Mr. UPDEGRAFF as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

Mr. SULZER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman offer this amendment to section 14?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. As I understood it, a motion was made and carried that all debate on this section should cease at the expiration of the consideration of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. ADAMS. That was only on a pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Chair understood the request to be on the pending amendment.

The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, in line 7, after the word "commissioners," add the words "and clerks of United States courts"; so that it will read:

"United States commissioners and clerks of United States courts are hereby authorized to administer oaths."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee for a moment to the amendment. It carries nothing but simply an authorization to facilitate the practical operation of the law by allowing the clerks of United States courts to administer oaths generally. When litigation is going on in the several courts anyone can understand how important it is that these officials shall be authorized to administer oaths immediately——

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. I thought the debate had been limited on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HENDERSON. My motion was on section 14 and amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand it, and the motion which was put to the House and adopted was to limit debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMS. On the contrary, I made the inquiry at the time whether that would cut off debate on other amendments and was assured by the Chair that it would not.

This amendment, if adopted, would confer on the clerks of the United States courts authority to administer oaths generally, in order to facilitate the litigation before the court. It carries nothing else with it. It is important that litigants before the courts shall not be compelled to go outside of the court in order to secure affidavits or other documents necessary in the trial of a cause.

I do not think the committee will object to the amendment when the purpose is understood.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, there were on a division—ayes 44, noes 4.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 14, page 11, after the word "courts," the words "and all other United States commissioners."

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to state for the information of the committee that the commissioners in the Territories are not circuit court commissioners. In Oklahoma we have 35 commissioners, who drew last year $32,000. I assume that the intention is to regulate all of these officers acting as commissioners. I have consulted with the Department of Justice in relation to the matter and it meets their approval.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 15. That no marshal or deputy marshal, clerk of the circuit or district court, attorney or assistant attorney of any district, jury commissioner, clerk of marshal, no bailiff, crier, juror, janitor of any Government building, nor any civil or military employee of the Government, and no clerk or employee of any United States justice or judge shall have, hold, or exercise the duties of the United States Commissioner.

Mr. SULZER. I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 12, after the word "commissioner," insert: "But nothing herein contained shall apply to the clerk of the United States district court for the southern district of New York."

Mr. HENDERSON. A point of order. That has already been voted upon. Action of the committee has been had upon it.

Mr. SULZER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This amendment has not been voted on.

Mr. DOCKERY. The substance of it has.

Mr. SULZER. It is an entirely different amendment from the one which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] offered, and it is to a different section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is not the same amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. In substance the same, as I understood it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, just a few words in regard to this amendment. The United States circuit court for the southern district of New York does more civil and criminal business than any three other courts in the United States. It does the largest extradition business. It has the entire charge of a very large number of intricate and complicated patent cases and copyright cases. There is more immigration to the southern district of New York than to any other port in the United States. The commissioner for the circuit court for the southern district of New York, Mr. John A. Shields, has been the clerk of this court and its commissioner for over twenty years, and there is not a man to-day in the country, in the judgment of many, who can take his place and discharge its duties in the same expeditious and satisfactory way in which he discharges them. Besides that, I am informed the Attorney-General of the United States, or some one representing him, has recommended to the committee this amendment, and has asked that the clerk of the circuit court of the southern district of New York be exempted from the provisions of this bill, in accordance with the proposed amendment I offer.

The bill as a whole, in my opinion, is a good bill in many respects; but this amendment should prevail in the interest of the facilitation of business of that court. If it does, it will be a better bill. This is requested by the circuit judges. That request should command respect and consideration. It is requested by the bar of the southern district of New York, and it is requested by every man who transacts business in that office. The commissioner's office is adjoining the office of the judge. If this bill should pass in its present shape, and a new commissioner should be appointed, not by the circuit court judge, who should have the right to appoint his own clerk and commissioner, but by the district judge, he would have no office in the Federal Building in the city of New York. It would therefore cause great waste of time, great delay, and great inconvenience to litigants, lawyers, and, in fact, to everybody having business in that court. Besides this, the clerk of the court has all of the models, all of the exhibits, and all of the papers in an iron safe in the Federal Building, which is fireproof. They can not be destroyed or taken from that building.

If a new commissioner is appointed, with an office in some other building in the city of New York, we do not know what will become of these valuable exhibits, all the models, and we do not know what will become of all the papers. Echoing the sentiment of the entire bar, echoing the request of the judges, echoing the wishes and demands of everybody who transacts business in that court, I respectfully urge the adoption of this amendment. It is fair, it is honest, it is in the interest of economy, and it should prevail. If it is voted down, I say to you as a lawyer from the great city of New York, knowing something about that court, having practiced in it, that its civil and its criminal administration will be crippled, and the cause of justice delayed, hindered, and retarded. I hope the committee will sustain this amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The gentleman makes a misstatement when he says that the Attorney-General came before the Judiciary Committee and recommended this change.

Mr. SULZER. I said that the Attorney-General or some one representing him.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nobody representing him made any such representation.

Mr. SULZER. Then did he not write a letter requesting it?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No; he did not write a letter requesting anything of the kind. He simply said that the judge of the southern district of New York desired it, and we put the question to him, why should that judge be favored more than all the other judges in the United States? Why is it that one man should hold a multiplicity of offices in that particular circuit when it is not necessary in any other circuit?

Mr. SULZER. Because there is more business done there.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. That is right, and you need more men to do it. Now, if my friend's argument is true, if that paragon of perfection should die, then they would have to shut up court in that southern district of New York.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In reference to the matter of multiplicity of offices, is the gentleman not aware that by express provision of statute, in a number of districts in the United States the office of clerk of the circuit court and the office of clerk of the district court are held by one man?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is not that a multiplicity of offices?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, we have found some places in which the clerk of the circuit court is also clerk of the district court, is jury commissioner, is commissioner of the United States circuit court, is janitor of the building, is inspector of the bicycle brigade, and the Lord knows what, and he gets paid for the whole thing. Now, there is no more reason why the judge of that district should have a pet and put him in half a dozen places than there is why any other judge in the United States should do the same thing. I sincerely hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No, pardon me; I will talk it over with you after we have voted it down. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have an amendment to this section I desire to offer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to close debate on this section and all amendments thereto in five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman will be recognized. That will let the gentleman have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate upon this section be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend that by making it one minute, as I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not yield the floor. The Chair had agreed to recognize me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry. How can the gentleman from Iowa take the gentleman from Georgia off his feet without his consent?

Mr. HENDERSON. The committee accepts the gentleman's amendment. Does he want to debate it after that?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No, sir; there are two amendments there. If the committee accepts them, I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. Amend section 15, page 12, by inserting after the word "clerk," in the ninth line, the words "or deputy clerk."

Second. Amend by adding at the end of section 15 the following words:

"And it shall not be lawful to appoint any of the officers named in this section receiver or receivers in any case or cases now pending or that may hereafter be brought in the courts of the United States."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Both of these amendments are accepted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make a correction. The gentleman from Georgia had been recognized, and the Chair ought not to have recognized the gentleman from Iowa to make a motion. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have nothing to say, Mr. Chairman. I am glad the amendments have been accepted. I introduced these amendments to correct an evil that exists in some portions of this country, and that in my district has cried out for the relief suggested by me. I am glad that, as they are offered, they have been accepted. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That each United States commissioner shall be entitled to the following-named fees, and none other: Drawing a complaint, with oath and jurat to same, 50 cents; copy of complaint, with certificate to same, 30 cents; issuing warrant of arrest, 75 cents; issuing a commitment and making copy of same, $1; entering a return, 15 cents; issuing subpœna or subpœnas in any one case, with 5 cents for each necessary witness in addition to the first, 25 cents; drawing a bond of defendant and sureties, taking acknowledgment of same and justification of sureties, 75 cents; for administering an oath (except to witness as to attendance and travel), 10 cents; recognizance of all witnesses in a case, when the defendant or defendants are held for court, 50 cents; transcripts of proceedings, when required by order of court, and transmission of original papers to court, 60 cents; copy of warrant of arrest, with certificate to same, when defendant is held for court, and the original papers are not sent to court, 40 cents; order in duplicate to pay all witnesses in a case: For first witness, 30 cents, and for each additional witness, 5 cents, and for oath to each witness as to attendance and travel 5 cents; for hearing and deciding on criminal charges and reducing the testimony to writing when required by law or order of court, $3 a day for the time necessarily employed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, it will be more convenient, if there be no objection, to make a committee amendment in line 14, just read, by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "three," in line 14, and insert the word "five."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not more than one per diem shall be allowed in a case, unless the account shall show that the hearing could not be completed in one day, when one additional per diem may be specially approved and allowed by the court.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There is another committee amendment at that point which it will be more convenient to consider right here. After the word "court," in line 19, page 13, insert the words "Provided further, That no more than one per diem shall be allowed for any one day."

The object of that amendment is obvious; so that a commissioner can not try a half dozen cases in a day and charge $5 for each.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this amendment may be considered at this time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, in line 19, after the word "court," insert the words: "Provided further, That not more than one per diem shall be allowed for any one day."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no per diem shall be allowed for taking a bond or recognizance and passing on the sufficiency of the bond or recognizance and the sureties thereon when the bond or recognizance was taken after the defendant had been committed to prison upon a final commitment, or has given bond or been recognized for his appearance at court, or when the defendant has been arrested on a capias or bench warrant, or was in custody under any process or order of a court of record. For the examination and certificate in cases of application for discharge of poor convicts imprisoned for nonpayment of fine or fine and costs, and all services connected therewith, $1.50.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There is another amendment suggested by the Department of Justice, in page 14, line 5, which I ask unanimous consent to propose now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to propose a committee amendment at this time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is that just as it is read through?

The CHAIRMAN. The section has not been read.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a long section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The amendment is, on page 14, in line 5, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$1.50" and insert "$3."

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 14, line 5, after the word "therewith," strike out the words "one dollar and fifty cents" and insert the words "three dollars."

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The committee thought that $1.50 would be enough, but the Department of Justice, on examining the bill, said that we had already reduced the commissioners' fees very largely, and they thought that ought to be $3 instead of $1.50.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman think the Department is right in this?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do. From the best information that the committee could get they believed that it was right to make this $3 instead of $1.50 a day.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. One dollar and fifty cents a day for this service is ample. You have, over my objection, just raised the per diem for taking testimony under this bill from $3 to $5 a day, and now it is proposed to increase the compensation fixed by the committee for this service 100 per cent. One dollar and fifty cents a day, I repeat, is ample; and if this bill is intended to be in the interest of economy I hope that the compensation in the remaining parts of it will not be increased.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For taking and certifying depositions to file in civil cases, 10 cents for each folio; for each copy of the same furnished to a party on request, 10 cents for each folio; for issuing any warrant under the tenth article of the treaty of August 9, 1842, between the United States and the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, against any parties charged with any crime or offense set forth in said article, $2; for issuing any warrant under the provision of the convention for the surrender of criminals between the United States and the King of the French, concluded at Washington November 9, 1843, $2; for hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense, and arrested under the provisions of said treaty or of said convention, $3 a day for the time necessarily employed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a committee amendment, as follows: In line 23, page 14, strike out "three" and substitute "five."

This is a committee amendment, proposed under the advice of the Department of Justice, and I think it ought to be adopted. We have already cut commissioners' fees very largely, and I have no reason to believe that the Department is otherwise than in entire sympathy with the reduction of these expenses generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the consideration of this amendment at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to voting upon it now, but I am opposed to the amendment. This is a proposition to increase the compensation of these officials from $3 to $5 a day, and I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment for this reason: The commissioners of the United States whose fees the committee now seek to raise by this amendment are, many of them, shown by the official reports to be getting $4,000 a year in fees. Men who under the fee bill can now make $4,000 a year, as much or nearly as much as a United States district judge receives, certainly have been getting ample compensation for their services. This amendment would largely increase the expenses of people who come into the Federal courts, and I think that $3 a day, the amount fixed by the committee, is sufficient compensation for men of the class of ability of these commissioners.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Do gentlemen understand that this per diem relates only to hearings in extradition cases arising under the treaties with France and England, and that it may be five years before a single hearing will be had under either of those treaties?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it is the principle I am objecting to. Men who can make $4,000 a year under the fee system are, I think, amply compensated for that kind of service.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say that this committee has already fixed the per diem for commissioners for hearings in United States criminal cases at $5 per day. Now, here are two exceptional cases, hearings for extradition under the treaties with France and England, and why should not the commissioners receive the same per diem for those hearings as they do for hearings under the criminal laws of the United States; especially when the probability is that very few commissioners will have one such case in five years? Why should we discriminate against commissioners hearing these cases? Why give the commissioner $5 a day for hearings under the general criminal law, and only $3 for hearings under the extradition clause of these treaties? Furthermore, it should be remembered that this provision affects only a small portion of the country. Probably the commissioners in New York, Chicago, Boston, and New Orleans will be all that will have any business of this kind, so that this provision will not affect more than a dozen commissioners in the whole United States. It seems to me that we ought to be consistent. If we have fixed the compensation for hearings of cases arising under the criminal laws of the United States too high, it is done, and the same committee ought to give the same amount for hearings under these extradition treaties.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Such commissioners shall keep a complete record of all proceedings before them in criminal cases, in a well-bound book, which record book shall be delivered to and preserved by the clerk of the district court for such district on the death, resignation, removal, or expiration of term of the commissioner, for which record the commissioner shall receive no compensation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all that part of section 16, beginning with the word "entitled," in line 17, page 12, down to and including the word "employed," in line 24, page 14, and insert the following: "paid such salary as the Attorney-General may from time to time determine, which shall in no case exceed $2,000: Provided, That the necessary subsistence actually paid, not exceeding $4 per day, and actual and necessary traveling expenses of commissioners while absent from their respective official residences and necessarily employed in going to, returning from, and attending before any United States court shall be allowed, as hereinbefore provided for the allowance of accounts of marshals."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment is simply this: It wipes out the fee system as far as the United States commissioners are concerned and puts them on a salary basis. I have taken up the time of this committee once before on this subject, and I do not desire to weary it, but I believe this is the most important paragraph in this whole bill.

No scourge that can be laid on the back of a suffering people will inflict more torture upon them than a dishonest and corrupt judiciary.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why does the gentleman want to give the United States commissioners mileage? They do not do any traveling.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. These commissioners are required to leave their homes and go to the circuit court every time the court meets.

Mr. CONNOLLY. If so they go as witnesses and get witness fees. Their duties as commissioners do not require them to go.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill requires them to go and take their dockets, as I understand. But I do not care anything about that part of the amendment. I am willing to strike that out. I wish, however, to say that this committee now has an opportunity to do justice where our present system has committed wrong for years to the people of the United States. There is not a gentleman on this floor who does not know that hundreds of innocent people are dragged before the courts of the United States and prosecuted, simply to put fees into the pockets of the commissioners and deputy marshals. Every gentleman here knows this fact. The bill in its present form will not remedy that evil. It still leaves in operation a premium to induce the commissioner to bind over persons who are brought before him. He receives more compensation if he commits a defendant to the grand jury of the circuit court than if he finds him not guilty. I do not say that all men would be influenced by such a consideration; I do not think that all these commissioners are dishonest; but we know that many of them are dishonest and corrupt.

Mr. BROWN. Does the United States commissioner get any larger fee if he binds over the accused than if he discharges him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir; he does, as I understand this bill. As I understand, he will, under this bill, get additional fees for issuing the commitment to the grand jury. That is the way I read the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, we would have been glad to introduce into this bill all the reforms that the human mind might be able to suggest if we had had the time to prepare such a measure and if we had thought it could be passed. A bill to reduce the commissioners to the salary system will require long and patient preparation. We have not been able in the time at our command to bestow upon such a measure the necessary labor. As soon as there is a probability that we can get a hearing, the process of reform will be continued.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I congratulate the gentleman on that.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe this amendment would largely increase the expenses of the commissioner system.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD, it was rejected.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 16, on page 15, add the following:

"No person related to a justice or judge of the United States circuit or district court within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity shall be appointed to act as United States commissioner or to act as master in chancery or receiver in any case pending or hereafter brought in the courts of the United States in which the justice or judge to whom such person may be so related may preside."

Mr. BROWN. I make a point of order on that portion of the amendment relating to the appointment of receivers in certain civil cases. This bill does not relate to the appointment of receivers at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN. I make the point of order that this does not relate to the pending section of the bill at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that the gentleman makes a point of order. That is all I could hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I did not hear the point of order that the gentleman made. All I could hear was that he made some point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the amendment is not germane to the section.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is certainly germane. The committee accepted an amendment that I offered to the section preceding this, which provided that no one of the officers mentioned in that section should be appointed to act as a receiver in that court. That amendment was accepted by the committee. Now, this amendment declares that no person who is related to the judge of that court shall be appointed commissioner. I apprehend that part is germane, because we are now discussing the question of commissioners. The other part of the amendment provides that no person thus related to the judge shall be appointed receiver or shall act as master in chancery. Until the Chair rules this amendment out of order I insist that it is germane. I insist that the committee by accepting the other amendment is committed to the proposition that this amendment is germane.

Mr. Chairman, before this point of order is decided and before it shall be determined that the reform sought to be accomplished by the amendment shall not be accomplished, I desire to call the attention of the committee and the House to the fact that if the appointments in some of the United States courts of this country are examined it will be found that there exists a system of nepotism that ought to be corrected; and it is that system which this amendment seeks to correct.

I could call the attention of this committee to a court where the father of the district judge is the standing master in chancery, and where references of cases in equity are made to him, although he does not reside in the district in which he acts as master in chancery cases pending before that judge; and parties and their counsel have to appear before the father as master in chancery to argue their cases, and then appear before the son, who is the judge, to argue exceptions to findings of the father, who is the master in chancery, and the son passes upon and fixes the fees in such cases that are paid to the father. If the Congress of the United States, when that matter is brought to its attention, stand ready to sanction such a practice as this; if, under the circumstances, the gentleman who has made the point of order stands ready to permit that condition of affairs to continue and keep out of the bill an amendment that will cure it, why, then, we must of course submit.

But I appeal to him, when this statement is made, when the facts are brought to the attention of Congress, and when an effort is presented in this manner to correct such an evil, which must and does affect the proper administration of justice, and which can not be speedily corrected in any other way—I appeal to him not to interpose and prevent by the technical rule of "a point of order," but to at least permit the sense of the committee to be taken upon it. I ask him not to make the point of order now when it was not made upon a similar amendment which was offered and accepted some time ago. Let us vote upon it, and I am satisfied it will be adopted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say to the committee that this reform is one that ought to be made and made promptly. We have had receivers, receivers, and receivers ad nauseam in the country where I live, and in many parts of the country receivers and masters in chancery have been appointed who have been closely related to the judges of the United States courts by whom they are appointed. I ask the House, therefore, now, when it is making a reform in this matter of abuses that are admitted to exist, to carry their reform a step further and relieve us from the conditions that exist to a very large extent in some of the courts of the United States. We should cure the abuse of judicial power wherever it exists.

Mr. BROWN. I must insist upon a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks a portion of the amendment is clearly in order; the latter portion, however, is not, and under the rule, "that when any portion of a proposition reported or submitted is out of order, either as an entirety or by way of an amendment, it is a sufficient ground for the rejection of the entire proposition," the Chair is compelled to hold that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I ask permission to modify the amendment and withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the Chair allow me just a moment——

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, this is already an amendment in the second degree. There is an amendment pending, and I must object to it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No; it is an amendment to a section of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the Chair to have reported, for the benefit of the committee under the rule invoked by the Chair, that part of the amendment which is held to be not in order. I am not sure, if the Chair will permit me, that it is not all in order in view of the action of the committee heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment—that portion of it to which the objection refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or to act as master in chancery or receiver in any case pending, or hereafter brought, in the courts of the United States in which the justice or judge to whom said persons may be so related may preside.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks consent to offer the portion of the amendment not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the Chair will withhold the ruling for a moment, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I ask to withdraw the amendment, and will endeavor to correct the matter to which I have referred in another way.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made to the withdrawal of the amendment.

The Chair will have to sustain the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the Chair, in that ruling, did not, perhaps, remember the fact that to this section there has already been made an amendment, by consent of the committee, which makes it a part of the bill, and which, I think, would make the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia in order in the following words: "It shall not be lawful to appoint any officer named in the section receiver or receivers in any cause or causes now pending in that court," etc.

The bill already provides, therefore, for the appointment of receivers, and anything pertaining to that, it strikes me, the Chair will conclude is in order when we take into consideration the fact that the bill provides for them already. It is already provided that one class of people shall not be receivers. It is legitimate, therefore, to hold that another class shall not be receivers.

I send to the desk a provision I want to add when the amendment comes up again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already made his ruling on the point of order, and the amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in at the end of this section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following:

"That every person who carries on the business of a retail liquor dealer without having paid the special tax as required by law shall for every such offense be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned in jail not exceeding six months. That the judges of the circuit courts of the United States and the judges of the Territorial courts shall divide each district into commissioners' districts, consisting of one or more counties or parishes, and they shall appoint one or more United States commissioners in each commissioner's district, as may be required for the efficient and economical execution of the laws. All United States commissioners are hereby constituted inferior tribunals, with jurisdiction for final determination and judgment on any complaint for the offense of retailing liquors without payment of the special tax required by the laws of the United States. The trial of such cases by commissioners shall be without indictment, and a traverse jury of twelve men, when demanded by the defendant, shall be summoned from the bystanders. From any judgment of the commissioner in any such case the defendant may appeal to the district court. In all proceedings in and about the trial of such complaints the commissioner shall conform to the rules for criminal procedure prescribed by the Revised Statutes, so far as the same are applicable, and in matters not provided for by the laws of the United States the commissioner shall follow the rules of procedure and the practice in trials of misdemeanors by justices of the peace or other courts of limited jurisdiction, under the laws of the State where the complaint is tried. United States commissioners shall receive for their services such fees as may be provided by law, except that in all criminal cases heard by them they shall only be allowed $1 for issuing process to arrest and $1 for a recognizance or bond for cost, including affidavits of sureties and acknowledgments, and for all other writs and processes issued, for all oaths administered, for docketing and trying the same, and for all services performed the sum of $3, and no more, for each case, but where two or more charges are preferred against any person at the same time the commissioner shall be allowed only for a fee in one case. In preliminary examinations where there is probable ground to believe the defendant guilty, the commissioner shall bind him over, if he shall give the bail required, to appear for trial before the court having jurisdiction nearest the place where the offense was committed; and if he can not give the required bail, the commissioner shall commit him for trial to the nearest jail where prisoners can be securely and most economically kept, and shall in both cases transmit all the papers in the case to the clerk of the United States court to be held in said district nearest the place where the offense was committed, at which court grand juries are impaneled; and the clerk shall notify the district attorney thereof; but any accused person who may be committed in default of bail may, upon the order of the judge, in writing, be removed to and tried at that place in the judicial district where the court will be held next after his commitment. Justices of the peace shall receive the same fees as United States commissioners for services in criminal cases. Their accounts shall be verified by oath and forwarded to the United States attorney of the district to be submitted to the court for approval. It shall be the duty of commissioners and justices of the peace to examine and certify to the marshal for payment bills of witnesses for transportation and attendance. Jurors shall be allowed for attending a commissioner's court, as provided in this section, 50 cents each, to be paid by the marshal on the certificate and order of the commissioner."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Who offers that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. All I desire to say about that amendment is, it will result in a great saving to the Government, and a great convenience to people brought before the courts on criminal charges. It is in the right direction, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. McRAE was rejected.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a separate section, to come in before section 17 of the printed bill.

The proposed new section was read, as follows:

SEC. 17. The Attorney-General shall, in his annual report to Congress each year, include a statement in detail showing for the preceding fiscal year the number of assistant district attorneys employed, the salaries of each; the number of clerical assistants employed for each district attorney, the salaries of each; the amount expended for necessary subsistence, and actual and necessary traveling expenses of each district attorney and his assistants; the number of office deputies and clerical assistants employed for each marshal, the salaries paid to each; the amount expended for necessary subsistence and actual and necessary traveling expenses of each marshal and his office deputies, and the number of field deputy marshals employed by each marshal, and the amount of fees earned by and the compensation paid to each of them out of such fees.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as authority has been given the Attorney-General to make certain appointments and incur certain expenditures, it seems that he ought to report his action under such authority to Congress each year. It is in the interest of efficient administration, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I should like to have that come in as a proviso at the end of section 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this to come in as a proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is offered as an independent section.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. We have no objection to that.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I think it is better that it should be independent.

The amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 17. That all acts and portions of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the Indian Territory or Territory of Alaska; nor shall any of the provisions of sections 1, 3, 10, 11, and 12 herein apply to the office of the United States district attorney and his assistants for the southern district of New York.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a substitute for that section. I understand a new section has been added.

The CHAIRMAN. An additional section, to be section 17. This will be section 18 of this bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. What section will it be of the legislative bill?

The CLERK. Section 24.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I wish to offer this as a substitute for section 17 of the printed bill:

SEC. 23. That all acts and portions of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That none of the provisions of sections 7 to 23, both inclusive, of this act shall apply to the Indian Territory or Territory of Alaska, and said sections shall take effect and be in force on and after June 30, 1896: Provided further, That none of the provisions of sections 7, 9, and 16 of this act shall apply to the office of the United States district attorney and his assistants for the southern district of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That all acts and portions of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That none of the provisions of sections 7 to 23, both inclusive, of this act shall apply to the Indian Territory or Territory of Alaska, and said sections shall take effect and be in force on and after June 30, 1896: Provided further, That none of the provisions of sections 7, 9, and 16 of this act shall apply to the office of the United States district attorney and his assistants for the southern district of New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand this is in lieu of section 17?

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for section 17 as numbered in the printed bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to amend by striking out the last word. I simply desire to state that when the committee were considering section 2 of the bill, with reference to the compensation of the district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, fixing the compensation at $4,000, I regarded that compensation as too small; but recognizing the temper of the House, I had no desire at that time to make an amendment, believing that the amendment which I would offer, increasing the compensation either to $5,000 or $6,000, would not prevail. However, for future use, I desire that the Clerk may read a letter which I send to the desk, from the United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, to be incorporated as a part of my remarks.

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, March 5, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your telegram, I beg to say that, in my judgment, the United States attorney's office at Philadelphia is the second of importance in the country, because, outside of New York, it is the most important port of entry in the United States. I think the statistics will show that a larger volume of business is done through the Philadelphia custom-house than at Boston. It stands to reason that a seaboard port of entry requires more work on the part of the United States attorney in matters of greatest importance to the revenue than could possibly be required from the same officer in the interior.

From the fact that Philadelphia is a port of entry there naturally arises on the criminal side of the courts a large number of cases connected with the revenue department which do not arise in places not frequented by mariners, etc. There is also, in consequence of this fact, a number of cases under the admiralty jurisdiction in which the United States is interested. In addition to these cases, there is in the eastern district of Pennsylvania the ordinary amount of criminal business such as would be likely to arise from a great city like Philadelphia and in the mining and manufacturing counties, many of which are located in this district.

On the civil side of the court I have, during my term of office, had in charge a number of very important cases involving large amounts of money and important principles of law. These cases are partly derived from the collection of customs, partly from the internal-revenue department, and partly from the proceedings upon officers' bonds and the like. In addition to this, we have several cases under the interstate-commerce law, and, as you know, a number of important proceedings for the condemnation of land—for example, the new mint and on the Gettysburg battlefield. There are also cases similar to the bill in equity filed by me against the sugar trust, and I think I am entirely warranted in saying that no district in the country outside of the southern district of New York is of more importance to the Government or requires more earnest and intelligent activity upon the part of the United States attorney.

To place Philadelphia below Boston or Chicago would, in my judgment, be an outrage, and not only an outrage, but a positive loss to the Government in preventing attorneys of sufficient ability to seek the office. I express myself with more freedom on this subject because my term of office expires this month and my successor will be a Democrat.

I earnestly request that you and all members of the Pennsylvania delegation will use your utmost efforts to prevent the passage of any act which will reduce the salary of the United States attorney in this district to any amount below $5,000—it ought to be $6,000. It is poor economy in a great country like the United States by cheeseparing salaries to prevent lawyers of the first ability from acting for the Government in litigations involving important and complicated questions of law and vast amounts of money.

Very truly, yours,

ELLERY P. INGHAM,
United States Attorney.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I offer an amendment to the last section.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There is a committee amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the pro forma amendment withdrawn?

Mr. BINGHAM. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I offer an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 11, after the word "Alaska," amend by adding "or the State of New Jersey."

[Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it was an inadvertence on the part of this committee to put New Jersey in as a fifth-class State. Now, we can not get a competent district attorney for $2,000 a year; and I think the committee will join in admitting that New Jersey was inadvertently passed over. New Jersey ought to be excepted with Alaska and the other Territories. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the committee.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment for the purpose of correcting an error in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before that is put, we will have to adopt our amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. A wise committee, and we thank you all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to offer an additional section, to correct an error in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, having consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who is not now present.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the appropriation for relief and protection of American seamen which was made in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897," approved February 27, 1896, and which appears in the printed copy of said act, on page 12, be amended so that it will read:

"Relief and protection of American seamen: Relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. DOCKERY. I only wish to say that the word "shipwrecked" was omitted in the act sought to be amended. It was an oversight. The Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs desires the correction made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we passed over the section in the original bill on page 107 during the consideration of the amendment of the Judiciary Committee; and I ask that we return to page 106 of the original bill and move to strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24 on page 106, and lines 1 to 8 on page 107.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24 on page 106, and lines 1 to 8, inclusive, on page 107.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes seem to have it; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. PICKLER. We ought to have an explanation of it.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I will explain it to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late; the vote had been announced.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6248, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment in reference to the pay of deputy United States marshals. It is the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. I can not tell the exact page.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suppose it could not be separated. It was an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The vote will have to be taken on the whole amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Am I not entitled to a separate vote on that particular amendment?

The SPEAKER. On that particular amendment, yes.

Mr. HULL. Is not that an amendment to an amendment? It was adopted as an amendment to the amendment pending to the bill; and does it not become a part of that amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there was a bill, No. 6654, adopted as an amendment by the Committee of the Whole. On that there can be a separate vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Can there not be a separate vote on the amendment in reference to the United States deputy marshals?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was an amendment to an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That was an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, then, I ask for a separate vote on this amendment, H. R. 6654.

The SPEAKER. Is there a request for a separate vote on any other amendment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment fixing the salary of the private secretary of the President at $3,500 a year.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is not an amendment. It went out on a point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was not present and supposed it was an amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask if the gentleman in charge of the bill asks for a separate vote on the increase of salaries in the Architect's Office.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the other amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the pending amendment, relating to the fee system.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 1767) to provide for subports of entry and delivery—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

A bill (S. 772) to provide for the purchase of sites for public buildings in the cities of Hastings and Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a port of delivery—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

A bill (S. 2053) to provide better facilities for the Federal courts in New York City—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Joint resolution (S. R. 79) directing the Secretary of War to furnish an estimate for deepening the channel from Hampton Roads to the navy-yard at Norfolk, Va., and also for improving the Western Branch of the Elizabeth River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

A bill (S. 490) to indemnify the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 75) for the relief of St. Charles College—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 717) for the erection of a public building at Fergus Falls, Minn.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 190) for the relief of J. M. Billings—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 728) to compensate Elihu Root for services rendered by direction of the Attorney-General—to the Committee on Appropriations; and

Concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. Alfred Holt Colquitt, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, be printed as required by law—

To the Committee on Printing.

A bill (H. R. 1712) granting to the First Regiment North Carolina State Guard two condemned cannon;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 3265) donating one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to Stone River Post, No. 74, Grand Army of the Republic, Sedan, Kans.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HULL in the chair).

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6614) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the report that accompanies this bill explains in nearly every particular the substance of the bill. I will, however, briefly review some portions of it and state the motives that have governed the committee in changing from the usual form, to a certain extent, the Post-Office appropriation bill now presented for consideration, and will at the same time briefly allude to the amounts of the estimates and of the appropriations made in the bill. The total estimates of the Department amount to $94,817,900. This bill recommends $91,943,757.88, or $2,874,142.12 less than the estimates. The sum recommended by the committee, however, is $2,397,760.02 more than the amount carried by the appropriation bill for the current year, a fact which will help members to grasp the magnitude of the increase of expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

Passing along to the item of free-delivery service—for that is the first item in which any change is made from the Post-Office appropriation bill as presented to Congress heretofore—your committee found that the Department estimated $12,960,300 for the maintenance of that service. In the opinion of your committee that was too large a sum of money to be appropriated in bulk, because the items could well be segregated. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to cast any reflection upon the present administration of the Post-Office Department. On the contrary, I take occasion to say that I believe the Department to-day is managed as well as it ever has been, and that, if possible, better business methods have been brought into play in the management of the First Assistant's office than have ever been adopted before. But your committee thought it was dangerous to appropriate nearly $13,000,000 in a lump sum which could be used at the will and discretion of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and hence they have segregated the items so far as, in their judgment, was consistent with practical administration, as will appear by the following:

For pay of letter carriers, $12,254,300. This is $41,017 more than the estimates submitted for 1896, and $6,000 less than the amount estimated for 1897.
For horse hire allowance, $330,000.
For car fare and bicycles, $100,000.
For street letter boxes, $15,400.
For package boxes, $10,250.
For 12 mechanics in the 5 largest cities, employed in repairing, etc., at $900 per annum, $10,800.
For incidental expenses, repairs, etc., $24,000.

Going on to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Department we found, as we thought, some room for improvement there. We found that in the star-route service, for the increase of which our friends from the interior have fought so persistently and I might say constantly on this floor, there was no increase proposed; and there can not be legitimately any increase in the star-route service, because that service is disappearing. But that service has been apparently increasing, because they had been diverting, and I do not know perhaps that I should use the word "diverting," because the expenditures were properly under the same head, but they have been using a large amount, some $670,000, for other purposes than what would be strictly star-route service. So that the increase in the appropriations for star-route service during the last five years has arisen from the fact that money was taken from that service and devoted to regulation screen or other wagon service. In other words, while you gentlemen from the country have been persistently increasing appropriations for the star-route service, all of that increase has been used in the larger cities. We believed that the House should know where this money was being used.

In the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's department we have also made some segregations and some changes. We found that in the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's department we had been for years appropriating some $300,000 under the head of "Mail depredations and post-office inspectors." When we called for a segregation of the estimates, we found that only $180,000 was used for salaries. That, of course, caused us to search farther; and as the result of our search we have presented to this House a segregation of items in that branch of the Department. We propose a certain amount of money for clerk hire, a certain sum for per diem allowance, and other amounts for incidental expenses. We thought that in this case, too, the House should know exactly where this money is being used.

In the item for transportation by railroad routes——

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. Speaking of the segregation of items under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, I should like to inquire whether the gentleman understands that his bill as now drawn will permit the continuance of what has come into ill fame as the spy system in that branch of the Department.

Mr. LOUD. No, I do not think so.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman say assuredly that he understands the bill will not permit it?

Mr. LOUD. I think if the gentleman had followed my argument closely in relation to the First Assistant Postmaster-General——

Mr. QUIGG. I tried to do so.

Mr. LOUD. He would have seen that there is only $24,000 that could possibly be used for any "spy" service, adopting the gentleman's designation. There is but $24,000 that could possibly be diverted to such a purpose; and under that appropriation of $24,000 the Department is compelled to cover all its incidental expenses, including repairs, painting, freights, straps, twine, cards, maps, directories, furniture, etc. So I do not think there is much leeway there for the injection of many special agents.

Mr. QUIGG. I understand that part of the bill, but let me say—I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman in his argument——

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is not interrupting my argument, because I had gone through the main portion of it.

Mr. QUIGG. What I wish to get at is precisely this: The Post-Office Department during the last two years has sent out spies in various directions to spy upon the letter carriers in the delivery of their mail, and has paid for that service from the lump sum which was heretofore appropriated to the First Assistant Postmaster-General for the free-delivery service.

Mr. LOUD. That is correct. But I hope the gentleman is not going to make a speech now on that subject.

Mr. QUIGG. No, sir; I shall not do so. I shall be very brief. The gentleman from California in this bill has, as it seems to me, with great wisdom and good sense segregated the items under the First Assistant Postmaster-General's department, so that it is conceded that the continuance of the spy system under the appropriations here made for the First Assistant Postmaster-General will be impossible. But when we come to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, concerning whose appropriation the gentleman is now enlightening us, we find that while he segregates the items there also, he provides a sum considerably larger than the amount last appropriated——

Mr. LOUD. Thirty-two thousand dollars.

Mr. QUIGG. Thirty-two thousand dollars larger, the last sum being $300,000 and this being $333,000.

Mr. LOUD. In round numbers.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, sir; $333,000 for the post-office inspector's department. Now, as I understand the facts, the post-office inspectors heretofore, until these spies were miscalled inspectors, were detectives engaged in the investigation of crime, and the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General sustained those detectives and paid them for their work.

Now, the question which I address to the gentleman from California is this: Whether under his segregation of items and by the processes that he now outlines for the expenditure of this money, any sum will be available to the Post-Office Department, whether under one Assistant Postmaster-General or under another, for the continuance of the spy system?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this is a phase of the question that I had not anticipated entering upon at the present time. But I think the gentleman from New York is entitled to a fair answer, and I will give an answer from my own standpoint as fair and full as I possibly can.

The gentleman of course understands that we did not attempt to change any existing law or conditions that now surround the force of inspectors of the Post-Office Department. I assume that the force of inspectors to-day can be used, as it has been used, for any legitimate service within the Post-Office Department to which the same may be directed. But I will enter further into the question and give the committee, as far as I can, the motives that have impelled us to increase the amount of money allowed for the post-office inspectors. I had preferred not to enter upon that field, unless drawn into it, for I confess that I may be compelled to assume a position in the argument in which perhaps some of my friends may not agree with me.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will state my opinions fairly and fully and as plainly as I can, and I trust without bias or prejudice of any kind. Your committee did not believe that any officer of the Government should be allowed to embark in any new enterprise, if you may so term it; at least that he should not be allowed to engage men in the post-office service to perform any work not contemplated by law. These were the motives that first impelled us to segregate this item.

Now, we found in that segregation $140,000 estimated for special agents in the First Assistant Postmaster-General's department, and I am free to say, right here, sir, that in the principle enunciated I thoroughly and firmly agree with the First Assistant Postmaster-General. I believe that while the execution of the system may have been pernicious, although I will not admit that, the motives that governed it were for the benefit of the whole service. The committee indeed had thought seriously of allowing the First Assistant Postmaster-General a sum of money, and providing in this bill for the employment of special agents denominating them special agents, because we have about 13,000 carriers in this country, and I do not believe that they are such a class of men as would put them above all other classes of men engaged in business in this country. I will put them upon the same level, or on the same standard, but I do not admit that they are better. There is no business man in this country but exercises supervision over the men in his employ.

It will be argued, perhaps, as against my position that the local postmasters can supervise the carriers themselves. I am somewhat familiar with post-offices throughout the country. I know that the principal motive that governs postmasters is, first, to give the greatest satisfaction to the greatest number of people, who may, perhaps, some time in the future, support him for political purposes, or possibly have already done so in the past. The average postmaster can have no direct interest in reducing the expenses of the local post-office; and even if he had such interest the postmaster at New York, for instance, has not the time and can not properly supervise the carriers himself.

Now I will return to the position where we had agreed to recommend, under the First Assistant Postmaster-General, the employment of special agents. We were then confronted with this condition: We found that there was a regular force of post-office inspectors organized under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. We found that the services of these men might, in many instances, be engaged in delicate cases endeavoring to locate fraud and robbery at local post-offices, and while engaged on this work there comes another force of inspectors to the city or town where the first inspectors were working up the cases. The presence of the new set becomes immediately known to the parties pilfering or robbing the post-offices, and the work ceases. We found that by having the two sets of officers engaged in this business we were liable to destroy the usefulness of both.

Now, one of the motives that governed us after that, having admitted among ourselves the fundamental proposition which was sustained and constantly adhered to throughout, that the Post-Office Department, as well as every other branch of the service, should supervise its own service by the aid of carefully selected men for that purpose, we then determined to increase the force of inspectors. I will be frank to say that the principal motives that governed us was that there might be a sufficient force of inspectors to perform the supervisory work over the carriers.

Now, let me say to the gentleman from New York and to every other gentleman here that this is no new departure. The post-office inspectors until two years ago had always performed the work and with satisfaction to all the people. The force of inspectors, permit me to say, is composed of a superior class of men. That Department is managed and governed to-day outside of any political influence that may be brought to bear, and the men are selected and retained for their eminent fitness for the positions they fill.

The almost universal custom in the selection of post-office inspectors is to take clerks in the Railway Mail Service or clerks in post-offices who have there become proficient in their several branches, who have shown by their industry and perception that they are particularly fitted for this promotion. They are picked out and given, as a rule, special examinations to become post-office inspectors. They are a class of men who I think have the confidence of the entire country to-day. Your committee inject nothing into that force. We propose to continue the force. That is, we do not touch it all; but in our bill the force will continue exactly as it has been continued in all the days gone by. Permit me to say that for a number of years there has been a demand for an increase of the number of post-office inspectors, and the result of our work, if it be adopted by this House, will give you 30 additional inspectors under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, and he must determine for himself what class of work these men shall be engaged in.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. If I understand the gentleman from California, he has simply prevented the employment of these spies by the First Assistant Postmaster-General, but increases the sum at the service of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, so as to enable the employment of 30 more of them. Is that correct?

Mr. LOUD. Thirty more inspectors. If the gentleman will add that to his question, I will say yes. That is the sum and substance of the result of the provision, simply an increase of the force of post-office inspectors. They may be used for this purpose. I assume that they will be used the same as they were always used up to two years ago. When a post-office inspector went to inspect a post-office, he looked over the carrier service, and I assume that he will do that in the future.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman from California will admit that this is a new departure, as he said a moment ago?

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman is mistaken if he understood me to say that this is a new departure. It is simply and plainly, permit me to say, an increase of the force of inspectors. I gave the gentleman the motive that governed us in increasing that force.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow an inquiry?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, the present appropriation for the force of inspectors for the current year is $300,000?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. These inspectors, as I further understand, are under the civil-service rules?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Your bill proposes to increase that force to the extent of $32,000?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will this increased force be under the civil-service rules?

Mr. LOUD. We do not touch the law governing that.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Post-Office Department can assign their inspector force for any line of work, can they not?

Mr. LOUD. They can, yes, as they have always had the power to do. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know but what it is as well that that portion of this subject is off my mind and off my stomach. But I did not propose in my introductory remarks here to enter into a general discussion of that question, because I rather feel that we shall have to go over this ground again possibly before we get through.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is one question further I want to ask the gentleman, for my own information. Under the act of March 3, 1891, with which the gentleman is familiar, the allowance for foreign mail service is determined?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does this bill cover all the contracts of the Department under the act of 1891?

Mr. LOUD. We have cut the estimate a little, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. But have you cut the estimate so as to impinge upon existing contracts?

Mr. LOUD. I do not think we have, Mr. Chairman. I think this will meet all the contracts in existence. But the gentleman of course understands that this is a contract service, which you can not pinch, because the contract runs for ten years.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no change in this bill that impinges upon those contracts?

Mr. LOUD. No. We have, as usual, cut that fund off a little, but if there is a deficiency, which there never has been before, and I do not think there will be now, it will have to be met by a deficiency appropriation. The gentleman well knows, of course, that we can not disturb these contracts that have been entered into for a term of ten years.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I find on page 2, at the head of the page, an item for compensation for clerks in post-offices. What I want to know is, whether a portion of that is available for the payment of clerk hire in third-class offices. The reason I ask the gentleman is this: As I understand, the Department has recently held that clerk hire in offices of this class can only be allowed for the purpose of separation, and where there is but little of that, although the office may approach very nearly to a second-class office, for which they make an allowance of $1,000 or more for clerk hire, they refuse to allow anything except that which will compensate strictly for the labor of separation. In an office that I am familiar with, where the receipts very nearly reach a sum sufficient to constitute it a second-class office, they have cut down that allowance, which has been $800, to $80, because that would be probably a fair compensation for the mere work of separation. For an office of that character there ought to be a clerical force supplied. Now, can any portion of this be used for that purpose?

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that of course we appropriate for clerical hire in a lump sum, and the Post-Office Department is guided entirely by statutory law, which confines them in the case of third and fourth class post-offices to an allowance simply for separation purposes.

Mr. HEPBURN. But if the gentleman will permit me, I do not understand that to be statutory law, but simply a regulation——

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a statute.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Long ago adopted, but only enforced recently.

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I understand that it is a statute, and if not, it is so old a regulation that it has whiskers, and must be accepted as having the force of a statute.

Mr. HEPBURN. But it has not had observance until this Administration.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman, in all candor, that he is entering upon another branch, and we shall have it opened up when we come to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I shall strive to open it when we come to it.

Mr. LOUD. The First Assistant Postmaster-General is rearranging the allowances for third and fourth class offices. I have taken great pains and great care to go over his list, and I find this condition has grown up under former Administrations. A Senator or Congressman who had the greatest influence here got the largest appropriation for separation purposes. That was an abuse of many years' standing. There never has been a change in the allowance until under the present Administration. Now this condition of affairs has grown up: Here was a town at the terminus of a railroad. It was a separating office for many star routes. In the last twenty years changed conditions have come over it, and it is no longer a terminal point. The terminal point is somewhere else. While the business of that office when the allowance was made was great, and probably it would properly have been allowed $400 or $500 a year for this separation purpose, in many instances the separating had entirely disappeared in that office and had been transferred to some other office that was either not getting a cent for separating purposes or the nominal sum of $40.

Now, then, the First Assistant Postmaster-General has entered in good faith on an effort to correct that evil, and I want here, on the floor of this House, to commend what he has done in that direction. He has taken those officers who had an allowance of $700 or $800 and did nothing in that service, and the money has been taken away from them and brought down to the nominal sum of $40, $60, or $80, and distributed to such officers as are performing the service. That, gentlemen, is the whole fact, which any of you can ascertain on investigation. While I understand he may cut down my friend's constituent in his compensation, or some other gentleman in his, he is pursuing a course of justice and equity, and one which is not hurtful to the service. And I say that after an investigation from the beginning to the end of what has been done in that direction.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. Is there anything in the bill under consideration which seeks to make any change in regard to the rates of postage?

Mr. LOUD. There is not. As a matter of course, we can not take that matter up in this bill. It would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. BARRETT. I should like to recur to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] and ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in the same line of inquiry a different proposition. I understand that of those so-called spies he has reduced the number from 100, under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, to 30. Now I will ask the gentleman if he will accept an amendment at the proper time providing that these 30 extra inspectors shall be appointed after civil-service examination from the ranks of those who have served for five years in the Post-Office Department in some capacity? The reason I ask that question is this: However much may be said about the civil-service examination, the fact remains that these inspectors, as gentlemen know, have been appointed from political considerations, and I ask the gentleman if he will accept an amendment so that no one hereafter shall be appointed as an inspector who has not served five years in the Department and in that way become generally acquainted with the work and prepared to act efficiently as an inspector?

Mr. LOUD. I will say, Mr. Chairman, frankly, that I would not. I think the law is sufficient at present. These men can not enter the service except through the civil service. I would not be willing to accept any proviso of that character. I do not think there is any necessity for it. Let me here say that of the 105 inspectors to-day 58 are known to be Republicans and 47 are known to be Democrats. Gentlemen, let us not raise a partisan issue upon the inspectorships, for there is nothing in it.

Mr. SWANSON. Is not the superintendent of the inspector's force a Republican?

Mr. LOUD. The chief inspector is known to be a Republican. He has not denied that he is, and has no necessity for denying it. Colonel Wheeler is understood to be a Republican.

Mr. BARRETT. The chairman of the committee will allow me to say that I made no reference whatever to any partisan question, and politics was not mentioned by me, but was brought in by the gentleman, apparently to give force to his objection. I wish to keep politics out of this matter by insisting that no man shall be appointed an inspector who has not served five years in the Department; and the reason I asked him the question is this: The people in my district, the letter carriers, object that they have been put under surveillance and have had unfair representations made concerning them by men who knew nothing absolutely about the working of the Department, and that they have been brought into discredit and their names held up for official scrutiny upon matters upon which the men who made the report had no special knowledge.

I therefore ask him whether, in the interest of civil-service reform and in our opposition to any partisan administration of the Post-Office Department, he is willing that these inspectors, in whose hands rests the fate of honest and honorable men, shall be selected from those who have served for a term of years in the Department and therefore are qualified to pass judgment upon the work of those whom they are set to supervise. If the gentleman will not accept this proposition, I give notice that at the proper time an amendment will be offered by which these inspectors shall be obliged to serve a certain length of time in the Department before they can be put over the heads and in control of men who have served many years and whose positions are perhaps all they have in the world.

Mr. LOUD. Of course we can attend to that matter when we reach it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Permit me a word. As I understand this proposition, it is simple and plain. The sum of $300,000 has been appropriated for the present fiscal year for the payment of the inspectors' force. That force exists to-day. It is the result either of continuance in the service or of vacancies filled under civil-service rules. The head of that department has been there many years and is a Republican. I know that the gentleman who, as the representative of that service, is in control of the whole of Pennsylvania and New Jersey is a Republican and has been in that service from sixteen to twenty years. The force to which the gentleman has reference is an appointed force that has been paid under what is called the lump sum of appropriation for free-delivery service. That force has numbered from 50 to 75 men during the present year. Those men have made the inspections which have resulted in the removal, suspension, or reduction of many of the carrier force.

Now, this committee by the provisions of this bill takes from that force the authority to do this line of work that it is now doing, and it increases the general inspectors' force by an additional appropriation of $32,000. The additional force will have to be appointed under civil-service regulations. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] proposes to incorporate in the bill a provision that, in addition to the other requirements of the civil-service regulations, the applicant shall have had five years' experience in the postal service. I do not understand any reason for that. What the gentleman wants to reach is the wiping out of this temporary force that makes inspection of the carrier forces in the cities of the country.

Mr. BARRETT. Let me answer the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield further?

Mr. BARRETT. Just one sentence.

Mr. LOUD. I think I have sufficiently embellished the speech I am going to have printed by the injection of the speeches of these eminent gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. LOUD. I will if the gentleman will confine himself to a question. These gentlemen are leading me away from the line of discussion which I was pursuing.

Mr. BARRETT. Just this single remark in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]: Knowing that 100 extra spies are going to be legislated out of office, I want to make it impossible for any one of them to be appointed to any of these 30 new places; and I propose to accomplish this purpose by providing that no man shall receive any of these appointments who has not been employed five years in the postal service.

Mr. BINGHAM. No man can be appointed unless he passes the civil-service examination.

Mr. BARRETT. Nor, if my amendment be adopted, unless he has been five years in the postal service.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why make a change of the general law which has been running for years and has been acceptable? The whole point is reached by this bill. These men can not be appointed upon the mere ipse dixit of the Postmaster-General or his assistants. The applicants for these positions must undergo the civil-service examination. This addition of $33,000 is simply increasing the general "mail-depredation" fund.

Mr. BARRETT. There is not a grammar-school graduate in my State who can not pass these civil-service examinations.

Mr. BINGHAM. Good for your State, then.

Mr. QUIGG. What possible objection can there be to requiring that these appointees shall have had some experience in the postal service?

Mr. BINGHAM. Why not apply the same rule throughout the administration of your civil-service law? Why make it applicable just here and nowhere else? Why not make a similar requirement in regard to inspectors in the Treasury Department and the Indian Department and every other Department of the Government?

Mr. QUIGG. I feel that we are not treating the gentleman from California quite fairly——

Mr. MILES. We all feel that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIGG. I am glad you sympathize with the gentleman.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me be understood. I am not defending the policy of the Department in this matter. I am simply saying that this bill meets every possible objection.

Mr. LOUD. I think I shall have to resume the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOUD. We shall have to go over this ground again, at any rate.

Let me say that if I thought an amendment such as that suggested would benefit the service I would accept it with pleasure; but I think the service is now abundantly protected. There is another item to which I desire to call the attention of the committee for a few moments. We have cut the item of transportation by railroad routes one and one-half million dollars. On the one hand, it has become a custom that has grown up in this House to cut this item. I recognize that fact, but the committee in this instance have cut it with the object in view, sir, that this House, if it will diligently discuss the matter, can not fail to pass some measures now pending before Congress which will tend to reduce the expenditures of the Department in this respect; and I refer to a bill, to which many of you have no doubt had your attention called, known as House bill 4566.

But this item of railroad transportation, permit me to say, is one of the most remarkable instances in connection with needed reforms in the post-office business that can be brought to the attention of the American people. It has grown or is growing to the extent of more than $2,000,000 a year, and the growth, let me say, is not a normal growth, but an abnormal one. It is a growth arising from a class of matter which investigation must show was never intended to be transmitted through the mails.

I will refer briefly to some of the figures, which, I think, will impress themselves upon your mind. When you realize the fact that in 1887 but 126,000,000 pounds of second-class matter were transported through the mail, and that in 1895 it had grown to 312,000,000 pounds, any person who investigates these figures must concede at once that that growth has not been a legitimate one. That growth, I shall attempt to show, and I think I can prove to the satisfaction of the House, is from a class of matter that was not intended to be transmitted through the mails at pound rates. Sometimes the enormity of an offense will appeal to the sense of justice of men where no other proposition or presentation of the case will have any effect. And permit me to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that we have donated to the so-called educational purposes—and that is the plea on which admission to the mails of second-class matter has been largely founded—more than $108,000,000 in eight years. That is not a large amount, of course, to those who are in the habit of talking of and handling millions of dollars daily, but to the average man it is considered a pretty large sum, and is taken by direct taxation from the sweat of the faces of the masses of the people all over this country. That is to say, the masses of the people in this country are supporting the postal service and paying for transmitting through the mail and handling four times what it costs in comparison to the second-class matter.

Now, I desire to refer very briefly to these facts, which are not really pertinent to the subject at issue, but to sustain the position we have taken in reducing the amount appropriated for railroad transportation.

Let us see now how the deficiencies have increased in this service, with what rapidity they have increased in the last few years. In 1887 we find a deficiency on transportation of second-class mail matter of $8,000,000, in round numbers, and in 1894 this had grown to nearly $19,000,000. I have been asked to explain how this condition arises. In 1879 there was enacted the "sample-copy" law. In 1885 the pound rate was reduced to 1 cent, and from 1885 dates the abnormal growth of second-class mail matter. We did not begin to feel the full influence of these modifications of the law until two years afterwards, because the masses of our people who have since engaged in the publication of serials, novels, and a large class of advertising journals, which have no circulation and could have no existence except for the sample-copy law, could not get their business into operation until 1887, or about that time; and you can see how assiduously they have plied their vocation since.

Mr. McMILLIN. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to make an inquiry just there. I would like to ask whether the committee had made any calculations as to the rate that would require to be placed on this class of matter to make its carriage self-sustaining?

Mr. LOUD. Well, that is a question, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, that is to a certain extent problematical. My own impression I can give. Many persons and many papers in the country have assumed to criticise our position on this subject. I want to say to the House that the committee have not entered into the field of handling, but confined ourselves exclusively to the subject of transportation. When you enter the field of handling you enter a field unknown to all of us. It costs us as much per pound to transmit a box shipped by the Department here, which has been done in some instances, weighing 1,700 pounds—it costs as much per pound to transport that as it would a pound of letters. So we have confined ourselves exclusively to that subject; and my eminent friend from New York, in answer to my argument, has fallen right into that hole that I dug for him.

They have, then, figured the profit on first-class matter, taking a basis of 8 cents, and assuming that everything above 8 cents per pound was net profit, when, as a matter of fact, we dealt simply with the question of transportation. Any child 5 years old can figure that proposition out satisfactorily. In round numbers there was transported in 1895, we will say, 450,000,000 pounds of matter. We know just the weight that was transmitted. That cost in round numbers $37,000,000, which we paid for transportation. Now, multiply the number of pounds by 8 and you will have within a million dollars of the result. So that is a clear, plain field to enter. But when you enter the field of handling you can not charge the proper cost to each class of mail matter, because we all must admit that it costs more to handle first-class matter than it does to handle second-class matter, more to handle first-class matter than it does fourth-class matter; I do not think perhaps as much more as we anticipate, though, because fourth-class matter, as a rule, is very difficult matter to handle with rapidity.

Mr. QUIGG. Is there anything in this bill changing existing law on the subject?

Mr. LOUD. Nothing whatever. I simply entered into this field to define the position we have taken here in reducing the amount of money appropriated for the transportation of mails. If the bill to which I have referred shall not become a law, if it shall not pass this Congress, this amount that we have reduced here will be met by a deficiency, just the same as it has been met for the last twenty years. This present Congress has to meet a deficiency, handed down by the last Congress, of about a million and a half of dollars. It is a legacy transmitted from one session to another. It is a system that I have always condemned, Mr. Chairman. I believe that we should be honest and frank, and appropriate the amount of money that we know the service is going to cost; but knowing average legislators as I do, I am satisfied that when this subject is brought before them they will enact into law measures that will take from the second class sufficient to cleanse it, to purify it, and benefit that which remains, and reduce the amount paid to railroad companies by about $1,500,000 a year.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow a simple inquiry?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman has referred to legislation that he has proposed, but not a part of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Not a part of this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it the gentleman's purpose to bring that legislation up at this session of Congress?

Mr. LOUD. I will state, in answer to the gentleman's question, Mr. Chairman, that it is my intention to press that bill to as early a conclusion as possible.

Mr. BINGHAM. Without reference to any other postages or any other divisions of matter?

Mr. LOUD. I do not really understand the drift of the gentleman's question. I understand what he says.

Mr. BINGHAM. Your only adjustment is going to be on second-class matter, without any reference to general newspaper matter?

Mr. LOUD. That is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is all the gentleman proposes to do?

Mr. LOUD. Of course we simply propose to revise the second-class matter privilege.

Mr. BINGHAM. I had submitted several bills to the gentleman's committee covering other matters, and therefore I made the inquiry.

Mr. LOUD. I will reply to the gentleman that I should have liked to enter upon a complete revision of the whole subject from beginning to end.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the only way you can do it.

Mr. LOUD. But let me say to the gentleman that one man can not accomplish everything, and neither can one session of Congress. This was the most radical and grievous evil that confronted us—that and the transmission through the mails of supplies for the Department and bulky matter. Those were the two most grievous conditions that confronted us, and we thought the good sense of this Congress would grasp those questions and pass those bills.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if it will not interrupt my friend——

Mr. LOUD. Not at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish to interfere with the line of remarks which the gentleman proposes making, and I realize the difficulties he has had to contend against. And I may say, too, that I have admired the courage that he has shown in entering upon them. What I wish to know is, whether this bill is framed upon what will be required for the public service under existing law, if the other measure to which he refers is not passed, or does it apply to what will be required by the service if the measure which he proposes is passed?

Mr. LOUD. I will state to the gentleman what I thought I said as plainly as I could, that this is the only item we have cut which could possibly be affected by the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. McMILLIN. And you make the cut with the view of passing those bills?

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman that that was the motive which satisfied my conscience.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no criticism to make of that. Now, what I want to know is, what is the amount that is thus cut that will have to be appropriated for hereafter, in the event that the reformatory bills to which the gentleman refers do not become laws?

Mr. LOUD. Probably a million and a half, possibly more. I will say, from my experience in investigating the figures of the Post-Office Department, that I think the weighing which is to take place this fall will astonish the people of this country, and will probably go away beyond the estimates of the Department, but, as I have stated, we have cut that item $1,500,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my friend state to the committee the reduction made by the last Congress and the estimates submitted to the committee then?

Mr. LOUD. The reduction in the last Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. The appropriation for 1896 was $26,500,000. Now, what was the estimate?

Mr. LOUD. The estimate this year was $29,000,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Last year?

Mr. LOUD. I can not give you the estimate without looking for it; but we appropriated $26,500,000, I think it was, for last year. That is my recollection.

Now, there is but one other thought that I desire to bring to the attention of the House, and that is in connection with the very subject I was discussing. Of course Postmasters-General for a number of years have in their reports to Congress figured out the receipts and expenditures as approaching nearer to a point. Postmaster-General Wanamaker had a great deal to say, and showed easily that in a short time the receipts of the Department must necessarily exceed the expenditures. Postmaster-General Bissell did not take it up with the fervor of his predecessor, because I think he saw that it was an impossibility. But Postmaster-General Wilson, who is well known to you, brings these figures much closer together. Now, I am free to admit that I am not in a position to be as well informed as they are, but I want to present to the House this one condition, and from that I base my statement: In 1888 the deficiency, in round numbers, was $5,000,000. I am now speaking of the deficiency in the receipts in the whole Department and not relating to second-class matter. Now, in good times and in bad times, from 1888 to 1895, notwithstanding the argument of some of the ablest business men of this country, that deficiency has steadily and insidiously increased year by year until we were confronted last year with a deficiency of about $10,000,000. Now, I make this statement——

Mr. BINGHAM. That is, June 30, 1894.

Mr. LOUD. June 30, 1895. I make this statement, and I think I will demonstrate it as a fact. Unless you change the conditions now existing in the Post-Office Department, you may argue receipts and you may argue expenditures, but the deficiency will continue to increase from year to year. I have to sustain me simply the conditions that have existed; and I assume that the future will show a greater proportionate increase in this deficiency than it has been for the last eight years. Now, then, gentlemen, that is all I had anticipated saying in regard to the bill, and unless some gentleman wants information upon some subject I have not touched on I will yield the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman what is his purpose in regard to closing general debate. Does he ask that it be closed?

Mr. LOUD. I will say that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] asked for some time. How much time do you desire?

Mr. McRAE. I would like about ten minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I do not desire to cut off debate at all. I will allow the gentleman from Arkansas to proceed, and then I will yield the floor and see what arrangement can be made about closing debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is an item in this bill I desire to discuss. Possibly I may ask for twenty or thirty minutes, but may get through in less time.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask for order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire twenty or thirty minutes when the item is reached. I do not desire to occupy any time in general debate. I desire the assurance that I can have time when the item is reached.

Mr. LOUD. I desire to assure the committee that there is no desire on the part of the committee to cut off legitimate debate on this bill. I will suggest before general debate is closed that it be not closed upon one or two propositions in the bill.

Mr. KYLE. I suggest that general discussion on the bill be continued until the time for taking a recess this evening.

Mr. LOUD. If any member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads desires the floor I will yield to him; if not, why, I will yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move that general debate be closed at 5 o'clock?

Mr. KYLE. No; I do not want to move that it be closed at 5 o'clock, but I suggest that we let it continue until 5 o'clock, and probably we may want some general discussion of the bill in the morning, but I hardly think it probable we will.

Mr. McRAE. I ask that the Clerk read the two amendments which I intend to propose at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in lines 13 and 14, page 1: "Sixteen million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert "seventeen million dollars. That there shall be allowed and paid to each postmaster of the fourth class $5 for each quarter in addition to the compensation allowed under existing law."

Strike out the following words in lines 9 and 10, on page 4: "Five million three hundred and fifty-four thousand" and insert "six million."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I have had these amendments read at this time for information and as the basis for some observations which I desire to submit (1) on the compensation of fourth-class postmasters, and (2) the inland transportation by star routes, including temporary service to newly established offices. When the bill is read for amendment I will offer them, and I hope no objection will be made to their consideration.

The first amendment increases the appropriation for the compensation of postmasters so as to give the Post-Office Department the full amount estimated for, and also provides for a small increase in the compensation of those of the fourth class. The proposition gives them $5 a quarter or $20 a year each in addition to the compensation they now receive. There is no class of officials so poorly paid for the work performed as the country postmaster. The increase is proposed in a simple form that can be easily put in operation by the Department. It does not interfere with the method of payment now prevailing; it does not interfere with the compensation based upon the percentage of cancellation; the proposition, in short, is to give $20 a year in addition to that now based on cancellations. To illustrate, if a postmaster now gets $10 a year—and they are quite common in some parts of the country—this amendment would give him $30 a year. If he has heretofore received $30, he would under this get $50, and so on. In many cases postmasters who receive from $10 to $50 per annum are required to open two mails each day except Sundays. The people in the country expect and the Department regulations require that the postmasters shall deliver their mails when they call for them. It is no uncommon occurrence to have offices discontinued because no one will serve as postmaster on account of the meager compensation. These men deserve better treatment, and they will continue to make their appeal to Congress until some measure of relief is accorded them. The people expect faithful service of the postmasters and the Government should pay for it.

The other amendment is to allow more money for our star routes. The people are not satisfied with the present service in many parts of the country. On many routes where the people now have mail two and three times a week it ought to go six times. The practice of establishing "special offices" ought to be abolished because it is worse than nothing. I believe that to every community where the people will agree to maintain the office by furnishing a competent postmaster the Government should carry the mail without regard to the cost.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing that Congress can do that will so much aid and promote the advancement and prosperity of a new and undeveloped country as good mail facilities. It identifies the people with the Government and arouses a spirit of inquiry and good feeling. Newspapers follow the mails, and they are the best educators of the common people, and it should be a source of great pride to us to know that a majority of all the newspapers of the world are in the United States. Here is the strength of our Republic. I trust that Congress will do nothing to interfere with the cheap newspaper rate, and that every facility will be allowed their circulation.

Congress should not refuse the people any reasonable demand for such service. The little schoolhouse and church follow soon after the mail route and the post-office. A patriotic feeling is aroused and respect for the Government increased. Other people come, towns are laid out, railroads constructed, and cities in time are organized, and then the revenue exceeds the expense. It is not satisfactory to the people to say to them that they have as good service as they had last year; they want better service. The country is growing and its wants are increasing. I make no complaint against the present administration of the Post-Office Department. It is as good and in some respects better than it ever was, but there is still room for improvement in the remote settlements. We must not let the fast mails to and the free delivery in our great cities eclipse, destroy, or weaken that part of our star-route service intended for the pioneers, who must and do suffer the hardships of frontier life in sections of the country where the roads are bad and comforts few.

These people ought not to be required to contribute practically, as they do, to the postal fund of the Government for the purpose of securing mail facilities for themselves and their families. Our Government is too great and the mail facilities too important to be denied any community.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct attention more particularly to the fourth clause of this bill, which will be found on page 2. There is there an appropriation of $10,350,000 which will be used very properly to a great extent in paying clerk hire in first and second class offices. But I want to remind gentlemen that more than 50 per cent of the people of the United States receive their post-office facilities from third-class and fourth-class offices. When the last census was taken it was developed that a fraction above 36 per cent of the people of the United States lived in cities having a population of 12,000 or upward. The towns where the third-class offices are located have usually a population of about 5,000; the average would be that or below it. So that I know I am not in error when I say that the great mass of the people are interested in the third and fourth class post-offices of the United States.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads seems to have lost sight of these offices entirely. More than two-thirds of the millions that this bill carries are to be expended in the interest directly of the first and second class offices that accommodate less than one-half of the people of the country.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is drawing that rather too strong.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not. I have not figured it out carefully; but I believe I am making my statement within proper limits. Every improvement, every change that has been made in the last twenty years has been in the interest of this minority of the people. Every change in this bill giving additional facilities, in the street car railways, in the bicycle service, and in all these other proper improvements, with which I am not quarreling, is in the interest of these first and second class post-offices, and those alone.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will allow me to say that in the matters he mentions we make no increase in the service, because those matters appear for the first time.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman will not understand that I am criticising or carping at this bill; but I am calling the attention of the committee to the trend of legislation in late years upon this subject.

Now, I think it is time we should have some legislation with regard to the other classes of offices—those classes that the constituents of a great majority of the members of this House are interested in—the third and fourth class offices.

Mr. LOUD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman know that the fourth-class post-offices, which cover a very large percentage of this country, retain every cent they receive from cancellations?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not quarreling with that idea at all. I am perfectly willing to agree that that is so. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that Congress has never made appropriations upon the hypothesis that it was to get returns for this service. That is not the basis upon which we legislate in reference to the postal service. We recognize the necessity of making appropriations in this direction for the benefit of the people, whether that service pays in dollars and cents or not.

Mr. LOUD. Now, will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the fact that the appropriation for salaries of postmasters, 85 per cent of which goes to third and fourth class postmasters——

Mr. HEPBURN. That may be true——

Mr. LOUD. That the appropriation of seventeen millions for this purpose is not a little item. Let me remark also that third-class offices are not allowed clerk hire proper under the law, because they retain nearly all their receipts; whereas in the larger offices no portion of their receipts are retained, but the officers are paid a salary.

Mr. HEPBURN. That does not answer at all, in my judgment, the proposition I am making. This appropriation is made for the benefit of the people. The postal service is not an enterprise on the part of the United States to make money; it is not one of its sources of revenue. It is expected to be a matter of expenditure of revenue raised in other ways; and I want to call the attention of the House to that fact.

Now, the point to which I want to direct attention particularly is this: In this item there is an appropriation of $10,350,000 for compensation to clerks in post-offices. I do not claim that this is any too much for these offices. Heretofore a small portion of this appropriation—I think $500,000—has been by the action of the Department used in the payment of clerk hire in third and fourth class offices that were separating offices. This allowance has been made simply for the duty of separating; that is, I suppose, making up or separating for the purpose of making up the star-route mail from the particular office.

Now, in cases that I know—I think in every third-class office in my district—that allowance, comparatively little heretofore, has been by the present First Assistant Postmaster-General almost entirely cut off or withheld. He says that it is his policy to limit those payments to the duty of separating the mail—to pay clerks engaged in that kind of labor alone. For the ordinary duties of the clerk, the necessity for which we all know, he will not make compensation at all out of this fund.

Mr. LOUD. Because, as the gentleman understands, the postmaster is paid a salary sufficient to cover clerk hire.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the theory of the present Postmaster-General, but it has not been the theory of others. These allowances have been made from time to time and increased from time to time as the importance of the office grew and the necessity for additional clerk hire presented itself.

Mr. KYLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question just there?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. On what theory would you adjust the payment of these clerks? The postmaster is paid a salary, and the clerks employed in a third-class post-office are simply there to distribute the mail sent out on star routes. Now, the First Assistant allows pay for that work already, and therefore what necessity is there for making other provision such as the gentleman suggests?

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, the gentleman from Mississippi has certainly never been in a third-class post-office. He no doubt lives in a metropolitan district.

Mr. KYLE. The gentleman is mistaken. I have some in my own district, and am thoroughly familiar with the workings of them.

Mr. HEPBURN. These clerks do not do that duty alone, the gentleman must remember. It is only an inconsiderable portion of their duty. They perform all of the duties of post-office clerks that are required of them. In one case that I have in mind, where $800 was allowed for clerical services for many years, three clerks are necessarily employed from 6 o'clock in the morning until 9 or 10 o'clock at night to receive the mail. They do not simply do the mere star-route business that enters into the making up of the star-route mail, but all the clerical duty necessary to the office. They distribute the mails that arrive, prepare the mails for departure, gather it in, make it up in packages, and, in fact, perform al lof the duties of clerks in a post-office, whatever the duties may be.

Now, it is true that the postmaster might compensate them for this service out of his own salary, but it would leave him a very small fraction, and these allowances for this service have been heretofore made. But in the opinion of the reformers, or in the effort to secure a so-called economy, the gentlemen in charge of this matter now propose to limit the payment for such services solely to compensate for separating the mail that enters into the star-route service. I do not think it right; I do not think it is a proper plan to pursue, and, Mr. Chairman, at the appropriate time, when this bill is open for amendment, I shall offer an amendment which I trust will commend itself to the chairman of the committee, and to the members of this body, and to which I call your attention now——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Before the gentleman proceeds, will he permit me to interrupt him just there for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I agree fully about the proposition which the gentleman makes, but I wish to ask if he has been able to get this additional compensation for the postmasters in his district? I have not been able to do so.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not been able to succeed. I have failed, and I think other members have failed on the floor who have made the same application. And I will say further to the gentleman from Georgia that I believe every third-class post-office in the district that I represent has been cut from $800, $400, and $300 down to $80 and $40 for this service to compensate strictly for the labor of separating the mail for star routes.

Now, in further reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi as to what plan I would adopt, I would say that I would leave that to the discretion of the Postmaster-General, letting him understand that it was the will of Congress that the appropriation should not be limited in the way it is now proposed to limit it.

He is doubtless willing to make the allowance as heretofore, and I am perfectly willing to trust his discretion in regard to that matter, but I want something in the bill that will instruct him that that is our will, that it is the intention of Congress that the allowances should be continued as they have been heretofore, and that they shall be made by him in the future as they have been in the past.

But, as I have said, Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall offer an amendment, which I will read for the information of the committee, to add at the end of line 2, on page 2 of the bill, the words "five hundred thousand dollars of which, or so much as may be necessary, to be used in payment of clerk hire in third-class post-offices."

Mr. LOUD. Why, the Department now requires, under the present estimate, over $580,000 for that very purpose, and they are using more than that. The gentleman's amendment, therefore, would cut it down.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from California that out of the appropriation that was heretofore made the Department has allowed $500,000 for this purpose.

Mr. LOUD. No; $580,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, have you not limited it to $500,000?

Mr. LOUD. The amount is something over $580,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is easily cured; and to adjust the amendment to suit the views of the gentleman from California, when I submit it I will make the amount $600,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this ought to be done. It is only justice that it should be done if we are to have an efficient service.

In no instance, allow me to state, in my own judgment, has there been an overallowance for clerk hire. This is true with reference to all the classes of offices of which I am familiar. In all of these offices two, and in some instances three, clerks are essential to perform the services required. Of course, if their salary is paid out of the compensation of the postmaster, he would have nothing left. They are not as a rule very high-priced clerks. They do not get the compensation that is paid to clerks in the large cities who are performing the same service, and when they are efficient the largest sum any of them draws usually does not exceed $500 a year.

Mr. LOUD. What is the salary of your postmaster?

Mr. HEPBURN. Eighteen hundred dollars.

Mr. LOUD. He has a pretty good job, too, has he not?

Mr. HEPBURN. And he is required to pay more than the allowance of $800 to the clerks.

Mr. LOUD. That is because he does nothing himself.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I do not think the gentleman can say that in view of the facts.

Mr. LOUD. What is the town?

Mr. HEPBURN. The town of Clarinda. But all of the county seats, let me say to the gentleman, in my district have been affected in the same way, and I am told by other gentlemen that the reform wave has also struck the other towns, and affected them in the same way, throughout the State.

I earnestly hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment when offered at the proper time will commend itself to the approval of the committee.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that there is not a post-office in the country where the salary of the postmaster is $1,800 but that one person can do all of the work in the office with simply a relief to go to his meals.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to say it, that simply indicates the absolute unfitness of the gentleman for the high position which he now occupies; because if he had the intimate knowledge that he says he has, he would know that that was a misstatement. I know of an office where men are required to be present to receive mail at 6 o'clock in the morning and at 9 o'clock at night. That makes fifteen hours of service. Could the postmaster do that alone? Would you ask him to do that? Is that the measure of compensation that the United States pays to its officers? I do not believe that the House wants to demand that kind of service.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is overdrawing the statement, that is all.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I know what I am talking about.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not know much about this, and I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if there is any classification of the compensation of clerks in post-offices, or any system in reference to the payment of clerks in post-offices, in this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; that would not be in order in this bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SETTLE. There is a separate bill pending before the committee covering that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. How is this money paid out? How does it get to the clerks?

Mr. LOUD. It gets to the clerk under statutory law. We could not change existing law in this bill, and of course the statute now provides for the payment of post-office clerks. We could not change it upon a Post-Office appropriation bill. Neither do we ever assume to say, on the Post-Office appropriation bill, how much money any person shall receive.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. If the gentleman from California will allow me, I should like to ask concerning the item for rent of canceling machines, $40,000. The amount estimated was $60,000. I should like to ask if there is any other information before the committee which justifies the reduction of the appropriation from $60,000, as recommended by the Postmaster-General, to $40,000, as set forth in the report of the committee, except the statement of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, a portion of which is given in the printed report of the committee?

Mr. LOUD. I will state to my friend, in answer to his question, that the discussion of that would properly come up on that item when it is reached; but I will say to the gentleman that the argument of the First Assistant Postmaster-General arrives at but one logical conclusion, which is that he has made a saving of 50 per cent, and hence we should have appropriated only $30,000 if we had followed that statement; but I will present this other fact to the gentleman, that I do not believe, and I do not think the First Assistant Postmaster-General himself to-day will claim, that business methods are now practiced as regards the use of canceling machines. There are 40 machines now in the office at Boston, for which the Government is paying $200 a year each. This canceling-machine business is yet an experiment. My city has not one. It had but two, and under the new system they were taken out. The main office in Boston has 40 canceling machines. I assume to say that that number is 30 or 35 more than Boston could profitably use. There are in the office at New York 29 machines, for which we are paying $200 a year each. I say if the Department will take those machines and distribute them over the country fairly and equitably, we have sufficient machines, under the appropriation of $40,000.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman if he does not recognize that in the large cities, such as Boston and Chicago, the amount of mail matter handled is enormously out of proportion to that handled in the smaller cities?

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that I recognize it well, but my own city of San Francisco handles about as much as the city of Boston, and two machines did all the work in that office that could possibly be done by any machines.

Mr. LACEY. In that connection, I will ask the gentleman if he remembers that in the last appropriation bill it was provided that this money should be applied to the purchasing of canceling machines?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes.

Mr. LACEY. Has any attempt been made to carry out that provision?

Mr. LOUD. No, and it would be injudicious. The machine has not been perfected. It is now, and must be for a number of years a matter of trial, and no office can afford to discharge clerks, and depend wholly upon machines. They have this great number of machines in an office because the machines break down; and I say that in the present condition of the canceling machines, we should simply have a few in these offices until they have arrived at that stage of perfection where they will do away entirely with clerk hire, and where they can be depended upon.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOUD. I do not know that I have the floor.

Mr. BELKNAP. I would like to ask the gentleman one question for information. I note that under the head of "Free-delivery service" for "car-fare and bicycle allowance" the amount appropriated is $100,000. As the gentleman no doubt knows, last year there was expended for that purpose $158,000; and, to well inform myself, as this is a matter which will affect the city which I in part represent, I would ask the gentleman what is the purpose of that reduction?

Mr. LOUD. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to that, that car-fare allowance is one of the most iniquitous provisions that have ever been put in this bill, if I may be permitted to use that word without using it in its offensive sense. The city which I have the honor in part to represent has never had a cent allowance for car fare. The theory upon which we base our reduction of the estimate was that we have inaugurated or propose to inaugurate an electric-car service, and that we propose when these street-car companies contract for carrying the mails on the street cars that they shall carry the carriers free; and we have made that reduction merely upon that basis. Should that not be adopted, I shall ask to recur to the section and insert "$70,000."

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to know whether the committee have retained in the present bill the past policy of providing for experimental free-delivery system in small towns?

Mr. LOUD. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that we have not. It is not asked; but, on the other hand, is condemned as impracticable, unless Congress desires to go into it in such a manner that it can make it practicable by appropriating several million dollars to demonstrate whether it can be made practicable.

Mr. HERMANN. I am not referring to what is known as rural free delivery, but as to that experimental free delivery which was originated some few years ago, and which was confined to small towns, probably in all 42 of them throughout the nation. I will ask my friend again in reference to that.

Mr. LOUD. That system has entirely disappeared, generally on the request, and, if not on the request, with the unanimous consent, of the parties who were receiving this rural free delivery. They did not want it any more.

Mr. HERMANN. Again, with regard to rural free delivery, of which we have heard much in discussion upon this floor, I desire to ask whether the committee have considered the policy of entering upon that?

Mr. LOUD. We have not considered it practicable, unless Congress appropriates $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 for that service.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Have the committee taken into consideration the fact that the city of Chicago has a territory now covering 200 square miles, and that its delivery by carrier is so extensive that the service could never be performed if the letter carriers were required to walk long distances to get to their routes?

Mr. LOUD. That can be obviated to a great extent by the establishment of stations. But, primarily, let me say to you here in all sincerity and honesty that the railroads did carry the carriers free, the same as they carried the policemen. Chicago, I think, was the first city that got "hoggish," if I may use the expression, in this matter and demanded pay from the letter carriers. The practice has now, I am willing to admit, spread out almost over the whole country, except in my own city, where the street-car companies, I will say, carry the carriers free.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Does the gentleman know any way in which a street-car company can be compelled or induced to carry carriers free? If he does, we will be glad to know it in Chicago.

Mr. LOUD. Under the proposition, when we enter into the electric car or cable car service, we would put it in the contract, and if they accept that service they would have to carry the carriers free.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Would it not be time enough when they have accepted the contracts, instead of striking down the carrier system in this way in advance of making such contracts?

Mr. LOUD. You will not strike down anything, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BELKNAP. In Chicago $24,000 is spent for carrier car fare and bicycle allowance.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is so much confusion that we can not hear gentlemen even at this distance.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and gentlemen desiring to ask the gentleman having the floor a question will first address the Chair.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, we will expend during the year $24,000. In this distribution it would reduce the amount given that city 40 per cent, as it does every other, cutting down our amount $9,000, which would certainly cripple our service very seriously. As the gentleman knows, the carrier is allowed a car ticket when his territory is over 1 mile from where he receives his mail. We cover there by our postal service 120 square miles, and it is absolutely necessary that we have this amount for the purpose of getting our men to their territories with dispatch. I say emphatically and without fear of contradiction that the Chicago post-office under the management of the present postmaster has a most economical administration, and I trust that when the time comes, when we reach that point, that the amount will be increased, and I will take the liberty of offering an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman, as Chicago is so persistent, I am free to say that I think there is no fear that it will not be taken care of. Let me say that, so far as Chicago is concerned, we have evidence in our possession that goes to prove conclusively, not in a single instance, but in more than one instance, that letter carriers of the city of Chicago have paid street assessments with car tickets. I say that this is one of the most provoking and pernicious questions that confronts us, and I hope we will not have to go over it until we come to it.

Mr. LORIMER. What does the gentleman mean when he says that street assessments have been paid by car tickets?

Mr. LOUD. As a result of giving car tickets, I say that car tickets have been procured in Chicago, and have not been used for the purpose for which they were given to the carriers. The result is that the carriers get car tickets and do not use them for the purpose for which they were given. That is the substance of the statement.

Mr. LORIMER. What do you mean by the statement? What do we understand by the statement that street assessments are paid in car tickets?

Mr. LOUD. Well, the statement is correct as made, and the evidence is on file with the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. LORIMER. Does the gentleman mean that they pay their special assessments for street improvements with car tickets?

Mr. LOUD. Not perhaps with car tickets, but with the results.

Mr. LORIMER. If the gentleman understands anything about street-car fares in the city of Chicago, he understands that a car ticket is worth 5 cents; and that if the letter carrier having to travel over a mile from the post-office undertakes to walk to his route and return three times a day, as he would be compelled to do under the rules of the department in Chicago, it would take him about four hours of his time to walk back and forth from the post-office.

Mr. LOUD. Not four hours to walk 6 miles, I hope.

Mr. LORIMER. Nine miles. And a great many of the districts to which the carriers are compelled to travel are 3 or more miles from the post-office. If the carrier fails to use his car ticket he must pay 5 cents for his fare.

Mr. LOUD. Not necessarily.

Mr. LORIMER. If he fails to ride on the street car he can not do the work required of him by the Department. So that it is impossible for him to save the car ticket, as the gentleman suggests, for the purpose of paying the special assessment required by the city of Chicago to improve the street in front of his house. I do not believe the gentleman, in the statement he has made, undertakes to say that special assessments are paid with car tickets.

Mr. LOUD. That is the evidence on file in the Post-Office Department. That is as far as I undertake to state.

Mr. LORIMER. Will the gentleman give the names of any persons who have paid their special assessments with car tickets?

Mr. LOUD. The names can be discovered.

Mr. LORIMER. Does the gentleman know the names?

Mr. LOUD. I do not recall them now. I have seen the names.

Mr. LORIMER. Will the gentleman give his authority for the statement he has made?

Mr. LOUD. I say the papers are on file in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. PICKLER. I wish to ask the gentleman from California whether the committee have made any provision for additional compensation in any way to fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. LOUD. We do not appropriate for any particular class of postmasters. We simply appropriate a gross sum for the salaries of postmasters.

Mr. PICKLER. But this matter, Mr. Chairman, has been generally discussed, I believe, throughout the country, and the proposition has certainly come to Congress—I presume to every member of this House—as to the propriety and the justice of Congress providing some increase of compensation for fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. LOUD. They get now all that they collect.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not think that is any answer. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has well said, the post-office service is not run as a money-making affair, but for the accommodation of the people.

As I understand, provision is made in this bill for electric-car service, for the enlargement of the city delivery service, for the extension of service to the suburbs of the cities. For these purposes large additional appropriations are made. For such purposes new features are added to this bill. But, as I understand, nothing is done for the rural districts; nothing for the fourth-class postmasters. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the fourth-class postmasters do more work for nothing than any other Government officials of this nation. There certainly ought to be some additional allowance to these officers. While gentlemen here are providing all these appliances and improvements for the convenience of the cities it does seem to me that something ought to be done for the great body of our constituents, those who live in the rural districts.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman further whether anything is being done in order, for instance, to furnish the thickly settled farming districts with a free-delivery system?

Mr. LOUD. No.

Mr. PICKLER. Has the committee had that matter under consideration?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is now branching out into the field of statutory law, over which this committee has no supervision. If any provision on that subject were introduced into our bill it would be subject to a point of order. That matter has never been presented in any appropriation bill.

Mr. PICKLER. That is exactly what I think we ought to do.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman let me answer his question? He has criticised us for submitting an item for electric-car service——

Mr. PICKLER. I was not criticising the committee at all; but I mentioned that as one of the new items.

Mr. LOUD. It is a new item; but permit me to say that, though we have submitted that item for $150,000, we have reduced the appropriations in the bill $250,000, which amount we are satisfied will be saved by the introduction of the electric-car service. We have provided for this, in the line of economy, not in the line of the extension of the service.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, that may be true, and I would not for a moment criticise the committee or stand in the way of any new departure that they may choose to make in the way of improving the mail service of this country. But the gentleman knows in his interest for economy how this bill will starve the fourth-class postmasters. It is the old system that has been pursued for many years.

I do not know why it is, as was so forcibly presented to the committee recently by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]—I do not know why it is that the cities and the rural districts adjoining them should have the advantage of all the money expended in the postal service and the people who happen to live in the country or in the villages shall have no accommodations. It seems that there is no effort to improve their service, and yet from year to year immense amounts of money are expended in the cities in the way of improving the carrier service, getting new carriers, opening new routes, employing street cars for the transmission of mails, bicycles, and all new appliances that seem practical. But nothing is furnished to the people in the country, who must do with the old service that has been in existence among them ever since the Post-Office Department began its operations. Nothing is done to furnish the country people with better service or quicker delivery. We hear nothing of paying the fourth-class postmasters a dollar more for their services, although they richly earn on an average five times the amount paid to them. I do not think that is an extravagant statement. I am satisfied that they do more work in proportion to the pay accorded to them than any other class of people in this country. It is in fact a low estimate, and the time is coming when we should take that matter up and see to it that Congress shall begin and do something for the rural districts as well as the metropolitan.

I hope the gentleman from California in charge of this bill, when we come to pass upon the amendments to it, will not make a point of order against an amendment helping to pay the fourth-class postmasters something like a fair compensation for their services. Certainly since the passage of the last appropriation bill, where another committee brings in a bill of 16 sections and attaches it to the appropriation bill, we ought not to be very particular about points of order, especially when it is a matter of simple justice to these people that the change shall be made. It is in the direct interest of the people of this country that something of the kind shall be done.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, House bill No. 5473, on the Calendar, is a bill for the purpose of providing rural delivery, such as the gentleman speaks of. That bill is pending now.

Mr. PICKLER. Ah, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Judiciary Committee of this House undoubtedly could have had time to bring in the salary bill that we have been discussing here for the last four or five days, and yet it seems that they were not so certain that they could have the consideration of the bill in the House but what they regarded it as necessary to bring in a rule to permit them to attach that bill to an appropriation bill, a most unheard-of thing.

Now, let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that there are probably eighty out of one hundred chances that that bill will never be reached. I think it almost certain that it will not be reached. It is the tendency in this House and in Congress, and we have seen it exhibited during the sessions of Congress, and it is more apparent every session, that about all the legislation we can expect is to be attached to the appropriation bills. There is no other way, apparently, of getting it through the House. And that is directly in point here. There is no consideration of questions possible which will right the matters that are necessary to be modified in the pending bill. The only way we can do it is by amendments to the bill itself. Our only hope, then, to do something for the fourth-class postmasters is to take the matter in our own hands and do it now, and make a step at all events in the right direction of this and in favor of rural delivery.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend want to increase the salaries of the 60,000 fourth-class postmasters throughout the country?

Mr. PICKLER. I do.

Mr. CANNON. How much?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] has offered an amendment to increase the salary $5 a quarter; that amounts to $20 a year each. How many postmasters did the gentleman say there were?

Mr. CANNON. About 60,000.

Mr. PICKLER. Very well; that will amount to $1,200,000. Now, I am emphatically in favor of that increase.

Mr. CANNON. Is my friend also in favor of what is evidently to be done, so far as you can tell, some time either shortly before November or between next November and the 4th of the coming March, of putting all of the fourth-class postmasters under the civil-service rules? [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Ah, Mr. Chairman, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I only know this much, and that is the only question that we are to deal with now, that these fourth-class postmasters are not to be starved to death.

Mr. KYLE. Will the gentleman from South Dakota allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. KYLE. The gentleman has intimated that there is some discrimination in this bill against the fourth-class postmasters. Now, I wish to ask him if this bill has not been drafted on the same lines with the bills heretofore passed with reference to the fourth-class postmasters? And if there is anything in the bill that discriminates against them I hope he will point it out.

Mr. PICKLER. I will be glad to answer the gentleman from Mississippi. I am satisfied that the gentleman has ten fourth-class post-offices, and perhaps twenty, to one of any other kind in his district, and he knows of these petitions which come up here with reference to salaries of these postmasters. The Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads has had these petitions which have been placed before the committee by the fourth-class postmasters, and they have had the same opportunity of investigating the matter as the rest of us. They have had letters, too, on the subject.

Now, it does not do for the gentleman to say that there is no discrimination in this bill. If you let it go as you have reported it, it is a settled fact that they will get nothing more. You know the necessity of it, the justice of it, and it seems to me you ought to have reported a provision doing something for these fourth-class postmasters. Let the economy come somewhere else. Let the cities bear some of these economies. Let there be something done there to cut down the bill, if that is the great trouble about this. Let the economy come in somewhere else.

Mr. KIEFER. On the Pacific railroads, for instance.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend think that for the last five or six years or longer the fourth-class postmasters have been paid altogether too small salaries?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes. I think the gentleman from Illinois, with his fairness, will not for a moment insist, even when he is trying to keep down appropriations, that the fourth-class postmasters have received compensation enough. I think he will not state that. He knows all about the fourth-class postmasters, and that they are required to exercise just as much care in regard to their offices, that they are required to make the same reports, that they are liable to the Government for losses, that they get into trouble for omissions to make proper and prompt reports. In other words, they are liable to all the regulations, and it is necessary for them to be as careful in the administration of their offices as the postmasters of other offices. But they get next to nothing for it in a large majority of cases. Now, it is a great accommodation to the people to have these post-offices, and these postmasters ought to be paid something. They are paid scarcely a pittance now.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I do not know how it may be in South Dakota, but in Illinois, when a Republican Administration has come in, from time to time, touching these fourth-class postmasters, sometimes when there have been ten, a dozen, or perhaps twenty applicants for a post-office, I have many times thought—

> How happy could I be with either,
> Were t'other dear charmer away!

[Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I am familiar with that delectable experience myself, but that illustration is one which the gentleman ought not to bring in here any more. I do not doubt that there are four or five hundred gentlemen in his district who would be willing to serve the district in Congress at $2,000 a year. And simply because the strong arm of the Government can be brought down upon these officials, because it can say to them, "You can have no more," it is not fair to them to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The gentleman knows that a point of order lies against any legislation on an appropriation bill. Has the gentleman introduced any separate bill at this session for the relief of fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. PICKLER. Plenty of bills have been introduced.

Mr. SWANSON. Have you done it?

Mr. PICKLER. I have no ambition to introduce all the bills in this House.

Mr. SWANSON. Have you ever introduced one such bill while you have been in Congress?

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, must know that a number of such bills have been introduced.

Mr. MILES. Have you been before the Post-Office Committee in the interest of any one of these measures?

Mr. PICKLER. No, I have not. A Post-Office Committee which has not heard from the fourth-class postmasters of this country and which pleads ignorance of the injustice that is done to them could not be enlightened, even by as able a gentleman as myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANSON. We should like to have the gentleman suggest to us on what line we should base their compensation.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, that is a matter that should be formulated by the Post-Office Committee. The suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas, to give them $20 a year additional, is better than nothing. That seems to me very small indeed, and I should like more, but it is a suggestion in the right direction. I do not want to detain the committee, but I hope, when we come to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, the committee will favorably consider it. I am not criticising the committee. I know this white street car, which runs up and down Pennsylvania avenue, looks very nice. I do not know how much good it accomplishes. It is a thing of beauty, and a thing of beauty is a joy forever. I know it looks well, and I am heartily with the committee in any improvement they may make; but, gentlemen, I do insist that it is not fair to leave out the country districts eternally.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will now ask that general debate be closed on this bill, except as to the paragraph suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. SWANSON. I insist that the debate shall proceed in the regular order, and that when general debate is closed we proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LOUD. Then I will move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6614) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

GRANTING CONDEMNED CANNON TO NATIONAL GUARD, NEW YORK.

Mr. HOOKER. Before that is done, Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent to pass a small bill. It will not take more than a minute.

Mr. LOUD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4463) to grant two condemned cannon and cannon balls to the Thirteenth Separate Company National Guard of State of New York.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Thirteenth Separate National Guard of the State of New York, for their armory at Jamestown, N. Y., two condemned cannon and sufficient cannon balls: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—ALDRICH VS. ROBBINS.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, the minority of the Committee on Elections No. 1 report their inability to file their answer or minority report to-night, and desire to do so to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent that they may have that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the minority in the contested-election case of Aldrich vs. Robbins may have permission to file their views to-morrow morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from California, the Chair desires to present a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3964) to reorganize the customs collection district of Alaska;

A bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 98) directing the Secretary of War to submit a plan and estimate for the further improvement of Conneaut Harbor, in the State of Ohio.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAHON, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEELE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MAHANY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STRAIT, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House will now take a recess until 8 o'clock, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will please take the chair at that time.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. HEPBURN as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report clause 2 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the special rule.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, I desire to submit a remark or two, not, however, opposing the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to go into Committee of the Whole, because I shall vote for it myself, notwithstanding the fact that there is not here now and there never has been here on a Friday night session a sufficient number to make up a quorum before going into Committee of the Whole. I do not propose to call a quorum upon any of these questions, but just to say that it seems to me from the various reports that are coming in here daily from the Committee on Invalid Pensions that there is too much of a disposition at least to report favorably upon every claim without regard to its merits, without regard to information upon the claim, without regard to certificates, without regard to affidavits, without regard to the testimony, or anything of the sort.

I judge of this from the reports brought in here; not that I have any quarrel whatever with the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I admire their zeal and earnestness in this matter; but I just desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that it may be better, as the question has been raised by gentlemen on the other side of the House, by gentlemen not from the South but from the North, that they are rushing in too great a hurry in passing claims such as are not meritorious. For instance, on several nights we have passed claims here for widows who have remarried; and we have repeatedly passed bills here to remove charges of desertion. Possibly some of them were just and the charges ought to have been removed. But I desire before we go into Committee of the Whole to call the attention of the House, especially gentlemen on the other side, to the fact that I think it would be very much better if they would put in the background such claims as these and bring forward those which are meritorious. I stand ready to support any meritorious claim, and I voted for every claim except one last week, and that was the claim of a remarried widow. I stand ready to advocate what I think is a just and honest claim, and I think it proper before we go into Committee of the Whole to suggest to the chairman of the committee and to gentlemen on the other side if it would not be better for them to put aside such claims as those to which I have referred and let us pass on claims which are meritorious; and having said that, I do not propose to raise the question of no quorum, or to vote against the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, but only desire to enter my protest against unjust claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills under the special rule.

ISAAC N. WILLIAMS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac N. Williams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac N. Williams, Company F, First Regiment Eighth Michigan Engineers, of Newburg, Mich., and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case is very explicit. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac N. Williams, having carefully considered the evidence, respectfully report:

The reports from the records of the War Department show that this soldier served in Company F, First Michigan Engineers and Mechanics, from August 21, 1864, to June 6, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. On November 7, 1877, he filed a claim for pension under the general pension laws, alleging that while in the service he received an injury causing hernia, and that he contracted a disease of the skin. That claim was rejected April 6, 1892, on the ground of "No record" and claimant's inability after special examination to prove origin in the service and in line of duty. The soldier appealed from the action of the Pension Office, but the rejection was sustained by the Secretary of the Interior.

On May 7, 1892, a claim was filed under the act of June 27, 1890. A medical examination was made August 10, 1892, by a full board of surgeons at Kalamazoo, Mich., who reported that he was four-eighteenths disabled by disease of digestive system, four-eighteenths by rheumatism, six-eighteenths by disease of the heart, and ten-eighteenths by eczema, making an aggregate of twenty-four eighteenths. On this he was allowed a pension of $6 per month. When he indicated that he was dissatisfied with his rating he was informed through his attorney that he could file a new declaration. Having received a pension of only $6 for a twenty-four-dollar disability, he was naturally reluctant to submit the matter again to the Pension Office, and asks that he be pensioned at a rate proportionate to the degree of his disability by special act of Congress.

Your committee believe from the evidence as set forth in this report that he is justly entitled to $12 per month, and they recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 5, the words "pension laws," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "act of June 27, 1890," and that as so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be amended by striking out the word "Eighth," in the seventh line, and inserting the word "First," as I believe there was no Eighth Regiment of Engineers in Michigan. It was the First. That seems to be an error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill reads "the First Michigan Engineers."

Mr. THOMAS. The copy I have before me reads "the Eighth."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out the word "Eighth" and insert the word "First." Without objection, that will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I also ask to have stricken out the words "of Newburg, Mich."

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is a bill that we ought to pass. I think the report clearly shows it. If anybody has listened to the report, or has taken the trouble to read it, I think he ought to be reasonably satisfied that this is not a bill for this House to take favorable action on. A part of it reads:

Having received a pension of only $6 for a twenty-four-dollar disability, he was naturally reluctant to submit the matter again to the Pension Office, and asks that he be pensioned at a rate proportionate to the degree of his disability by special act of Congress.

That is, the applicant, in a petulant fit, says, "I will not go to the Pension Bureau any more. I will go to another authority, and I will get my pension there."

It seems that General Bussey and General Raum were the officials to whom he took special exception; they seem to have so irritated him that he will make no further application at the Pension Office. Now, if we are going to begin the policy of pensioning people by special acts when they can probably be pensioned in the Pension Office, the sooner we know that such is to be the policy the better. I trust that this bill will not be pressed, because if it is I shall be constrained to ask that a quorum vote for it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the criticism made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] on this case is hardly just, because, as he will remember, the evidence was reviewed in the Committee on Invalid Pensions and showed that the board of examining surgeons rated this man at $24 a month; that the medical referee, an officer of the Pension Bureau—not Colonel Bussey—Colonel Bussey's decision was not upon the amount of the rating, but upon the previous application which was rejected years before—the law of 1890 for this disability would have given this man $12 a month, but the medical referee in his wisdom saw fit to allow only $6 a month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Who ruled upon the question on May 7, 1892?

Mr. THOMAS. That was no ruling. The application was simply rejected by the action of the medical referee of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is a very singular case. According to the report, the "full board of surgeons" who examined this man's case "reported that he was four-eighteenths disabled by disease of digestive system, four-eighteenths by rheumatism, six-eighteenths by disease of the heart, and ten-eighteenths by eczema, making an aggregate of twenty-four eighteenths." Certainly, as these figures show more than a total disability, the man must be dead; he must have gone clear over. [Laughter.] I think the bill ought to be passed so as to help pay his funeral expenses. [Laughter.] I shall vote for the pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 67, noes 3.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of no quorum. [Cries of "Count!" "Count!"] The Chair suggests that there be a count by tellers.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for tellers. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] Well, I withdraw the call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to sustain the point of no quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

Several MEMBERS. Count! Count!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not count members who are in the cloakroom. A count by tellers would probably have developed the presence of a quorum without any trouble. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. PICKLER. Since the adoption in this Congress of the rule making 100 a quorum in Committee of the Whole, it has been the custom when the point of no quorum has been made for the Chair to count and see whether there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair counted, and there was not a quorum in the Hall. Probably there would have been a quorum if members in the cloakroom had come in, and therefore the Chair suggested that there be a count by tellers. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] was called away——

The CHAIRMAN. Excuses are not in order on this call.

The roll call being concluded, the committee, under the rule, rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GROSVENOR reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar having found itself without a quorum, he had thereupon directed the roll to be called (which disclosed the presence of a quorum), and he now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. The roll call shows 111 members present. A quorum having been disclosed, the Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the rule, will resume its session.

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When will excuses be in order for members who are not present?

A MEMBER. They ought to be here.

The House, in accordance with the rule, again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS], that the pending bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I should like to know whether any remarks or an inquiry would be in order now before we take the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is now too late for debate.

Mr. PICKLER. The vote had been announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote had been taken on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry, if it be proper at this time. I should like to be permitted if possible to make some remarks upon the bill if now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it can only be done now by unanimous consent, but will submit the request of the gentleman. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from Ohio to address the committee at this time?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay the bill aside with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL BURRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2320) for the relief of Samuel Burrell.

The bill was read, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now on the records of the War Department against Samuel Burrell, late first lieutenant of Company M, Fifth Illinois Cavalry Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge, to date from November 25, 1862.

The report (by Mr. GRIFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2320) for the relief of Samuel Burrell, having had the same under consideration, report that a similar bill, with the proviso hereinafter mentioned and recommended, was reported favorably upon and passed the House in the Fifty-first and Fifty-third Congresses.

In the Fifty-second Congress the Committee on Military Affairs submitted the following report:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2517) for the relief of Samuel Burrell, having had the same under consideration, beg to report that this applicant was mustered into the service in December, 1861, as first lieutenant of Company M, Fifth Illinois Cavalry, and was dishonorably discharged for absence without proper authority by sentence of a commission under date of April 3, 1863.

"The evidence shows that Lieutenant Burrell, being disabled, did, under the advice of the surgeon of his regiment, tender his resignation in September, 1862, and at the same time received a leave of absence.

"The leave of absence was renewed once and the surgeon's certificate forwarded. His colonel, from time to time, informed him that he need have no apprehension, that his resignation would be accepted, and that it was not necessary for him to return to his regiment. He, however, did return to his regiment as soon as he was able to travel, still suffering from extreme disability caused by chronic diarrhea, and he was again returned to his home, receiving proper passes to go through the lines and an order for transportation, with the authority of the colonel of his regiment—said papers being still in existence. He again returned to his regiment, but was not placed on duty, the evidence showing that he was unfit for it, but no report had as yet been made upon his resignation. He was then called before a commission, which found that he had been technically guilty of being absent without leave, the authority derived from the colonel of his regiment not being sufficient under military law, and he was accordingly dishonorably discharged for absence without proper authority.

"Your committee believe that Lieutenant Burrell did all a man could do to avoid violation of military law, but was too ill to properly appreciate technicalities and avoid them, and that he evinced a desire to perform duty and retain rank in the position he held; they therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended by adding that 'he shall receive no pay or allowance by virtue of the passage of this act.'"

Which report was adopted and approved by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Fifty-third Congress, and which last committee further reported that—

"On the 12th of March, 1863, the officer in the temporary command of the regiment sent a report to the War Department stating that Mr. Burrell had absented himself without leave, and recommended his discharge, while on the 25th of March, 1863, thirteen days after making the above recommendation, the officer in command of the regiment wrote Mr. Burrell at his home, stating that his resignation had not yet been acted upon and advising Mr. Burrell not to return until they received notice of the action of the War Department; that during the time Mr. Burrell was absent he was advised from time to time by the commanding officer that it was not necessary for him to return until notified, and that Burrell was acting in good faith during his absence; that he returned to his command of his own accord before he was really able to do military duty, and was in the service at the time his discharge was ordered; that the evidence here presented has never been heard or considered by any commission."

The records of the War Department, as furnished to accompany S. 3051, Fifty-first Congress, first session, show that the dismissal from the service was of date April 15, 1863, and that the bill should be amended accordingly.

Your committee adopts and approves the reports of the several Committees on Military Affairs of the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third congresses, and recommends that the bill H. R. 2320 do pass, with the following amendments, viz:

Strike out all of line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the words: "April 13, 1863"; also by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowance by virtue of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that this bill does not come properly before the committee to-night under the rule. I make objection to it because the bill states in substance that the man has been before a military commission or court-martial and has received a sentence of the court. I submit, therefore, that it does not come before the committee under the rule. It says in the report:

He was then called before a commission, which found that he had been technically guilty of being absent without leave. The authority derived from the colonel of his regiment not being sufficient under military law, he was accordingly dishonorably discharged for absence without proper authority.

There is the sentence of a military commission, which amounts to a sentence of a court-martial. I submit, therefore, that it is not in order under the rule to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this is a bill to remove a charge of desertion and comes clearly within the rule.

Mr. TALBERT. I know that it is a bill to remove the charge of desertion; but this man having been before a military commission, amounting to a military tribunal, and having been sentenced under the authority of that commission, I claim that it takes it out of the jurisdiction of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES P. HURLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3216) granting an increase of pension to James P. Hurley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James P. Hurley, private Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, to $30 per month in lieu of that he now receives.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report by (Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3216) granting increase of pension to James P. Hurley, have carefully considered the same and respectfully report:

James P. Hurley enlisted in Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, on October 8, 1861, and was discharged therefrom on surgeon's certificate of disability August 29, 1862. On September 1, 1864, he enlisted in Company C, Thirteenth Veteran Reserve Corps, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability October 17, 1864.

The evidence shows that during the early part of August, 1862, the soldier was injured in the spine, ribs, and head by reason of a collision, which took place near the mouth of the Potomac River, between a transport on which he was and another vessel. He received hospital treatment near Alexandria, Va., on August 15, 1862, and fourteen days afterwards was discharged on account of "obscure disease of the heart, with great debility and shortness of breath," but the records show no diagnosis of his case. At the date of his enlistment in the Veteran Reserve Corps he was, according to the records, suffering from "the effects of fever, contracted in line of duty," and his discharge of October 17, 1864, was because of "valvular disease of heart and general debility; unfit for the Veteran Reserve Corps." The discharge certificate further states that "said soldier has been of no use whatever since enlistment, and, in my opinion, never will be." The evidence as to prior soundness is unusually full.

The soldier made application for pension December 31, 1879, but the claim was rejected in 1883 on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability from injury to ribs, back, and kidneys since discharge. In recent years, however, his infirmities have rapidly been growing worse, and now, at the age of 63, he is totally disabled. He can get around only on crutches; has an ulcerated limb, partial paralysis of right arm, and passive congestion of the brain, causing mental confusion and difficulty in articulating. His wife is 60 years old, and very feeble. His only child, a son of 26, is in the last stages of consumption. They have no property of any kind, and are wholly dependent on a pension of $12 granted the soldier for total incapacity under the act of June 27, 1890.

In view of all the facts, your committee respectfully report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, at the risk of being subjected to criticism, I want to offer a few suggestions with reference to this bill and with reference to pensions generally. I wanted to be heard on the other bill, proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS], but under the rule could not obtain the floor at that time.

Now, if it is to be the policy of the Committee of the Whole to venture on the consideration of bills where the claimant is entitled to obtain a pension or an increase of pension under the general law, and fails to make out his case to the satisfaction of the Department, and we are to introduce bills here to grant pensions or increase pensions for any such reason as that, then we might just as well resolve that this Congress shall be turned into a pension bureau at once, for we will do no other business. I have written to at least a hundred constituents of mine since this Congress opened, in response to inquiries, that if a party is entitled to a pension under the general law, even though he does not get what he desires to get, that Congress would not pass special bills for their relief. I believe that ought to be the policy, and I understand that to be the policy on which we have been acting.

Now, take the case of a claimant who presents on his own behalf an equitable and a strong case, presents it under the general law to the Bureau, and receives some pension. He is not satisfied with the rating allowed him and wants more, and can not get it under the general law, but comes here, asks some one to introduce a special bill for his behalf, expects Congress to take the case out of the hands of the Department, and grant him that increase of pension. That is, he asks us to grant what was refused by the Department; or where it failed to grant a pension according to the idea of the claimant, a pension bill is to be introduced and we are asked to give it our sanction and allow it to pass this House. I submit if that is to be the policy, we ought to proclaim it at once. But I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this House will place itself in that position. I submit that we ought to define our status with reference to these bills clearly, that we should have a general rule of action with reference to them all, and stand on that principle before the House and before the country. If it becomes known that this Congress will undertake to pass bills to grant pensions simply because the Pension Bureau will not grant a pension, or where a claimant has failed under the general law, and where his only claim is under that law, then we will have a hundred thousand of them as fast as they can be introduced, and each one of us might just as well employ a clerk at once to write them.

Private pensions ought to be granted only for technical reasons, when the Pension Bureau can not grant them under the law. We ought not to stand up here and say the Department and the administration of that Bureau is not of our faith, and that is the reason that we will pass these bills. I submit that I feel myself as much outraged as anybody can feel with reference to the action of the Bureau in pension cases. But that does not afford any ground for taking the position that we are to overrule the Bureau in all cases.

In the speech that I had the honor to make before this House some time ago I called the attention of the House to a case where a man was drawing $27 a month for a number of years and was cut off by the Department on the ground that his proof did not sustain the claim. I submit that if the bill which was just passed here at the instance of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS] is rightly passed, then I ought to introduce a bill to pension my man Hood at the rate of $27, and I ought to introduce a hundred bills which I have declined to introduce at this session of Congress. I favor pensions as much as any human being can. The man or woman does not live who dares to challenge my loyalty to pensions; but I submit that before I vote upon these matters I want some well-defined principle, some well-defined rule that we can stand by here and stand by before the country. I submit that the very question here is one where, although the Pension Department may have outraged the claimant, yet his case is under the law, and we ought not to take it out and make it special.

I make these remarks, not because I think I will not be criticised, but because I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact there is some point at which we must stop. We must not pension every claimant who presents a private bill here on the principle that we are pensioning all. We should have some well-defined policy. Now, if this case falls under the rule for granting private pensions, let us understand it, so that every member of Congress can pension his friends, if possible, although it will take one hundred and fifty years to pass all the private bills that might be introduced in cases just like this. I submit we ought to call a halt upon this matter. I submit we ought to adopt rules upon which we can stand here and stand before the country, rules which we can urge upon our constituents and the hundreds of claimants who are all the time presenting their appeals to us to aid them in pension matters.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] does not feel it in consonance with his conscience to vote for this bill. Now, the Committee on Invalid Pensions are under obligations to all these gentlemen who have so much advice to give. We take it in good part. I think the Committee on Invalid Pensions always get a great deal of advice from Congress.

The gentleman wants a well-defined policy. I want to know how a case could present a more equitable appeal to Congress than this case? Note the last paragraph of the report. I will only detain the committee for a moment. Here is a man who, having done the best he can at the Pension Office under the law of 1890, gets $12 a month. This soldier made an application for a pension on December 31, 1879, but the claim was rejected in 1883 on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability from injury to ribs, back, and kidneys since discharge. In recent years, however, his infirmities have rapidly been growing worse, and now, at the age of 63, he is totally disabled. He can get around only on crutches; has an ulcerated limb, partial paralysis of right arm, and passive congestion of the brain, causing mental confusion and difficulty in articulating. His wife is 60 years old and very feeble. His only child, a son of 26, is in the last stages of consumption. They have no property of any kind, and are wholly dependent on a pension of $12 granted the soldier for total incapacity under the act of June 27, 1890. The committee reported favorably on this bill. We reported in favor of $30 a month. That is what the law says any man who is totally incapacitated from earning a living by manual labor shall have. The man is 63 years old. His wife is 60 years old. They have a consumptive son. He gets $12 a month, and yet the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] criticises the Invalid Pensions Committee because we allow a pension in such a case as that. If the Republicans of Ohio are not in favor o, pensioning such a man as that, I think they need a little education, and I hope my friend will go back and give it to them.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Are there not tens of thousands of men who under the act of 1890 can get only $12 a month, and yet who are totally disabled?

Mr. PICKLER. No, I think not.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, I can count you hundreds of such cases.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman has any such constituents—I know his fairness and I am not criticising him, and we want the views of the members of this House and their opinions on this pension legislation. We do not want to be bringing bills here if it is not the will of this House that such pensions shall be granted. We are only the servants of this House. But, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the gentleman will not find five cases in his district like that of this man.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I can find you a hundred.

Mr. PICKLER. No, not where the man is sick and on crutches; where he is 63 years old; where he is utterly helpless; where he has an ulcerated leg; where he seems to be debilitated in every way; but if the gentleman has fifty such cases and will bring them before the committee, this House will say "Amen" to the proposition to grant them pensions, and they ought to have them. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MILES. Will my friend permit me?

Mr. PICKLER. I yield to the gentleman on my left.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I want to ask the gentleman this question for information: I want to know when a man is totally helpless, so that he can absolutely do nothing, and comes in under the law of 1890, as he does in this case, will the committee raise it to $30? I ask that because I have several cases of that kind.

Mr. THOMAS. Not under the law of 1890.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is the very law under which this man has come in.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, of course, gentlemen——

Mr. THOMAS. He was entitled under the other law.

Mr. PICKLER. Under the law of 1890, of course, gentlemen all understand they can get but $12 a month. As I understand, and as I have always understood, it is the province of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when you find such a case as the gentleman describes, that can not be helped in the Pension Office, that especially appeals to Congress; and this is one of those cases. Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota if there is not a reasonable probability that these injuries were the result of his service?

Mr. PICKLER. That is practically conceded.

Mr. HULL. I would ask if the committee has not in considering these cases, where there is a simple lack of proof and the Pension Office is not able to act, considered that a case for relief?

Mr. PICKLER. That is the way we have understood.

Mr. HULL. There is another question I would like to ask the gentleman, and that is, if the Committee on Invalid Pensions would consent to give $30 to a man whether his injuries were received since the war or not? The act of 1890 relates to their condition since the war.

Mr. PICKLER. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has no rule as to that. There may be cases where the disabilities have not perhaps been incurred during the war, and yet that a man is in a helpless condition, when he is on his bed, with his family dependent on him, where he has been a soldier in the defense of his country, and has everything to appeal to our hearts and humanity, when we do not think we can reject such a case as that; and this is a case of that kind. Now I will yield to my colleague on the committee for a question.

Mr. MILES. Then hear me make one point.

Mr. PICKLER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MILES. Then address yourself to that, because I do not want to talk. I think I have done too much of that already. I just want to ask you if you have not jumped the main question, to wit, that there has never been anything to show that this man's disease is of service origin?

Mr. PICKLER. That is what the Pension Office thought; but we deny it.

Mr. MILES. Now, just discuss that point.

Mr. PICKLER. That is going too far. The Pension Office does not deny, that I know of, and I do not know that they raise that question. They thought there was no pensionable degree of disability in 1883, and possibly not in 1890, and this committee says that many years have passed and this man is probably in a great deal worse condition than when his claim was rejected in 1883.

Mr. MILES. Would it not have been better to make an application at some time during all these years since 1883?

Mr. PICKLER. He did make an application in 1879 and in 1883, and was refused.

Mr. MILES. But 1883 is thirteen years ago.

Mr. PICKLER. But he made the application under the act of 1890. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a righteous case in this Congress at this session, I believe this is one.

Mr. FISCHER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly.

Mr. FISCHER. An impression has gone forth, I know, with reference to the number of pension bills that have been reported and passed. Will you kindly tell how many bills have been introduced and how many have been favorably reported?

Mr. PICKLER. Between 1,600 and 1,700 have been introduced, and I think about 100 have been reported favorably. I believe we are reporting what we ought to. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, if he wants to say anything.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the applicant in this case, James Hurley, is personally known to me. This bill was introduced by myself. I can say that this man is injured to such a degree that he is, and has been for years, totally incapacitated for any manual labor. I have here a letter signed by the officers of the John Hancock Veteran Union and by Past Grand Commander of the United States J. H. Roberts of that order, of which no man is allowed to become a member unless he has served in some of the pitched battles of the war, stating that they know of their personal knowledge that this man is and has been for a long time totally incapacitated from any manual labor.

Mr. Chairman, twice he enlisted. When he first entered the Army his condition physically was as good as that of any man in the military service. Twice he was discharged for disability. From the time that he returned to his home in 1864 until the present moment he has been suffering, becoming gradually worse and worse until reaching his present condition.

In regard to his application in 1883, I wish to say that he applied then for a pension on certain narrow grounds which the examining surgeons found not to be justifiable; but if he had based his application at that time on the broader grounds given by the surgeons at the time of his discharge from the service, his pension would have been granted.

Mr. Hurley is a proud man, an honorable man, a man who stands high in the community in which he lives. He is not a man to apply for a pension which he does not deserve. He did not go to the front to serve for a short time. He was in the service of the country from 1861 up to 1864. I say that if any man or his wife or his household or those around him are deserving the respect and confidence of this House, we have in the case of James Hurley one deserving of the highest consideration.

I trust that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY], however much he may object to other cases less deserving, will not oppose the application of this man, who is entirely helpless and entirely dependent on the meager sum which he gets from the Government, who is to-day suffering for want of the necessaries of life because of his inability to work. I hope my friend from Ohio will spare the chastening rod in this case, and apply it in some direction more worthy and where less injustice will be done.

Do justice to this man, and correct the general law, if need be, later.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I should not feel at liberty to address myself to the committee again were it not for the fact that the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee has seen fit to go outside this case and speak of the loyalty of the members from the State of Ohio. I am not a member of that committee, but in these matters I trust it is not necessary for me to file an affidavit to show that I am as loyal as the gentleman from South Dakota. I will not stand here and have my motives impugned because I honestly raise a question upon these pension cases. I care not what the gentleman from South Dakota may say, I am not here objecting except on a fair consideration of the circumstances of the case.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] has seen fit to appeal to me because he is acquainted with this man and believes his claim to be equitable. I am assuming that the claimant in this case is an honorable man and was a brave soldier. But when I say that, I must concede that there are many hundreds of thousands of men who in the service were as brave as he; and I will add that there are many, very many, thousands of men whose appeals to Congress upon the ground of humanity rest upon as strong ground as his. I can name two gentlemen in my own village whom I have known for years, who are getting only $12 a month and who ought to have as much as may be granted to this man. If this bill is to pass, I see no reason why I should not at once introduce bills to increase their pensions from $12 a month to $30 or $40 a month. I see no reason why hundreds of bills of that kind should not be introduced.

There is one case of a man who lives at Norfolk, Va., a man absolutely bedridden and helpless, who is receiving only $12 a month. I do not see why he should not receive $72 a month, for he was a captain. His case appeals strongly to the sympathies of the people and of Congress. Give me time and I could name a hundred other cases making an appeal equally strong with that which this man presents.

This is not a question of humanity altogether. It is not a question whether we shall now pay thirty, forty, or fifty dollars a month to a man to whom a previous Congress has seen fit to grant $12 a month. If such a man as that should have $30 a month pension let us then pass a general law giving every man who can make the same proof a pension of $30, and then take the whole matter out of the House, where we will have trouble with it no more.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Did the persons to whom the gentleman refers have certificates of discharge which certified that they were subject to that disability when discharged?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not know whether they have such a discharge or not. Most soldiers have not. I know that in the case of one of those I named, where a man applied under the general law, he simply failed to show that the disability was of service origin, just as 200,000 other applicants are failing to show to-day. Now, if we pension one of these under such circumstances, where he can not show the service origin of the disability, I say let us pass a general law pensioning all of them. These men are now disabled; and if under the law of 1890, although they fail to show that the disability was of service origin, they can have the pension increased to $30 or $50 a month by Congress—I say if they can do that, let us have a general pension law; let the Committee on Pensions report a general act increasing the pensions of all of them to $30 or $50 a month, and I will vote for it; I will vote for every just pension bill; I am in favor of pension legislation, but I only ask that we have uniformity in this matter; that we treat all alike. If we pass this bill, is there any reason for not having a general act, a law covering every one of these cases, instead of having Congress pass here and there a special case, making a special exception in favor of some man?

Mr. Chairman, I think that where we have a general act covering pensions, and a man gets a pension under it, we ought not to extend that general pension act to cover one or two cases only, to increase a pension here and there, and let all of the rest go under the general law. Where is the justice in such a proceeding as that?

But, sir, when I took my stand on this question I said I expected criticism. I did not expect the gentleman from South Dakota to challenge my loyalty in order to carry his point against me.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman himself brought in politics in connection with the matter. But I desire now to withdraw everything I said in reference to the gentleman. [Applause.] I know that the Republicans of Ohio are loyal, and I had no idea of doing more than stirring the gentleman up on this question.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But even that, the gentleman will see, does not settle the matter. We ought, as reasonable, as sensible men, to advance some principle, to adopt some rule, that will reach the largest number of cases, and ought not to place ourselves in a position before the country by special act favoring one or two men, giving them a pension of thirty or fifty dollars a month, where a general law could reach everyone who is entitled to it under the same conditions. I repeat, I will vote for a general act covering all of these cases, but I am not in favor of passing special acts that are already covered by the general law.

I do not believe that a pensioner ought to be permitted to go to the poorhouse or to be buried in the potters' field. I think this Government is great enough and strong enough and rich enough, and it ought to be generous enough, to take care of every man who served it in time of its need, and they should be so taken care of that no old soldier need ever be sent to the poorhouse or die and be buried in the potters' field. But I submit that whatever relief we give in these cases ought to be done under some general act that would appeal to the sense of justice of our fellow-citizens, and not present what might be regarded properly as special favoritism in isolated cases. If we are to pass special acts we will never get through with the consideration of this matter. Only here and there a worthy soldier will be pensioned, and the other thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands will go to paupers' graves because they can not be pensioned by Congress for want of time.

I am not here, Mr. Chairman, questioning the rights of our pensioners to a pension, but I only insist that common justice demands that there shall be regularity about the granting of pensions, and when we pass a general act covering all of these cases we can stand by our action, we can justify ourselves to our consciences, to our constituents, to the worthy pensioners throughout the country, and to all the claimants throughout the land who are looking to us for justice in these matters.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, who has just taken his seat, seems to be seriously perturbed because a general law can not be framed, or has not been framed, to affect this particular case. To my mind, sir, this is just such a case as ought to be here. It is here for the purpose of correcting an error on the part of the Pension Office, and this is the only tribunal in which that error can be corrected. I submit to the gentleman from Ohio that this is the court of appeals from the Pension Office, and of necessity it must be so, or else there can be no remedy for wrongs committed. [Applause.]

Is it true that all the blunders committed there should go without repair or without remedy because there is no tribunal? I insist that if this was a case at law, and if that gentleman was sitting as the court of appeals upon it, he would not hesitate to say as a lawyer that the lower court had been guilty of a blunder, and that such a condition of things was disclosed by the record as demanded redress.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is it not true that every claimant who applies for a pension and is rejected because the Department sees no pensionable disability, can appeal on the same ground to Congress and obtain a pension on precisely the same principle?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly he can. Every man can appeal here; but every man can not get relief unless he makes out his case. Seventeen hundred cases are pending in that committee, and yet, after a lapse of three months, only a hundred or a hundred and fifty cases have been reported by the committee so much criticised by the gentleman from Ohio; not one in ten of all those that have been brought here has been considered by the committee. Just let me call your attention to the proofs that show so clearly that an error has been committed, that an appeal should be had, and that this is the tribunal in which to try that appeal.

Mr. Chairman, you will bear in mind that the committee have found that the evidence as to the prior soundness of this soldier was unusually full. He was a hale, stalwart, able-bodied man when he entered the service of the United States. Now, was his disability incurred in the service? See what the proofs show:

The evidence shows that during the early part of August, 1862, the soldier was injured in the spine, ribs, and head by reason of a collision, which took place near the mouth of Potomac River, between a transport on which he was and another vessel.

In the line of duty this hale man received these serious injuries after his enlistment. But again the proof shows that—

He received hospital treatment near Alexandria, Va., on August 15, 1862—

Another evidence of incurring disability in the service.

But further—

And fourteen days afterwards was discharged on account of "obscure disease of the heart, with great debility and shortness of breath."

There is not a complete diagnosis of his case, but here it is in proof that this stalwart, able-bodied man was so diseased——

Mr. MILES. Will my friend answer a question right there?

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). And diseased in such a way that we may well infer that it resulted from this collision, where he was injured in the ribs, back, and head.

Mr. MILES. The gentleman has inadvertently stated that there was "no complete record." The statement in the report is:

But the records show no diagnosis of his case.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, but there is a certificate showing his disability, showing for what cause he was discharged, and that certificate was made undoubtedly by a medical officer, or by some competent proof to the discharging officer. That language could never have gotten into his certificate of discharge unless there had been a medical certificate there guiding the officer who gave him his discharge. But to go on a little further, Mr. Chairman. He again went into the service, as many other men did, into the veteran reserve corps. It was made up of men who had suffered from disease, men who were not sound, not able to do duty in the field, but used for the purpose of garrisoning forts and performing other duty of that kind. His enlistment and acceptance in the reserve corps was almost a guarantee that he was unfit for the other duties of a soldier. He went into that corps, and at the date of his enlistment in the veteran reserve corps he was, according to the record—suffering from "the effects of fever, contracted in line of duty," and his discharge of October 17, 1864, was because of "valvular disease of heart and general debility; unfit for the Veteran Reserve Corps."

Mark you, Mr. Chairman, there are the same diseases mentioned in this certificate of discharge as are found in the other. This hale, hearty man entered the service in the fall of 1861 and was discharged twice for the same causes. But again:

The discharge certificate further states that "said soldier has been of no use whatever since enlistment, and, in my opinion, never will be." The evidence as to prior soundness is unusually full.

What better evidence could you have that a mistake has been made by the Pension Office—a mistake that ought to be corrected somewhere? And there is no other tribunal than this that can correct it. Gentlemen prate about their affection for the soldier, get up here and deliver homilies declaring how anxious they are upon all occasions to do justice to this band of veterans, and yet they indulge in these carping, petty, miserable criticisms when the occasion comes for them to vote, always asking for some impossible thing—a general pension law that they say they are the most earnest of all men to support. I say that the time to support the old soldier is when his bill is pending. [Applause.] Then is the time when he wants your support. If the gentleman is so swift in his zeal, why does he not prepare the character of bill that he wants? Why criticise the committee? Why put himself upon this pedestal of superior virtue and try to lecture the whole Republican party as represented here for fear that they will do some injustice in the way of favorable reports and favorable action in pensioning the old soldiers. [Applause.]

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Vote!" Vote!"] Gentlemen, I hope you will be patient with me a moment. I am a member of this Invalid Pensions Committee, and I do not want to say anything that will damage this case. I hope I approach the question in a judicial frame of mind, and I want to do justice to this soldier. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I think he has very ably cleared up one branch of his case, at least to the satisfaction of most of the members of this House. Now, all I ask is this: It does not appear from this report that there has been any application for a pension which would entitle this man to $30 a month since 1883. He applied, as I understand it, under the act of 1890 and got a pension of $12 a month. Now, does it not occur to the gentleman and to the other side of the House that in these thirteen years during which time his condition has been so bad, according to the report, and during which time he has taken no appeal to the higher court, he might have gone to and made his case before the Pension Office? That is a singular thing.

Mr. HEPBURN. I can only say in response to that inquiry that he has tried it in 1879, and again unsuccessfully he tried it in 1883, and then he made his application under the act of 1890, challenging attention to the old case that he had made before——

Mr. MILES. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). And failing to receive anything more than the pension under the act of 1890 he might well distrust the justness of the tribunal. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COFFIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILES. Yes, sir.

Mr. COFFIN. I ask you if you have had any experience in regard to getting pensions through the Pension Department; and if you have, do not you think that the chances are in favor of this man dying before the pension will be granted? That is my experience.

Mr. MILES. I really do not know, sir. I have found the people of the Pension Office very considerate. I have found them as clever to me as the average Washington official.

Mr. COFFIN. I think they are very deliberate, if considerate.

Mr. MILES. Now, I want to say to my friend from Maryland, that is not a very weighty suggestion you have made. That has nothing whatever to do with what I want to impress upon my friend, who made a very able argument, and I congratulated him on it; and I here and now congratulate him upon his entire speech. Upon one branch of this case he showed great power of analysis. He analyzed one branch of this case to my entire satisfaction. With perfect candor and frankness, and in a spirit of fair play, I ask him to analyze another part of this case. It is not the practice of the Pension Office to go back to a case that is thirteen years old and take the evidence in that case and apply it to the case of a man who applies under the act of 1890 for a pension under that act.

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILES. I will, with pleasure, in a moment. What I wanted to say is this, that it does seem to me that if this soldier were to apply to the Pension Office, or had applied to the Pension Office, and had shown the condition that he has shown in this record, he would have gotten a pension of $30 a month. But this record does not show that he has ever done it. It is a bad practice, it is a bad precedent for us to establish, if we fail to say that this soldier must first go to the Pension Office. That is the point I understand the gentleman from Ohio to make. There are thousands of soldiers in this category, and the remark of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] only shows that it is true that there are thousands of soldiers in this country who can not hope to get relief in this way. The fact that this Pension Committee have only reported 100 cases, as was stated by the gentleman from Iowa, only proves that these soldiers can not get relief in this way and is an argument on the other side of the question. It is absolutely impossible for the thousands of soldiers that are in the category of this man to get relief by Congress. Now I will hear my friend's question.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Maryland that one reason why this man has not presented his claim was that his son, who is 26 years of age and dying with consumption—in the years gone by this boy has worked for the support of this old man and his wife. Having had some experience in getting business through the Pension Office, and knowing how rapidly they got along through all these cases, and knowing the consideration they receive, under all the circumstances I thought, while this claimant had this invalid son and this weak and decrepit wife, that I would try to see what justice and good feeling there was in the representatives of the American people in this House when it was compared with the rapid speed with which I have seen cases of similar merit disposed of in the Pension Office. I state of my own personal knowledge that this man deserves a pension. I have here the recommendations of the best officers who served during the war from the State of Massachusetts who indorse it, and because the man is in so bad a condition——

Mr. MILES. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. BARRETT. Because of the feeble condition of his wife, and because of his invalid son, I ask for the passage of this bill.

Mr. MILES. I was willing to yield to the gentleman for a question; I wanted to treat him kindly.

Mr. BARRETT. You asked me a question, and I asked if you would allow me to answer it.

Mr. MILES. I did not understand it that way. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask a question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Gentlemen, is this fair? Of course I shall have to cease to undertake to perform my duty as a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee if I am to receive this treatment at the hands of this House. I must ask the Speaker to relieve me. I am trying to apply my best judgment as a man and as a lawyer to these cases; I am trying to do justice; but if I am to be cried down with the demand, "Vote!" "Vote!" when I am endeavoring to get at the facts of a case like this, I think I had better get out of this business; that is all there is about it.

Now, I want to say that in 1879 this soldier applied for a pension, and in 1883 his application was rejected. Upon what ground? On the ground of no pensionable degree of disability. What becomes, then, of this talk of this man's disability being of service origin?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Since I have been charged with dragging in politics, and since it has been insinuated that I was trying to aid the present Administration, I wish to call attention to the fact that the rejection in this case was under a Republican Administration.

Mr. MILES. It would not do for me to say that. The gentleman can say it. [Laughter and applause.] There is unfortunately in this House a spirit which makes it impossible—now, gentlemen, you will bear me out in this statement, those of you who have been here from Friday night to Friday night—there is a spirit in this House which makes it impossible for a man to serve on this Invalid Pensions Committee and at the same time keep his temper [laughter], for the reason that if he is a Democrat your treatment of him and his remarks on these Friday nights is such as to make him believe that by virtue of his politics he is unfit for service on the Pensions Committee. This is all I have to say.

Mr. GARDNER. Allow me a single suggestion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I simply want this case to be understood. I have supposed that this House meets on Friday nights under the rules to consider special pension cases—cases which are in the nature of appeals from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions. This case has been tried before the Pension Office and twice rejected. Now, this court of appeals proposes to rehear it. All the argument that the gentleman from Maryland presents, as I understand, is this question: Why do you not send the man back to the Commissioner of Pensions? [Applause.]

Mr. MILES. I do not admit that this House is a court of appeals from the decisions of the Pension Office; but if I should admit that I would not admit that there is any precedent for entertaining an appeal when the party has waited thirteen years before presenting his case to the appellate court.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MILES. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota, of course. I always want to be clever to him, because every Friday night he extends to me that same kind of courtesy which he has extended to-night to my friend from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY]. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I am very much obliged. [Laughter.]

But I want to put this question to the gentleman: You talk like this man ought to have made a new application later on. Now, you know what the law is and the practice in the Department is, and you have seen every one of the old papers from 1873 to 1889 right there, which under the law must be taken into consideration for a pension under the act of 1890. Now, if you review the whole case, then why do not they allow the pension on that old claim?

Mr. MILES. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. PICKLER. They had all the papers before them, and I claim that you ought not to send it back now.

Mr. MILES. But what I do know is that if he were to make a new application and go to the office and file his affidavit establishing the facts set forth in this report he could have the case made special and could get it through in thirty days.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; and they would find that he had no pensionable disability and grant him nothing.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] has found his road no doubt a very rough and troubled way. Any gentleman on that side who will dare to speak his mind on this subject will be ostracized, and must expect to be ostracized or dragooned by an endeavor to bring him back into the fold. He has my sympathy.

As to the remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts that this man did not make application to the Bureau for a pension because he was proud, I say no. Proud people never beg, and now he begs Congress for something. Proud people take their right and due. It is his right and his due to take what the Pension Office gives to him.

Now, this rejection took place after a four-years consideration and in the days of President Arthur. Have you anything to say against that Administration? Are you here to say, as was said in the report made in the case that we have just passed upon, that the applicant is reluctant to apply again before that Administration? Why do not you say so? Why did not I hear the other side declaiming against the Administration of Mr. Arthur as unfair and unjust to the old soldier as they do of the present Administration? Where is the distinction?

Now, if this soldier had been disabled in a pensionable degree, I assert here that the Pension Bureau in the days of President Arthur would have said so and granted him a pension; but it rejected his claim. You propose now without any evidence to overrule the decree of the Pension Bureau made in 1883. It is true that the gentleman making the report says that he has been growing rapidly worse. But where is the evidence of that fact? If he has been growing rapidly worse why has not he applied to the Bureau for relief and not to us? Fairness, justice, and equality are equity; law and equity are justice; favoritism in the legislative or the judicial branch of the Government is an inequity, and for one I propose to stand up here to protest against inequity.

I want to say to gentlemen on the other side of the House that if you propose to come in here and endeavor to drive your bills through the House—bills of this character—you will have to have your quorum of 179 men here before you can go into the Committee of the Whole at all. I am willing to treat fairly with you; I am willing to vote for bills that are right and just; but if you are going to cut off legislation of the soldiers and for the soldiers, legislation that is right and just, by endeavoring to get in bills of this character and legislation like that you now contemplate putting through this House over our protest, upon your own heads be the penalty.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Are you willing to vote, as I understand you to say, for every bill that is fair and just?

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes; I am.

Mr. CROWTHER. Then who is to be the judge of the fairness and justice of the bill—you or the 120 men on this side who dissent from your view?

Mr. ERDMAN. I will answer your question. If the other side stood here untrammeled, giving expression to their fair and honest judgment, I would be willing to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay the bill aside with favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ERDMAN) there were—ayes 96, noes 9.

So the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

A. H. M'LAWS.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 5083) granting an increase of pension to A. H. McLaws.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I think that bill has already passed the House. I have a copy of it here signed by the Clerk as having passed the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a mistake in the Calendar. The Chair understands that the bill has already passed the House.

HENRY V. ANDREWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2605) granting a pension to Henry V. Andrews, of Fulton County, Ill., a survivor of the Black Hawk war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry V. Andrews, of Fulton County, Ill., and to pay the said Henry V. Andrews a pension of $25 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert the word "eight."

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2605) granting a pension to Henry V. Andrews, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant made application under the Indian war act of July 27, 1892, declaring that during the Black Hawk war of 1832 he lived in the family of David W. Barnes, by whom he was raised; that Barnes enlisted in Captain Sain's company, Odd Battalion Mounted Rangers Illinois Volunteers, and that he, Andrews, served in the place of Barnes and answered to his name at roll call.

The following is the report of the War Department relative to the claimant's service:

"RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
"War Department, December 27, 1894.

"Respectfully returned to the Commissioner of Pensions. It has this day been determined by this Department that Henry V. Andrews was accepted into the service of the United States on or about August 4, 1832, as a private in Captain Sain's company, Odd Battalion Mounted Rangers, Illinois Volunteers (Black Hawk war); that he assumed the name of David W. Barnes, who was discharged the service on or about the same date; and that he took Barnes's place in the company and was mustered out with it September 4, 1832.

"By authority of the Secretary of War.

"F. C. AINSWORTH,
"Colonel, United States Army, Chief of Office."

The service is also shown by parol evidence of the highest character, and a special examiner of the Pension Bureau, who investigated the case, reported that it is one of unquestioned merit, and its allowance was recommended. The Bureau, however, rejected the claim on the ground that enlistment is a prerequisite condition of title to pension under the said act of July 27, 1892, and the fact that he was accepted into the service can not, under the rulings of the Secretary of the Interior, be accepted as an enlistment.

Mr. Andrews is now about 81 years old, and in the natural order of things can not long survive as a charge upon the bounty of the Government. There is no question that he served as alleged, as it is a matter of record at the War Department and conceded by the Pension Office, and there appears to be no reason whatever why he should not receive the same pension as is allowed by the general law to other Black Hawk war survivors. The man Barnes, in whose place the claimant served, is shown by the evidence to have died several years ago without having drawn a pension.

Your committee return the bill with the unanimous recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "twenty-five," in line 7, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "eight," so as to allow a pension rated at $8 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EUNICE IDA RHOADES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5749) to increase the pension of Mrs. Eunice Ida Rhoades.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to the sum of $50 per month the pension of Mrs. Eunice Ida Gallup Rhoades, widow of William W. Rhoades, late lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, said pension to be in lieu of pension numbered 13063, now drawn by her.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3749) granting an increase of pension to Eunice I. Rhoades, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of the late Lieut. Commander William W. Rhoades, United States Navy, who died September 30, 1893, from disease originating in the service and line of duty.

Commander Rhoades entered the volunteer naval service as an acting ensign August 19, 1864, and served as such with great distinction aboard the Susquehanna and Nipsic until April 2, 1866, when he was promoted to the rank of acting master. On March 12, 1868, he was appointed ensign in the regular naval service, and was subsequently promoted through all the grades to commander—he having attained the last-named rank on May 15, 1893, only a few months before his death.

The following extracts from official reports on file at the Navy and Treasury Departments show the arduous nature of the services rendered by the officer, and also the estimation in which he was held by his superiors in command:

"UNITED STATES SQUADRON ON COAST OF BRAZIL,
"FLAGSHIP SUSQUEHANNA, FIRST RATE,
"Harbor of Montevideo, January 10, 1866.

"SIR: * * * Acting Ensign W. W. Rhoades, of this ship, has been ordered to the Nipsic to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Pierce's detachment.

"I take this occasion to express my satisfaction with the conduct of Mr. Rhoades since he has been attached to this ship—now nearly eighteen months.

"Whether under fire of the enemy or with the regular duties of the ship or service, he has always proved himself efficient, as I have previously stated to the Department.

"I should be pleased to receive an order for his examination for advancement.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"S. W. GODON,
"Rear-Admiral, Commanding Brazil Squadron.

"Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
"Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

"True extract from Admiral Godon's letter.
"BENJ. MICOU, Chief Clerk."

Acting Ensign W. W. Rhoades, United States Navy, attached to United States Frigate Susquehanna, Battle of Fort Fisher.

The Susquehanna was most effective in her fire, and was fortunate enough to obtain the right position, though much bothered by a vessel near her that had not found her right place. (December 24, 1864, David D. Porter; see Navy Reports for 1865, page 7.)

From my position on the wheelhouse, overlooking my entire battery, I had every officer and man under my observation, and I have sincere pleasure in testifying to the fine bearing, zeal, and gallantry of the division officers, viz, Lieutenant Bartlett and Acting Ensign Rhoades, of the first division, etc. (S. W. Godon to Rear-Admiral Porter; see Navy Reports, 1865, page 21.)

On the 15th we drew into action at 11 o'clock, and fired slowly or rapidly, as occasion required. We landed in our boats about one hundred sailors and marines, under command of Lieutenant-Commander Blake. Lieutenant Bartlett, Acting Ensign Rhoades, and Acting Master's Mate Cooper commanded detachments of sailors. I inclose Lieutenant-Commander Blake's report and notice of Lieutenant Bartlett and Acting Ensign Rhoades, who, after the repulse of our men, entered the fort with the Army. (S. W. Godon; see Navy Reports, 1865, page 107.)

The officers who accompanied me (in the assault on Fort Fisher, January 15, 1865) were Lieut. J. R. Bartlett, Acting Ensign William Rhoades, and Acting Master's Mate M. Cooper, with First Lieutenant of Marines William Wallace. Sent Mr. Rhoades with 10 men to report to Lieutenant Preston, who was engaged at the front in digging rifle pits. Mr. Rhoades rendered most valuable service in the rifle pits, which were dug under the fire of the enemy's sharpshooters, and occasionally a discharge of grape. When the Army made the assault, accompanied by one brave fellow, James Shannon, he followed into the fort. Shannon carried a flag and placed it on the parapet. (F. B. Blake; see Navy Reports, 1865, pages 107 and 108.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, D. C., July 11, 1892.

SIR: The Board takes this occasion, upon your being detached from duty as inspector of the Thirteenth light-house district, to express its appreciation of the very thorough and efficient manner in which you have performed the duties of inspector during the last three years, and to state that, should it be possible for you to serve under the Board again, it will be most agreeable.

Yours, respectfully,
JAS. A. GREER,
Rear-Admiral, U. S. N., Chairman.

Lieut. Commander W. W. RHOADES, U. S. N.,
Inspector Thirteenth Light-House District, Portland, Oreg.

There are many precedents for the allowance of the increase of pension to the widows of officers of the rank of this claimant's husband, and in view of the fact that, as your committee is reliably informed, Mrs. Rhoades has but little aside from her pension by which to maintain herself in comfort, and as she is well advanced in years and able to do but little to aid in her support, the passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, as I stated last Friday night, it is an unpleasant duty to oppose increases of pensions, but it seems to me that the House of Representatives, in Committee of the Whole, should draw the lines between the increase of a pension to the soldier who performed the duty and the increase of pensions to the widows of soldiers. There is a law that fixes the pensions of the widows of the different soldiers of the Army and the Navy. There can, in the very nature of things, be no special reason why one widow should have a pension larger than another of the same class, under the law, unless we are ready to go into the business of increasing the pensions of widows on account of their disabilities or their poverty.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. On Friday night last, as I see by the RECORD, on page 2288, the following occurred:

Mr. HULL. A widow is pensioned on account of the service of her husband.

Should we not make some distinction as to what the service has been?

Mr. HULL. I suppose that the members of the House will agree with me in this, that there are hundreds and hundreds of officers who fought during the civil war, who were of the rank of lieutenant in the army or ensign in the navy, who performed brave and distinguished services in their different ranks. There is nothing in the career of this soldier that is specially distinguished over his fellows. I am willing to concede that $25 a month will not support any widow in comfort. I am willing to concede that it will not even purchase the necessaries of life, as one in that position would consider the necessaries of life. But I want to say that even $25 a month is much better than $8 a month, and in considering the question of widows it is certainly easy, Mr. Chairman, for this Congress to pass a general law, if the pensions are not sufficiently liberal, by which all widows will be advanced. The proposition of this bill is to make this pension $50 a month. If it was the case of a soldier before Congress showing that he was suffering from the results of disease or wounds, I should be in favor of giving this soldier $50 a month; but I want simply to preserve my consistency and to say that I, as an individual member of this House, will oppose the granting of large pensions to widows, no matter what may be the circumstances of a widow.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will excuse me for making a reference to a case with which I am somewhat familiar and have personal knowledge. My friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has stated what perhaps may be true as a general principle, and it may be worthy of the attention of the House, but in this case I think there is something to be said that will even justify the gentleman from Iowa in supporting this bill. This officer started out as a volunteer in the Navy. He was, during the entire war, a volunteer officer, and because of the valor, skill, and ability which he displayed was appointed in the Regular Navy, but he had to start in the lowest grade in the Navy. If he could have had the advantage of his volunteer service, he would have reached a grade that would have satisfied my friend [Mr. HULL] as to the justice of this pension. I think those who served as volunteers during the war and went into the Army or the Navy after the war, ought to have consideration for their services as volunteers. I do not care to enter into any particular explanation of the general services performed by this officer, but I will say that I had an opportunity to observe his services on one particular occasion where it cost a man something to be there, and within reach of the enemy's guns. He was one of the officers who led in the assault by the Navy on the sea bastion at Fort Fisher; and there has never been in the history of war an incident where men were under a hotter fire or where men displayed greater valor than on that occasion. I will not now speak of the Army, but of the Navy, as I had an opportunity to observe it.

Mr. KEM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Certainly.

Mr. KEM. Is it not true that there were hundreds and thousands of privates in the ranks in hot places during the war?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I think there were. And do you know of privates in the ranks making special headway without commanding officers?

Mr. KEM. No, sir; and I never knew of any officer making special headway where there was not a good private.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. And privates rendered good service because officers did their duty.

Mr. KEM. I will ask the gentleman if he proposes, or if it is the proposition of this House, to pension the widow of every soldier who did a meritorious act in the war over and above that which she is entitled to have under the law?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. That question is not before the House, and when it is I will give an answer.

Mr. KEM. That question is before the House, and that is the only question before the House.

Mr. MOSES. Will you allow me a question? In order to ascertain the views of the gentleman from Nebraska, I would ask him this question: Under the general pension laws I understand that you would give the same pension to all persons, without regard to rank?

Mr. KEM. Why, certainly.

Mr. MOSES. Have you introduced any such bill as that?

Mr. KEM. I have not.

Mr. MOSES. Why do you not do that?

Mr. KEM. The gentleman is asking a question that is not at all pertinent to what we are discussing. I want to say, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I will hear the gentleman through.

Mr. KEM. I want to say that it is well known to the older members of this House that in a service of five years here I have not objected to the passage of a pension bill. It is well known here that I favor just and equitable pensions, and that I have a record of attending these Friday evening sessions which will compare favorably with that of any gentleman on this floor for the last five years. But it seems to me we have reached a point in this pension legislation when in justice to the widows of the privates who served in the ranks during the war this sort of legislation ought to cease. And I want to say that in my opinion the widow of an officer in the Army who did his duty is no better and is not entitled to any more consideration than the widow of a private who lay in the trenches and slept on brush and faced the enemy and took his fire and his shot.

I say that there should be no distinction made here, and that the widow of a private in the ranks who did his duty is entitled to as much consideration as the widow of an officer who did his duty. Yet, notwithstanding this plain statement of common justice, this House is passing bills of this sort, discriminating against the widow of the private and in favor of the widow of the officer. And I say that the Republican party, if it persists in going on record in this way, will have to meet the widows of the common soldiers of this country in the near future upon this proposition, because it is coming upon every hand, all over this country, and the widows and the common soldiers will not quietly and supinely submit to this sort of legislation.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think I have presented claims which will be satisfactory to this House. The service which this officer rendered as a volunteer and then commencing at the bottom of the ladder in the Regular Navy fully justifies the recognition that is now proposed, and this bill ought to pass. His services were of peculiar merit, and I hope the House will regard the bill with favor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the House passes this bill and it becomes a law and the pension is allowed, the payment, as I understand, is not from the Treasury of the United States, but from the prize fund created for the benefit of the Navy. Is not that the fact?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. That is the fact, and this officer served in a squadron that captured more prizes than any other during the war.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HELEN A. JACKMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, have carefully examined all the evidence in the case and respectfully report as follows:

William Jackman, late first lieutenant Company I, Fourteenth Maine Volunteer Infantry, enlisted February 24, 1863, and was killed in battle at Winchester, Va., September 19, 1864. His widow, Nancy W. Jackman, was pensioned at $17 per month from the date of his death to December 12, 1892, the date of her death, as shown by the records of the Pension Office. She also received pension for four minor children from July 25, 1890, until they severally became 16 years of age.

The petitioner, Helen A. Jackman, was never on the pension roll, and has no title under existing law, as she was 16 years of age at the date of her father's death. She was, however, as shown by the evidence before your committee, an invalid, and more helpless and dependent than her younger brothers and sisters who were pensioned. The evidence shows that she is, and always has been, an invalid; that she has a severe form of lateral curvature of the spine, which produces great deformity, and to some extent impairs the functions of the organs of respiration. She is frail, very much emaciated, shows lack of blood and a general lack of nutrition, is incapacitated for earning her own living, and weighs only 80 pounds.

The testimony of the selectmen of the town where she lives shows that she has no property, and that her only income or means of support is the small sum of $8 per month, which her State, recognizing its duty to her as the helpless and dependent daughter of a brave officer who was killed in battle while fighting for the Union, allows her.

This bill asks for but $12 per month, which is less than she would receive under the general law if she had title thereunder.

Your committee consider the case as an eminently meritorious one and earnestly recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL H. J. CROUCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5140) for the relief of Michael H. J. Crouch, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Michael H. J. Crouch, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, on the pension roll at $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. MILES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5140) granting a pension to Michael H. J. Crouch, respectfully report as follows:

The soldier is pensioned at $8, under the general laws, for fracture of left elbow. February 6, 1890, he filed a claim for additional pension on account of hemorrhoids, as of service origin. This was rejected December 23, 1895, on the ground of "No record or other satisfactory evidence of origin, and claimant's inability to furnish the evidence necessary to establish his claim for said disability." On the same day a claim which was filed under the act of June 27, 1890, March 14, 1896, was rejected on the grounds of "No ratable disability under the act of June 27, 1890." This rejection was based on a medical examination made by the Princess Anne (Md.) board of United States examining surgeons in November, 1893, more than two years ago, and at that time he was shown to have, in addition to the fracture of arm, for which he is pensioned at $8, both internal and external hemorrhoids, with congestion and prolapsus of the rectum. This disease of rectum was rated by one of the Washington (D. C.) boards at twelve-eighteenths as long ago as 1890.

Dr. E. S. Miles, on May 20, 1895, testified as follows:

"I made an examination for him about three or four years ago and treated him for hemorrhoids. He appeared before me May 15, 1895, and I made another examination. Found him suffering from the same trouble in an aggravated form, which prevents him from doing any hard work at all."

On September 4, 1895, he again testifies:

"I find from the present examination that he is in a worse condition than when I first made my examination. The claimant has a very bad case of hemorrhoids, which gives him a great deal of trouble and incapacitates him from all manual labor."

Claimant is now in the Maryland University Hospital under treatment.

Your committee are convinced from a careful consideration that a full measure of justice has not been done the soldier by the rejection of his claim under act of June 27, 1890, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 6, the words "thirty dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "$12, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890," and that the bill as so amended do pass.

The amendment of the committee, stated in the concluding paragraph of the report, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOOKER. I have a request to make. I ask unanimous consent that the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk to be reported may be considered out of its regular order.

Mr. GIBSON. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman will not object. When the report is read——

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let us have the report.

Mr. GIBSON. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. If, when the report is read, there is a single objection I will withdraw the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let us have the report, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I object. I think the proper method of proceeding is to go on in the order of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

MARY B. HOUK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4606) to grant an increase of pension to Mary B. Houk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay Mary B. Houk, widow of Col. Leonidas C. Houk, late colonel of the Third Regiment of Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4606) granting an increase of pension to Mary B. Houk, respectfully report:

The facts in this case are as follows:

Mary B. Houk is the widow of Hon. Leonidas C. Houk, late colonel of the Third Regiment of Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and who died in May, 1891, while a member of Congress.

Mr. Houk was drawing a pension for chronic diarrhea at the time of his death and had suffered from this disease for many years, in consequence of which he had become very much debilitated. While in this condition he accidentally drank a dangerous liquid to get which out of his stomach an emetic was necessary. But his weakness was such that he died of heart failure, resulting directly from his vomiting, but indirectly from the debility arising from the diarrhea.

Mrs. Houk applied for a pension under the general law, but her claim was rejected on the ground that her husband's death did not result directly from his disability, but from heart failure, as already stated. She thereupon applied for a pension under the act of 1890, and was granted a pension as a widow without other means of support than her own daily labor.

Mr. Houk left no property except an average amount of house furniture. His widow has a daughter about 12 years old, and no means of support, as the Pension Bureau has adjudicated.

Under these circumstances the committee feel amply justified in recommending the passage of the bill to increase her pension from $8 a month to $30 a month.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out "fifty" before the word "dollars" and insert "thirty" was read.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a rather extraordinary report, and I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill to give us a little fuller explanation of the causes of death in this case.

Mr. GIBSON. I will state for the information of the gentleman that the husband of Mary B. Houk was Leonidas C. Houk, long a member of this House. He was for many years a sufferer from chronic diarrhea. I am personally familiar with the facts. Judge Houk was my law partner. When he was very much debilitated he, by accident, drank the contents of a tumbler supposed to contain water, but which, in fact, contained some deleterious drug. To avert the injurious effect of this drug, an emetic was administered, which of course brought on violent vomiting, and in Judge Houk's debilitated condition from chronic diarrhea, he being at the time scarcely able to go around, the shock to his system was so great that he died that night from heart failure, a few hours after taking the emetic. The direct cause of his death was heart failure, but the indirect cause was his debilitated condition. If he had been a robust, healthy man he could easily have relieved his stomach through the agency of the emetic.

Judge Houk entered the Army as a quartermaster of the first regiment of Union soldiers that was raised in the State of Tennessee during the war of the rebellion. He afterwards raised the Third Tennessee Regiment, of which he was colonel. All that his widow asks is a colonel's pension, $30 a month. She is not asking anything extra, but just that pension which the law allows to the widow of a colonel. This House has time and time again voted $50, and often $100, to the widows of colonels.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ELIZA WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Eliza Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza Wilson, widow of the late Nathaniel Wilson, late of Company M, Second Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Eliza Wilson, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

Claimant filed her application for pension as dependent widow of Nathaniel Wilson, late private in Company M, Second Iowa Cavalry, which application has been rejected by the Pension Office on the grounds that there was no pathological connection between the cause of death, as set forth in the return of the attending physician to the district court clerk, and the disabilities of service origin.

Nathaniel Wilson, late husband of the claimant, died at Maquoketa, Iowa, on April 5, 1893. At the time of his death he was drawing a pension of $17 per month, by virtue of pension certificate 172154, on account of chronic diarrhea and resulting dyspepsia and debility and disease of the rectum.

Now, it appears that the physician, Dr. D. N. Loose, who attended the soldier at the time of his death, was not the family physician, and in making a return of the death to the clerk of the district court, in accordance with the laws of Iowa, attributed the cause of death to Bright's disease of six months' standing, and to an injury that he had received to his left hip by a fall on the sidewalk.

The records on file show that said soldier on his return from the Army was conveyed in an ambulance, and his condition was such that he had to be carried into the house. His disease then was chronic diarrhea and dropsy. A few years later other diseases appeared, and he was greatly troubled with his kidneys, bowels, and bladder, which continued up to the time of his death. Many years prior to his death said soldier became terribly emaciated, so much so that the greater part of his time was spent in bed. For years before his death he had no control of his urine, and had to be changed very often. The testimony shows that his kidney disease was brought on by chronic diarrhea and resulted therefrom. Owing to his feeble condition his eyesight failed, and for years before his death he was nearly blind. The last year of his life he could but totter around, some days better and some days in bed, and could do no work, and required constant care and nursing. A few days before his death he seemed better than usual and walked out. In doing so he fell and fractured the femur of his left leg.

Dr. D. N. Loose, on whose certificate of death hinged the rejection of claimant's pension case, and which certificate, by the way, is said to be a mere form intended largely to show the date of death, subsequently made affidavits to correct the error he had made, stating that the causes set forth were only a portion of the complications which resulted in said soldier's death.

Your committee are of the opinion that said Dr. D. N. Loose made omissions in filling out the certificate of death of said soldier. The widow is now 70 years old and poor; she has spent thirty years of the best of her life in caring for a soldier who was an invalid on account of diseases contracted in the service, and she has, at the best, but a few more years to live. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARIA E. WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1181) for the relief of Maria E. Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Matthew Wilson, late first lieutenant Company M, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, died a prisoner of war November 5, 1864; and

Whereas a vacancy existed in the rank of captain of said Company M from September 19, 1864, and said Lieutenant Wilson was next in rank and entitled to be commissioned from and after said date, and his commission as such captain, to date from September 19, 1864, was issued January 18, 1865, a date subsequent to his death, and by reason of his death prior to the issuance of such commission the Pension Office can not recognize his widow, Maria E. Wilson, as entitled to a pension by reason of her husband's death as of the rank of captain: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria E. Wilson, widow of Matthew Wilson, late captain Company M, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $30 a month in lieu of her present pension. And the sum of $1,119 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying said Maria E. Wilson the arrears of pension due her since the 5th day of November, 1864.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1181) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria E. Wilson, as the widow of a captain instead of first lieutenant, having carefully considered the evidence, respectfully report:

In a communication addressed to Hon. FRED T. DUBOIS, United States Senate, under date of June 18, 1895, Colonel Ainsworth, Chief of Record and Pension Office, in referring to this claim, said:

"I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the records of this Department show that although a vacancy as captain existed in Company M, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, from September 19, 1864, the date of the rank given in the commission of Matthew Wilson, as of that grade, to November 5, 1864, the date of his death, he can not be recognized as a captain for the reason that his commission was not actually issued until January 18, 1865, a date subsequent to that of his death. This case is one in which no relief can be afforded under existing law."

In a letter addressed to Hon. EDGAR WILSON, House of Representatives, by Colonel Ainsworth, under date of July 19, 1895, referring to this subject, it is stated:

"All the conditions that are essential for the recognition of Lieutenant Wilson under the law appear to be complete, except that, having died before a commission as captain was issued in his name, he was not 'duly appointed and commissioned,' as the act in question requires. It will be seen, therefore, that the only source of relief in this case, which is evidently a meritorious one, lies in further legislation by Congress."

The following affidavit by Col. James M. Schoonmaker, of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, with regard to this bill, is self-explanatory and shows the justness of the claim:

"COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Allegheny, ss:

"James M. Schoonmaker, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That Matthew Wilson, late of Company M, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, entered the service as second lieutenant in said company in 1862; that December 31, 1862, he was made first lieutenant; that August 27, 1863, he was taken prisoner at the battle of White Sulphur Springs, Va.; that therefrom until November 5, 1864, the date of his death, he was a prisoner of war in the enemy's hands; that I was colonel commanding the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry at the battle of White Sulphur Springs, and prior thereto; that I was well acquainted with Lieutenant Wilson and knew his record in the Army; that this record was first-class in every respect; that he rendered distinguished services on said battlefield, and was complimented therefor in the report of General Averell, who commanded the Union forces, as "among those who particularly distinguished themselves in action for gallantry and ability." (See War Records, volume 29, series 1, pages 38 and 39.)

"That said Lieutenant Wilson served ten months in Libby Prison, was afterwards in prison at Macon, Ga., and Charleston, S. C.; that he escaped from prison at Charleston on the 30th day of October, 1864, and died in the house of a colored man in the city of Charleston on November 5, 1864; that a vacancy existed in the rank of captain of said Company M on September 19, 1864, and Lieutenant Wilson was next in rank and entitled to be commissioned as captain of said company on said last-mentioned date; that owing to no fault of Lieutenant Wilson's, but owing to delays incident to the issuance of said commission, the same was not formally made out and executed until January 18, 1865, but that when it did issue said commission dated from September 19, 1864, a date prior to the death of said Lieutenant Wilson; that said unfortunate delay in the issuance of said commission denied Lieutenant Wilson his proper rank as captain and his widow the pension of that rank; that this has occasioned a manifest wrong and injustice to a worthy, valiant, and faithful officer, and denies to his widow that which in equity and good conscience is her due; that a bill (H. R. 1181) has been introduced by Mr. WILSON of Idaho in the House of Representatives intended to correct this error and right this wrong. I have read said bill and am familiar with the contents thereof and know the equities which exist in this case, and therefore earnestly recommend the passage of said bill.

"JAMES M. SCHOONMAKER,
"Late Colonel Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of January, 1896.
"[SEAL.] ROBERT C. MOORE,
Notary Public."

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all between the title and enacting clause.

Strike out all after the word "pension," in line 9, page 2, and add the following:

"And that her pension be rated from the date of the soldier's death as the widow of a captain instead of first lieutenant."

That so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, a word only in addition to what appears in the report. I desire to read an extract from a letter from Colonel Ainsworth, received since the report was prepared, and which adds some new evidence to that already in possession of the committee. He says:

This case appears to be one that is peculiarly meritorious, because a captain's commission was actually issued for Lieutenant Wilson, who had been captured by the enemy, and he would undoubtedly have been mustered into the service as a captain if he had lived.

It is shown further that he died inside the Confederate lines, in the State of South Carolina, while in hiding from the Confederate authorities, from whom he had made his escape. He died while in the house of a colored man in Charleston after his escape from the Confederate prison.

The bill contemplates a correction of a mistake, and gives the widow what she would be entitled to receive as the wife of a captain if he had lived to return to the Union lines.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, this bill presents several peculiarities, to which I desire to call the attention of the committee.

In the first place it proposes to pension the widow of an officer at a rank that the officer never held and to which he was never commissioned, and to grant her a pension at a rank to which he was never mustered. Secondly, it makes the pension retroactive, making it date from the time of the soldier's death instead of the date that this bill may possibly become a law.

Certainly, in these several respects, the bill is contrary to any legislation which has ever been enacted by this House, or any other, so far as I know, in any previous Congress, and no reason has been given why these exceptions should be made in this case, or why either of the things proposed by the bill should be done. The soldier was unquestionably a good soldier; he did faithful service, and died while a prisoner of war; but there is nothing anywhere in the papers to show that his command had the number of men, the maximum number, permitting him to be mustered; and as a matter of fact he never was mustered and never held the commission which it is claimed under this bill ought to regulate the amount of the pension to his widow.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman permit a single remark?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS. The communication from Colonel Ainsworth states that he would have been mustered had it not been for the unfortunate circumstances connected with his death, dying as he did virtually a prisoner of war. And in view of all the facts set forth in the reports of the War Department, it occurs to me that the case as presented is so strong and so plain and the equities so great that any man who desires to do justice to the widow of a worthy soldier must give his voice and vote in support of the bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I thank the gentleman very much for his criticism, but there is nevertheless that state of affairs to which I have already referred. While Mr. Ainsworth points to the one reason mentioned in Colonel Schoonmaker's affidavit, he does not state that the facts exist, and that this man could have been mustered as captain at any time.

Again, this is not a very singular case; it is not a peculiar case. Hundreds of such cases exist all about us. There were thousands of officers in the Army who were not mustered for identically the same reason, because their commissions were not issued in season for them to be mustered. Then, again, this pension makes it retroactive, which is contrary to all pension legislation in this House or in any previous Congresses, so far as I know.

Now, while on my feet in regard to this matter, I wish to state that I have had some calculations made in respect to the pensions and the pension bills pending before the House, and I find up to this date that there have been 446 bills introducad in the House to pension widows and women in some way related to soldiers, and that there are pension bills introduced to pension soldiers to the number of 679, making 1,125 in all; that the committee have reported bills in favor of pensioning widows to the number of 94, and soldiers to the number of 49. In other words, seven-twelfths of all the bills introduced here have been in favor of old soldiers, while two-thirds of the bills reported have been in favor of widows.

Now, that is a state of affairs which I do not believe this House, or the old soldiers, or the people of this country will justify. Out of the 679 cases of soldiers, there are unquestionably very many who present righteous claims, and I appeal to the committee to pick those out and bring them before this House.

Mr. TALBERT. I understood the gentleman to say that no commission had ever been issued to Lieutenant Wilson as captain?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I said that no commission had ever been issued to him during his lifetime.

Mr. TALBERT. There is an affidavit here of Colonel Schoonmaker, of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, which says that a vacancy existed in the rank of captain on September 19, 1864, which was prior to the death of Lieutenant Wilson. As I understand, this bill only asks for the arrears of the difference between the pension of a widow of a captain and a widow of a lieutenant. Now, it seems to me it has justice and merit in it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. If the gentleman will look at the report he will see that the commission was issued in January, and dated back to September, while the soldier died in November.

Mr. ANDREWS. That was the fault of the Government.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] comes in with his weekly installment of advice to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. He is complaining now that the committee are reporting a large number of bills in favor of widows, and he wants to know why we do not bring in the others. Let me inform the gentleman that the Committee on Invalid Pensions, through the subcommittees into which it is divided, consider and bring in exactly the bills that the members of the House ask them to consider and bring in. We take up such bills as members say they want presented first. The members of the House make the choice of what bills shall be presented.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

You will not get a vote any sooner when I have the floor by crying "Vote!" This case comes exactly within the criticism which I have made, and shall continue to make so long as I attend these sessions of the House, and that is, that it is not based upon justice or right to the Union soldier or to the people; that it is contrary to all the precedents of the past in this, that it makes a pension retroactive; and that is done by the special amendment of the committee itself. As to the statement that these bills are passed upon by the committee at the request of members of this House, I wish to say that it seems to me that the Pensions Committee should adopt some rule which it can stand upon in regard to the consideration of these cases, and withstand the importunities of those who try to get special cases passed in a special way. I hope you will proceed in a straightforward line, and get the pensions of the old soldiers who deserve them passed as quickly as possible. There is not an old soldier who knows me who does not know that I am his friend. I stand here upon this floor as a friend of the pensioner, and I simply ask of the Committee on Pensions that they bring in bills to pension these old soldiers and let doubtful, unmeritorious cases remain in the committee, where they ought always to sleep.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. I want to say that I am going to vote for this bill, but I want to call the attention of the other side to the fact that they are voting indirectly to grant back pensions here, something that they have never done.

Mr. PICKLER. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, this measure——

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the House. The bill has been laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

And then, on motion of Mr. PICKLER, the committee rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bills H. DISTRIBUTION OF MEDALS AND DIPLOMAS OF WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report Senate joint resolution 78, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute the medals and diplomas awarded by the World's Columbian Commission to the exhibitors entitled thereto, and to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to distribute the medals and diplomas of the World's Columbian Exposition to the several exhibitors entitled thereto, as designated and certified by the report of the executive committee on awards to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Bureau of the Mint, and to this end the Secretary of the Treasury may adopt any method, or create any and all agencies, which to him may seem proper and necessary for the distribution of said medals and diplomas. But in case any of the exhibitors can not be found who may be entitled to medals and diplomas, then, in every such case, such medals and diplomas shall be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury until they are called for by the exhibitors entitled thereto, or by persons authorized to receive the same. And the said Secretary in the distribution of the medals and diplomas may transmit the same through the mails free of charge. And the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out this resolution, and for the purposes hereof the said Secretary may temporarily employ, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the force now engaged in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in connection with the preparation of said diplomas, or so much of said force as may be necessary, said appropriation to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate resolution. It has been engrossed by the Senate and the engrossed copy is not at the desk.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would say that that resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, and on yesterday the reference was changed. I have that resolution in my committee room, if it is desired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please send for it, as it is the engrossed copy.

Mr. PITNEY. Is there any objection to considering it and having the RECORD changed if any error is found in the printed copy? I supposed the engrossed copy was upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the matter can be suspended until the engrossed copy is found.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that the matter be suspended until the engrossed resolution can be found.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the joint resolution will be laid aside informally until the engrossed copy is found.

Subsequently,

The SPEAKER said: The engrossed copy has been found, and the Clerk will now report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PITNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS OF INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5633) to incorporate The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Indian Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Joseph Samuel Murrow, of Atoka; Patrick Joseph Byrne, of Muscogee; Harvey Lindsey, of Checotah; Edmond Henry Doyle, of South McAlester; Florian Haraden Nash, of Fort Gibson; John Rennie, of Lehigh; Leo Edmond Bennett, of Muscogee; Andrew Hardy, of Ardmore; John Coyle, of Bailey; Silas Armstrong, of Grand River; Henry Clay Nash, of Antlers, and James Jackson McAlester, of McAlester, all in the Indian Territory, being permanent members and officers of The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Indian Territory, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate in the Indian Territory, by the name and title of "The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Indian Territory," and by that name it may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, in any court of law or equity, and may have and use a common seal and change the same at pleasure, and be entitled to use and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges within the Indian Territory incidental to fraternal and benevolent corporations within the State of Arkansas, as provided by sections 1023 to 1034, inclusive, of chapter 29 of Mansfield's Digest.

SEC. 2. That the said corporation shall have the same power to take, acquire, and hold real and personal estate, not exceeding in value $100,000, which shall not be divided among the members of the corporation, but shall descend to their successors for the promotion of the benevolent and fraternal purposes of the corporation.

SEC. 3. That all claims, accounts, debts, things in action, or other matters of business of whatever nature now existing for or against the present Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Indian Territory, mentioned in section 1 of this act, shall survive and succeed to and against the body corporate and politic hereby created: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to extend the operation of any law which provides for the extinguishing of claims or contracts by limitation of time.

SEC. 4. That said corporation shall have a constitution, and shall have power to amend the same at pleasure: Provided, That such constitution or amendments thereof do not conflict with the laws of the United States now or hereafter to be put in force in said Territory.

SEC. 5. That said corporation shall have power to provide in its constitution for, and to organize and charter constituent lodges thereof within the Indian Territory, which lodges shall be branches of the parent body, but without corporate power in themselves.

SEC. 6. That said corporation shall not engage in any business for gain, the purposes of said corporation being exclusively fraternal and benevolent.

SEC. 7. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Insert the word "same" before the word "power," in line 1, section 2, and the words "as citizens of the United States" after the words "power aforesaid."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM B. ISAACS & CO.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1524) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of William B. Isaacs & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William B. Isaacs & Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,967, the same being the amount found by the Court of Claims to be the proportionate part belonging, when taken by the United States, to the Bank of Virginia of certain gold coin taken possession of by the United States on or about the 23d day of August, A. D. 1865, and which coin has ever since been, and now is, held by the United States, and to which moneys, by the findings of said court, the said William B. Isaacs & Co. are now, in law and justice, entitled as assignee, the said findings of the Court of Claims having been made in a proceeding and trial in said court authorized by the joint resolution of Congress of the 3d day of January, A. D. 1887 (volume 24, United States Statutes, page 644), to be instituted in said court against the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order until I can hear what this is.

Mr. SWANSON. I will make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to interpose an objection to considering this bill at this time.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

THE DEATH PENALTY.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Speaker, moved by the pressure of many eminent gentlemen here, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 878) "to reduce the cases in which the penalty of death may be inflicted."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where the accused is found guilty of the crime of murder or of rape under sections 5339 or 5345, Revised Statutes, the jury may qualify their verdict by adding thereto "without capital punishment"; and whenever the jury shall return a verdict qualified as aforesaid the person convicted shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life.

SEC. 2. That except offenses mentioned in sections 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, when a person is convicted of any offense to which the punishment of death is now specifically affixed by the laws of the United States, he shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life, and when any person is convicted of an offense to which the punishment of death, or a lesser punishment, in the discretion of the court, is affixed, the maximum punishment shall be imprisonment at hard labor for life.

SEC. 3. That the punishment of death prescribed for any offense specified by the statutes of the United States, except in sections 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, is hereby abolished, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall apply to or in any way affect any proceeding or indictment now found or pending or that may be found for any offense committed before the passage of this act, and all offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be punished under the laws then in force: Provided, That juries may return qualified verdicts in such cases according to the provisions of section 1 of this act, and the sentences shall be imposed as therein provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARRETT. I object.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Agriculture.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture beg to report back to the House the Agricultural appropriation bill with the recommendation that the House concur in the Senate amendments numbered 3, 7, 8, 11, 12, 16, 18, 20, 21, 22, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 36, 42, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 51, and 52 and nonconcur in all the others, and ask the appointment of a committee of conference with the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments indicated in the report just submitted.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, if it will not inconvenience the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I should be glad if he would make an explanation of the amendments that we are asked to concur in.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will give the gentleman the details if he desires them. The first amendment, numbered 3, in which we recommend concurrence, is simply a correction of a typographical error. The word "four" was left out by inadvertence. The amendment is found on page 2, line 23, of the printed bill. The next is on page 4, line 13, which is a mere change in the wording of the bill. On page 6, line 13, the amendment numbered 11, we agree to an increase of the amount for the Division of Chemistry from $5,000 to $10,000, making the total appropriation for that division $17,000 instead of $12,000. On page 7, line 22, we agree to one assistant chief for the Bureau of Animal Industry, at a salary of $2,500. That is the item that was stricken out in the House on a point of order. For botanical investigations we agree to an increase from $10,000 to $15,000, and in the laboratory department of the agricultural Division of Chemistry we agree to an increase of $2,500. We agree to a change in the phraseology of the bill in the Division of Forestry Investigations, adopting the wording of the old bill instead of the language in the bill as reported by the committee. The other agreements are not at all important. They relate to changes of language and not of amounts, until we reach the irrigation item on page 17, amendment 38. The House inserted an appropriation of $15,000 "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the collection of information as to the best modes of agriculture by irrigation." The Senate strikes that out and inserts a provision to enable the Director of the United States Geological Survey to continue gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, etc., $4,500, to be immediately available.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I get from a member of the committee near me the purport of the amendments, so I do not ask the chairman to continue his explanation further.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know what they propose to do with that irrigation item.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Under this amendment, if the House agrees to it, will any part of the money be spent for irrigation investigations in western Kansas, or is it left wholly to the Geological Survey to determine where the money shall be spent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will read the gentleman the language of the Senate provision. It is as follows:

Geological Survey: To enable the Director of the United States Geological Survey to continue gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, to June 30, 1896, $4,500, to be immediately available.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I understand from that it leaves the matter wholly to the discretion of the Geological Survey? The House amendment provided that the $15,000 be spent in behalf of irrigation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is left to the Geological Survey.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the House agree to that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee recommend agreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Would it not be advisable to recommend nonconcurrence and have a conference on the subject? In that way the House amendment may be restored. While we have no objection to the Senate amendment, yet we should insist on the restoration of the provision placed in the bill by the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that, as I understand it, that item as passed by the Senate was satisfactory to the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. BLUE, and also to the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. LONG.

Mr. BLUE. Not with the House provision left out.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I think the gentleman will find that the Kansas delegation are not satisfied to have it take the place of the provision placed in the bill by the House and stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. LONG. I was not willing that that Senate provision should be adopted in place of the House provision, but I did not object to it in addition to the House provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I thought the members from Kansas were satisfied with the provision as amended by the Senate.

Mr. BLUE. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that what we wish in this matter is that there shall remain in this bill a distinct recognition of the right of the Agricultural Department to continue to investigate along the lines of irrigation, whatever may be added.

Mr. PICKLER. That is right.

Mr. BLUE. This Senate amendment leaves out irrigation entirely. We are willing that that Senate provision shall stay in the bill for the purpose of enabling the Geological Survey to continue the gauging of the waters that fall and flow into the streams in that region and elsewhere, as we understand that this appropriation of $4,500 is necessary to complete that work. But we wish, in addition to that, some appropriation that shall distinctly recognize the right of the Agricultural Department to still further continue the investigation of the subject of irrigation.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I suggest to my colleague that we have no assurance that one cent of this money will be spent in Kansas. It is likely some will be, but the House provision would be better for Kansas.

Mr. BLUE. Well, I do not know in regard to that; possibly some of it will be. As I understand, they are gauging the waters of the streams in Kansas as well as elsewhere in the United States.

But what we wish in this matter is that the whole item for irrigation shall not be stricken out. In preparing the bill this provision was left out by the committee upon the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture; but it was inserted in the bill by the action of the House. Now, rather than dispute about the matter while the present Secretary remains in office, we might consent to a less appropriation than $15,000; but we will not consent that this provision shall be wholly eliminated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be some question about this matter, I will ask that the report be amended so as to propose that the House disagree to amendment 38, so that the matter will go to conference.

Mr. CANNON. Now, as this matter is going to conference, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this language inserted by the Senate:

Geological Survey: To enable the Director of the Geological Survey to continue gauging the streams in determining the water supply of the United States, including, etc., to June 30, 1896.

Does not the gentleman think that on a bill of this kind the Appropriations Committee of the Senate had better content itself in its amendments with making appropriations for the next fiscal year, and that, in addition to putting almost the whole earth in this bill, they should not put in deficiencies for the current year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that this is not a deficiency. The clause which he has just read is simply to continue the work; the Department has caused no deficiency as yet.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But there is no money to continue this work. They should be allowed to continue the work till June 30 of the present year, or else we should stop it altogether.

Mr. CANNON. There can be no deficiency in the sense which the gentleman implies without a violation of the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well. They do not propose to violate the law, as I understand.

Mr. CANNON. A deficiency bill is merely a bill covering appropriations for the remainder of the current year. We have already at this session passed one such bill, an urgent deficiency bill, carrying $6,000,000, the largest ever passed in the history of Congress, and that is to be followed by the regular deficiency bill.

Now, if we are to keep track of these bills we shall have to observe the rules of the House; and if the Senate will not observe its own rules and has no regard for the rules of the House, I want to call attention to the matter, so that this bill, in addition to being an Agricultural bill, and a highway bill that does not improve the national highways, may not become also a deficiency bill. I think we had better observe proper parliamentary rules in the preparation of these bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have moved a modification of the report so as to disagree to this amendment and send it to conference. In conference this matter will be taken up and considered.

Mr. CANNON We can not in the House get rid of an improper Senate amendment upon a point of order; and I merely mention this matter now to emphasize it, hoping that I may strengthen the arm of the gentleman from New York in demanding of the Senate that they observe their rules.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am sure that my arm is much strengthened by the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. It should be understood that if the Senate will not observe its own rules it will not prevent us from observing ours.

Mr. PERKINS. May I be permitted a single observation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, there is one Senate amendment creating an additional chief of bureau. As to the necessity for this officer I know nothing; I only know in a general way that the disposition of Congress is to multiply these chiefs of bureaus. Now, when we come to the printing for Congress we find that the expenditure is constantly increasing. Each of these chiefs of bureaus must print, and a large part of the expense of the creation of these offices is in the additional printing which results, because much of the technical and difficult work that goes into the Printing Office is from these chiefs of bureaus. In this fact we find very largely the explanation of the constantly increasing expenditure on account of the Printing Office, and unless Congress will maintain a guard on this matter we must expect to make increasing expenditures for the Printing Office. This expense runs not only in the mere printing, but we find that the building accommodations and other facilities at the disposition of the Public Printer are proving far short of being adequate, and we are obliged to make a provision in large appropriations for the extension of the Printing Office plant. This is a matter deserving the serious consideration of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it understood that the House Committee on Agriculture recommends concurrence in the increase of force which has been suggested?

Mr. PERKINS. So I understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not, I will say to the gentleman, an increase of force. The man has been employed under a lump appropriation; the provision under consideration simply makes the place statutory. That is all.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman state the duties of the officer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be some question in regard to concurrence in a number of these amendments, I will ask to modify the report so as to send all the amendments of the Senate to the committee of conference.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will save time if he will run through these amendments and let us understand what they are.

The SPEAKER. The present motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], as the Chair understands, is that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to move concurrence in three amendments, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 44: Insert in line 16 of page 20 the words "to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer"; so that it will read as follows:

"For the publication of 75,000 copies of Special Report on Diseases of the Horse, of which there shall be 25,000 copies for the Senate and 50,000 copies for the House, $42,500 (44), to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That, Mr. Speaker, is an amendment the committee have agreed to concur in.

Mr. PICKLER. But I move to concur in it now. The amendment simply makes the money immediately available and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PICKLER. I now move to concur in the next amendment on the same page, amendment No. 45.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the publication of 60,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of Cattle and Cattle Feeding, of which there shall be 20,000 copies for the Senate and 40,000 copies for the House, $40,000, to be immediately available, and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is an amendment the committee have also recommended concurrence in.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not understand the gentleman. He has moved to nonconcur in all of the amendments, I understand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that that is merely a matter of convenience.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, it will take no more time to concur in it now than to let it go to the conference. Our committee understand that we want the books. I move concurrence.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask a question before that is done. This seems to be an appropriation of $40,000 for 60,000 copies of this report. Now, when was the report made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Several years ago. This is a republication of the old report.

Mr. CANNON. How many volumes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twenty thousand for the Senate and 40,000 for the House.

Mr. CANNON. I understand. But how many volumes are there in the publication?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only one volume.

Mr. CANNON. I have understood from members around me that there were two or three. Now, which is correct?

Mr. PERKINS. There is only one.

Mr. CANNON. How large a volume?

Mr. PERKINS. About the size of the Agricultural Year Book.

Mr. CANNON. Do you regard this as a wise publication?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do. It is important for the interests engaged in this business throughout the country.

Mr. CANNON. And it was made four or five years ago?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; two or three years ago.

Mr. PITNEY. It was published in 1892.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PICKLER, the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PICKLER. I also move concurrence in the next amendment, No. 46. I ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(46) For the publication of 25,000 copies of the Special Report on Cattle and Dairy Farming, of which there shall be 8,000 copies for the Senate and 17,000 copies for the House, $65,000, to be immediately available and to be disbursed by the Public Printer.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have some explanation of this matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is an amendment that the committee do not want the House to concur in, and I send to the desk a letter on the subject from the Department of Agriculture, and ask to have it read.

The letter was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1896.

SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the pending proposition to reprint a book entitled Cattle and Dairy Farming, which was issued as a public document from the Department of State about ten years ago.

This work, which is of great size, is simply a collection of reports from United States consuls in various foreign countries upon the subject at large, thrown together in geographic groups, but without editing or revision of any kind.

Some of these consular reports were made by men acquainted with or, at least, interested in the subject, and are very good of their kind. With these few exceptions, the material composing the book is crude, inaccurate, very much out of date, and largely obsolete.

The only feature of real value which the book has at the present time, and which renders it attractive, is a large number of tinted plates of cattle, etc. About one-third of these are very fair drawings, but as to the rest, breeders of the stock thus represented would be very loath to rest their reputations upon these illustrations.

This book should certainly not be republished without revision of a heroic character, and it seems to me that the money which a small new edition would cost could be put to very much better use in the compilation and publication of recent and accurate data upon the same general subject.

Very respectfully,

HENRY E. ALVORD,
Chief of Dairy Division.

Hon. CHARLES W. DARNEY, Jr.,
Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

I concur in above opinions.

D. E. SALMON,
Chief, Bureau of Animal Industry.

Respectfully referred to Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, chairman Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

I am reliably informed that eight-tenths of the dairy breeds illustrated are insignificant and unknown in this country—moreover, will never be known among us—and that those breeds we have would never be known by the pictures in this book, so much have they improved since this book was published, nearly ten years ago.

Respectfully,

CHAS. W. DABNEY, JR.,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that in my judgment this letter ought to be sufficient warrant to the House to settle this proposition at once. At the same time this illustrates, in my judgment, the heedlessness with which requests for printing are made in both branches of Congress, involving enormous expenditures of the public money. I can say further, that I do not know of one single, solitary request from any quarter that has reached the Committee on Printing for this document.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I concur most fully in what my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, has said. This book was published eight or ten years ago in a large edition and distributed, and I am quite sure that the facts stated in the letter which has been read from the desk are sufficient to satisfy the members of the House that the document ought not to be again printed.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment was debated in the Senate at length, and the economists there took the same position and talked just as they do here upon the subject.

Now, I want to read the testimony, in a short paragraph, with reference to this book that is worth a hundred such documents as the one read from the desk. They want another book. They want to edit another book over at the Agricultural Department. They want to get up some other book, and have the credit of editing it and making it a book from the Agricultural Department. That is what that letter shows.

Now, I want to read the statement of Senator KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota, a man who knows as much about this business of dairying and farming as any man in either branch of this Congress, and a great deal more than the gentleman who wrote this letter for the Department. Now, I call your attention to Senator NELSON'S testimony about this book. It is on page 2379 of the RECORD:

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, that I have examined that book and I say to the Senator having this bill in charge that the book referred to in this amendment was issued some years ago. I do not recall at this moment whether it was published under an order of the Senate or the House, but it is a most valuable report in two volumes upon dairy farming in the United States, and also in foreign countries. It is a work in great demand. I know that all the agricultural interest of the country will be immensely interested in the work and that we could not publish a work at this juncture when grain farming is so depressed that would be more interesting and more appreciated by the agricultural classes. I therefore trust that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Who signed that letter?

Mr. PICKLER. It is the statement of Senator KNUTE NELSON.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood it was a letter.

Mr. PICKLER. No; it is his speech in the Senate. I know that you can not suggest printing a page in this House but that you have the Printing Committee on your back in a minute and a half. Now, there is the evidence of Senator KNUTE NELSON, a man who is better qualified to speak than any other man with whom I am acquainted in either branch of Congress. He is a practical farmer, a practical dairyman, and knows what he is talking about. He says that it is a very valuable work and a work in great demand.

Now, gentlemen, I am especially interested in this at this time for the reason given by Senator NELSON. Our grain growing has been paying so little and we have been getting such a small amount for our grain under the present Administration that our people are looking for other branches of farming in which to engage, and especially dairying. We have a country especially adapted to dairying. Dairies are being established all over that section of the country west of the Missouri River, and the attention of the people is attracted to it at this time. Now is the time when we want these books, and if you put this matter aside and shove it out on the recommendation of the Agricultural Department the result will be that you will get no books; you will get nothing on dairying.

Let me say to the members of the House that there was an extensive debate in the Senate on this book. The objections which have been made here were brought up; but after an extended debate the Senate adopted this amendment without a division, and it seems to me we ought to concur in it. We want these books for distribution, and on the best authority that can be brought here, as I have read from this RECORD, it is reported to be a valuable work. Has there been any great change in dairying in the last seven years? What are the changes? This is a book concerning dairying in this country and in foreign countries, and I want to say to gentlemen, especially those who have no great amount of literature to distribute, that here is something valuable to your constituents, and inasmuch as it is provided that it shall be immediately available, the book will be published at once, and you will get it in time for distribution, much earlier than you will get other matter.

Now, one word generally in regard to printing. I admire the economy of my friend from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS], the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and I respect his judgment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is a veritable watchdog of every syllable that we try to print anywhere. But it is a strange notion to me that, after the Government has gone to the expense of all these investigations, after it has expended a large amount of money for the original publication of the work, we should hesitate in the small expense of a new edition. Here we publish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD day after day, and I have a resolution introduced and before our friends of that committee asking for a few more copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for distribution.

The plates of all these publications are down there, ready for the printing, and the cost would be nothing more than the paper and the sewing the sheets together. I say it is beyond my comprehension, after we have gone to great expense to prepare these plates—the results of these investigations along all these lines and in different scientific investigations—why the gentleman in charge of this matter should object to printing them.

Why do they refuse our constituents what they want and what they are entitled to? It is a matter of economy, it is something we owe our constituents, to distribute this knowledge. We have a great demand for these things. You are talking about helping different parts of the country. Here is a chance to practically help the men who are studying dairying and seeking to embark in that enterprise as they are now, extensively, in my State.

It was shown in the debate in the Senate and by other evidence besides this which I have produced here that this is a valuable work.

I move to concur in this amendment, because I think the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. WADSWORTH] in the House, judging from an intimation I had from him the other day, is not very much in love with this book. I believe it is the business of the House to concur now and let us have these publications.

This will give us a fair supply, and you can say to your farmer constituents that you have tried to do something. Here you have the horse book for distribution, the cattle book for distribution, and now let us have this book on dairy farming. Why should they not have it?

I want it for my constituents. We have the richest grasses and the finest facilities for dairying that can anywhere be found in this country. Our people are recognizing this, engaging in the business, and I want this book to aid them in their labors.

Mr. TERRY. What about the book on the honeybee? [Laughter.] That is a valuable publication that my people are very much interested in.

Mr. PICKLER. We do not engage in that kind of dairying in my State.

Mr. TERRY. But my people want that book and I want them to have it.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is through——

Mr. PICKLER. I will yield to the gentleman. How much time do you want? [Laughter.] I believe I am entitled to an hour in my own right, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman is entitled to an hour in his own right.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman has not concluded, I will wait until he does.

Mr. PICKLER. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota has been pleased to refer to the discussion in the Senate. I chanced to be on the floor of the Senate when this debate took place, and while I would not reflect upon the wise and reverend Senators, although they are not supposed to possess encyclopedic knowledge on all things, on this particular matter they certainly are in error. As a practical dairyman, I know that this publication is of no value—no present value to the dairymen of this country. Any gentleman can obtain the book down in the file room. It is a compilation of consular reports, made some ten years ago, with the smallest possible amount of practical dairy information. It comprises plates or prints of the different breeds of cattle illustrated, as my friend from South Dakota has said, by many fine cuts.

Mr. PICKLER. It is the Agricultural Department that says that.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The book speaks for itself.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me? Does he not believe if this book was published they might cut out and frame and hang up some of these pictures if they wanted to do so?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. That is all there is of value in the publication. The consular reports are obsolete. The dairy information is really of no value. There is more practical information to be obtained in one single bulletin published in the last year by the Agricultural Department than in this whole publication.

It is a most foolish expenditure of money; and, personally, I never would circulate my own quota of the books. I should be ashamed to send such a book to those of my constituents who are practical dairymen.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Has the gentleman examined this book?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I examined it to-day and yesterday afternoon, and also at the time of its publication. The Senator from my State sent me a copy of it at that time.

Mr. PICKLER. Your examination is of to-day?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have a copy of the book in my desk.

Mr. PICKLER. If it is such a large book, how could you have examined it this morning?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I examined it yesterday.

Mr. PICKLER. The witness changes his answer.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I stated I examined it yesterday and to-day and at the time of publication.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman says these consular reports are obsolete. We publish consular reports in regard to trade, commerce, and everything else, and do not we take these consular reports to be the best literature we have in any of the Departments? Why does the gentleman reflect on the consular reports?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. There are plenty of them, tons of them, of ancient date down in the basement of the Capitol, of value equal with those, and the gentleman can get them for circulation.

Mr. PICKLER. By no means. That shows that the gentleman is not posted on documents.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I am certainly posted on dairying.

Mr. PICKLER. And I am posted somewhat on documents.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. And I can assure the members of this House that there is nothing of value in this book.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the trouble with the book?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. There is nothing of practical value in it.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman says that this book has no information in it. That is too radical.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I still make the assertion that it is of no practical value.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PICKLER. I wanted about five minutes of my time. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is sorry to say that the entire forty minutes has departed. [Laughter.] The question is on concurring in the amendment which has just been read.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 73.

Mr. PICKLER. The yeas and nays.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-three gentlemen have risen—a sufficient number.

Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. RICHARDSON, and others. The other side.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Ninety-nine gentlemen in the negative—a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] will please take their places as tellers.

Pending the count,

Mr. WADSWORTH said: I withdraw the demand for tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The demand for tellers is withdrawn; the ayes have it, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 118, not voting 129; as follows:

So the amendment was nonconcurred in.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON] be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote, and several members changed their votes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. MONDELL. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request.

The following pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN with Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky.

Mr. HUBBARD with Mr. CULBERSON.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. ANDERSON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. PICKLER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House nonconcurs in the amendment, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] moves to lay that motion on the table. On that the gentleman from South Dakota calls for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire a vote?

Mr. PICKLER. I want a vote on the question.

The question being taken, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 34.

So the motion was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on nonconcurrence in the remaining amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question——

The SPEAKER. No debate is permissible, the previous question having been ordered.

The question being taken, the remaining amendments were nonconcurred in.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that a committee of conference be asked.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. WILLIAMS.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, by unanimous consent, obtained an order for a reprint of House bill No. 58.

ALDRICH VS. ROBBINS.

Mr. DINSMORE filed the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Aldrich vs. Robbins.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the Post-Office appropriation bill. Before that motion is put, however, there are one or two matters that I would like to have adjusted in the House. I give notice that I shall ask consent or move to close general debate on this bill at an early hour, but I desire first to see whether we can not arrive at some agreement as to the time. Before proceeding with that, however, I ask unanimous consent that a reprint of this appropriation bill be ordered, as I am informed that the file is entirely exhausted.

There was no objection, and the reprint was ordered.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed in forty-five minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. How does the gentleman propose to divide the time?

Mr. LOUD. The object of our committee is to accommodate everyone, within the bounds of reason. I do not know that we can suggest any division except such as the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may see fit to make. I have suggested forty-five minutes because that covers all the time that has been asked for.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that at least one appropriation in this bill will be fought; and if so I think gentlemen who favor it as reported in the bill ought to have equal time with those who antagonize it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that general debate on this bill close in forty-five minutes?

Mr. SWANSON. I object, until we can make some arrangement as to time.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent that general debate be closed in one hour, and that the time be equally divided.

Mr. QUIGG. An hour on both sides?

Mr. LOUD. Half an hour on each side, if there are two sides. I was not aware that there were.

Mr. QUIGG. I think if the gentleman will state frankly whether he intends to attack any portion of this bill——

Mr. LOUD. I have exhausted my time upon this bill, and I am now simply seeking to accommodate other gentlemen who desire to debate it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that general debate on this bill be limited to one hour?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. LOUD was then agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HULL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. On this bill general debate has been limited to one hour. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] to control the time on the one side, and would like to know if there has been any arrangement as to who shall control the time on the other side.

Mr. LOUD. I suggest that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], if acceptable to the rest of those gentlemen, control the time on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Virginia will be recognized to control the time.

[At this point Mr. LOUD conferred with several gentlemen in regard to occupying time in debate.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time. I can not find anyone who wants to speak in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. As I am in favor of the general provisions of this bill, I do not desire to dispose of my time now.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] give me a few minutes upon a part of the bill which is probably not so much in controversy——

Mr. LOUD. I have agreed to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] fifteen minutes. The remainder of the hour I will endeavor to distribute among my friends as equitably as possible.

Mr. BROMWELL. If the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Virginia are both in favor of the bill, it seems to me that some time ought to be given to those of us who wish to criticise the bill. As a member of the committee, I should like to have ten minutes for some general criticisms on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, not knowing who were in favor of the bill or against it, appealed to the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD] to suggest who should control the time; and it was agreed that the time should be controlled by the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Virginia. The chairman of the committee unquestionably controls half the time.

Mr. BROMWELL. I am not objecting to that; but I am objecting to the gentleman from Virginia, who is on the same side as the chairman of the committee, saying he does not care to dispose of his time. The other members of the committee may want to say something on the bill. I for one wish to occupy a few minutes; and it does seem to me that the division of time ought to be between the gentleman from California and myself or some other member who is not heartily in sympathy with the bill in all its features.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. LOUD. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman in charge of this bill for his courtesy.

I have always opposed the special facility item which has heretofore been carried in this bill. I am yet opposed to that appropriation, and also to the new items which appear for the first time, but I do not desire at this moment to enter upon a discussion of the merits of these propositions. I will say, however, that if the policy of special appropriations is to be inaugurated, my district should receive proper recognition. The consideration of this bill will probably not be concluded until Monday, and I desire therefore to submit some facts in order that gentlemen may reach a proper conclusion in respect to the proposed special facility service.

Paragraph 27½, on page 8 of the bill, provides:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Boston, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22.

That provision, or a provision in substantially similar terms, has been carried in the Post-Office appropriation bill since 1877. It first made its appearance on that bill in the form of a Senate amendment carrying $250,000, which was reduced in conference to $150,000. This appropriation is in addition to the statutory compensation allowed to railroads for the transportation of mails. I now desire to state the expenditures from this fund for the last fiscal year. On page 20 of the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General I find the following:

The annual rate of expenditure for this service on June 30, 1895, was $171,238.75, and the sum was expended as shown in the following statement:

No. of route.	Termini.	Railroad company.	Miles.	Pay per annum.
109004	New York, N. Y., to Philadelphia, Pa.	Pennsylvania	90.65	$11,331.25
113001	Philadelphia, Pa., to Washington, D. C.	Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore.	137.53	17,191.25
114002	Washington, D. C., to Lynchburg, Va.	Southern	173.13	21,755.00
114016	Lynchburg, Va., to Danville Junction (n. o.), Va.	do	65.52	8,217.50
114038	Danville Junction (n. o.), Va., to Charlotte, N. C.	do	142.29	17,850.00
121001	Charlotte, N. C., to Atlanta, Ga.	do	267.71	33,463.75
121003	Atlanta, Ga., to West Point, Ga.	Atlanta and West Point.	86.32	10,790.00
124001	West Point, Ga., to Montgomery, Ala.	Western Railway Co. of Alabama.	86.40	10,800.00
124012	Montgomery, Ala., to New Orleans, La.	Louisville and Nashville	318.72	39,840.00
	Total			171,238.75

Mr. Chairman, it will thus be seen that the total amount expended during the last fiscal year from this appropriation for the line beginning at New York and terminating at New Orleans was $171,238.75.

Now, if I remember aright, this appropriation was originally made on the theory that it would subserve the interests of the postal service to establish a line from New York to Tampa, Fla., which was originally the southern terminus of this line, with the view of expediting the mails to Cuba and the West Indies.

I come now, Mr. Chairman, to the next items in the bill, which are new items. The first carries an appropriation of $81,700 "for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans." The next item is "for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Chicago, Ill., to Council Bluffs, Iowa, via Burlington, $100,000." In connection with these paragraphs, because I do not propose at this moment to discuss them, I want to call the attention of the committee to the compensation now allowed by law to railroads, inasmuch as an additional appropriation is proposed to be given to certain roads.

This question, Mr. Chairman, is a very important one, and as preliminary to its proper solution it may be well, as I have already stated, to know what compensation the law now provides for railways carrying the mails of the United States. The railways are now paid on the basis of weight, on the basis of space occupied, and on the basis of distance run. These are the three elements that enter into the compensation allowed under existing laws. On the basis of weight the compensation is regulated as follows: To railroads carrying 200 pounds of mail matter the compensation per mile per annum of $42.75 is allowed; carrying 500 pounds, they receive $64.13 per mile per annum; carrying 1,000 pounds, they receive $85.50 per mile per annum; carrying 1,500 pounds, they receive $106.87 per mile per annum; carrying 2,000 pounds, they receive $128.25 per mile per annum; carrying 3,500 pounds, they receive $149.62 per mile per annum; and carrying 5,000 pounds they receive $171 per mile per annum; and for every additional 2,000 pounds over and above 5,000 pounds they receive $21.57 per mile per annum.

Then, in addition to this, there are intermediate weights, which entitle the companies to receive $1 additional per mile per annum. The weight is ascertained by reweighing the mails. The United States is divided into four geographical divisions for this purpose, and in each of the four divisions the mails are reweighed every four years; so that at the beginning of each four-year period the railroad companies receive the pay allowed by law on the basis of the increased weight during the preceding four-year period.

The railroads are also paid for car service, in addition to the compensation for weight. The pay for that service depends upon the length of the car as well as the number of miles the car is hauled. Railway post-office cars 40 feet in length are paid for at the rate of $25 per mile per annum; cars 45 feet in length, $30; 50 feet in length, $40, and from 55 to 60 feet, $50 per mile per annum.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look to the net result, so far as it appears as a charge against the public Treasury. In 1893 the Government paid the railroads for the transportation of mails, including post-office cars, $96,181,228. In 1894 the amount paid was $28,710,000; in 1895, $29,435,000. In 1896—that is, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896—there was appropriated $29,705,000. It was stated, however, by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee on yesterday that there will be a probable deficiency on account of this service for the current year of from a million to a million and a half dollars. So that the cost of the transportation of mails for the present fiscal year will exceed thirty millions.

Mr. LOUD. Probably thirty-three millions.

Mr. DOCKERY. Thirty-three millions, the chairman suggests, and it is probable that he is correct in this opinion, as he usually is in respect to matters of which he speaks.

Let me say further that the amount estimated for this service for the fiscal year 1897 is $32,411,000, and there is recommended by the pending bill $30,900,000. I have now briefly given, Mr. Chairman, not only the beneficiaries under the special facility items, but have also stated the rates of compensation under the statute for the general transportation of mails by railroads, and the total cost of that transportation. Relatively, the most expensive service of the Government is the transportation of our mails by railways. In this view the question becomes material in considering whether or not we are to inaugurate the new departure proposed by the pending bill. If these propositions are to receive the approval of the House, I must insist that the people I have the honor to represent shall also be beneficiaries under the new system.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with these remarks, I wish, in conclusion, to submit the following printed schedule of rates for railway mail transportation:

Schedule of rates for railway mail transportation.

Average weight of mails per day carried over whole length of route.	Pay per mile per annum. Rates allowable under act of Mar. 3, 1873.	Rates allowable under acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878.	Rates allowable to land-grant railroads, being 80 per cent of allowance to other railroads, under act of July 12, 1876.	Intermediate weight warranting allowance of $1 per mile under the custom of the Department, subject to acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878.
				Pounds.
200 pounds	$50.00	$42.75	$34.20
200 pounds to 500 pounds				12
500 pounds	75.00	64.12	51.30
500 pounds to 1,000 pounds				20
1,000 pounds	100.00	85.50	68.40
1,000 pounds to 1,500 pounds				30
1,500 pounds	125.00	106.87	85.50
1,500 pounds to 2,000 pounds				20
2,000 pounds	150.00	129.25	102.60
2,000 pounds to 3,500 pounds				60
3,500 pounds	175.00	149.62	119.70
3,500 pounds to 5,000 pounds				60
5,000 pounds	200.00	171.00	136.80
For every additional 2,000 pounds	25.00	21.37	17.10
Over 5,000 pounds				80

No allowance is made for weights not justifying the addition of $1.

Rates allowable per mile per annum for use of railway post-office cars when authorized: Railway post-office cars, 40 feet, $25 per daily line; railway post-office cars, 45 feet, $30 per daily line; railway post-office cars, 50 feet, $40 per daily line; railway post-office cars, 55 to 60 feet, $50 per daily line.

To constitute a "line" of railway post-office cars between given points, sufficient railway post-office cars must be provided and run to make a trip daily each way between those points.

Mr. LOUD. I will reserve the balance of my time for the present, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. LOUD. And I will state that I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman, in accordance with my agreement, so that he can proceed for ten minutes, if he so desires.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, that is a very convenient arrangement, because I think I am about equally divided in my support of this bill and my objections to it, and it is perfectly proper that I should get time from both these gentlemen.

I want first, and with a great deal of reluctance, too, as a member of the committee, to call attention to those features of this appropriation bill to which I object.

This bill, and the other appropriation bills which have been before this House at this session, it seems to me have been hurriedly put together and hurriedly passed, on the theory that this Congress has nothing to do but to pass the appropriation bills and adjourn; and upon the further theory that every appropriation bill must cut down—not only to the lowest legitimate point, but far below the legitimate point—the expenditures of money for the various Departments.

This bill, it seems to me, comes here prematurely. It comes ahead of other bills which should first have been considered by the Post-Office Committee, reported to this House, and acted upon, so that we might intelligently make the appropriation for the ensuing year in the Post-Office appropriation bill.

As an illustration of that, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are now bills before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads—bills for the reclassification of the railway-mail service, the postal clerks, and the mail carriers. It is impossible to say what the result of the action of this House will be upon those bills. It is estimated that if all three of them pass in their present form they will involve an additional expenditure of $4,000,000. This appropriation bill makes no provision for that. It assumes that none of those bills will pass this House. If they do there will be a deficit of $4,000,000 in this appropriation.

Another thing. The so-called Loud bill, for the purpose of increasing the rate on postage on certain second-class matter, has been reported back to this House and awaits its action. In the preparation of this appropriation bill the assumption has been made that the Loud bill is going to pass this House, and that as a result, in the increase of the postage on certain portions of the second-class matter, the Government will derive an additional revenue, and therefore the appropriation bill is framed with that in view. In other words, there have been two assumptions which will very materially affect the expenditures for the Post-Office Department, one to increase it and the other to decrease it. An increase of $4,000,000 will be necessary if the reclassification bills pass, and a decrease might be necessary if the Loud bill should be passed.

I want to enter my protest against the theory on which this House seems to have been acting upon these appropriation bills. I do not believe that it is our sole duty to cut down the legitimate expenses of the Government. I do not believe that we were elected to this House for that purpose. I believe that every legitimate expense that will assist in the proper carrying out of the functions of Government will be satisfactory to the people of this country, and as Republicans I believe we are making a great mistake on this side of the House in cutting down the absolutely necessary expenses of the Government in order to keep within the income which has been furnished to us by our Democratic predecessors in the shape of the Wilson bill.

I believe that we ought to expend judiciously and carefully, not wastefully, but prudently; but at the same time I believe that not a dollar ought to be taken away from any department of this Government as the result of which its usefulness will be impaired; and I believe as Republicans we ought to stand upon the platform that we propose to give this Government enough income to pay these expenses legitimately.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are one or two items of this bill to which I shall offer my opposition at the proper time, and which I think, as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I ought to explain now.

One of the items of this bill provides for the compensation of 30 additional inspectors. To that I am opposed. It developed in the investigation of the items of this bill that the First Assistant Postmaster-General's Office had been detailing, for the purpose of spying upon letter carriers, a force of men who were not under the civil-service rules, who were political appointees, for political purposes largely, it was claimed, and whose duty it was, without warning and without any responsibility, to report upon alleged derelictions of duty upon the part of mail carriers. As a result of that, carriers have been suspended, in many instances without fault on their part.

They have had no opportunity to make defense; and these men, these so-called "confidential agents," have been nothing more than a political machine used for the political benefit of that Department of the Government. Now, it is proposed that instead of calling them "spies," instead of calling them "spotters," to call them "inspectors," and put them upon the regular force of inspectors. Now, I would not object to the expenditure of money for the appointment of these additional inspectors if it could be shown to me that the services of these additional men were necessary for the legitimate work of inspection; but how should it come that, when the work of inspection heretofore has been thoroughly and satisfactorily done—that is, the legitimate work of inspection—that all at once, in this year, there should be a demand for 30 additional men. It seems to me that a much less number would be a legitimate increase, if these men were to be used for legitimate purposes; and until it is shown to me that these additional men, or any part of them, are necessary for the actual work of inspection of this Department I shall vote against the appropriation which calls for these men.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has referred to another feature of this bill to which I wish to call attention, that is the subsidy which has been granted to the Coast Line, or the Southern Railroad, I believe, and its connections with other lines. I shall not at this time express my views upon this question of subsidy, but I do want to call attention to the fact that there are other cities in this country to which a subsidy of this kind, if any is granted, is of as much importance to them as to the cities favored by subsidies reported in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman permit me to congratulate him upon the use of the word "subsidy"? That is what it is.

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, that is what it is; we all understand that. I live in a city in this country which also has important manufacturing and commercial interests, which would be perhaps helped by a subsidy for a fast mail train down south from Cincinnati. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment providing for a fast mail train south, or rather for a subsidy for a fast mail train south, from the city of Cincinnati to the city of New Orleans, and an additional one from the city of Washington to St. Louis by way of Cincinnati. If it is to the interests of the country that this Coast Line should be subsidized $196,000 to bring fast mails from New England and New York by way of Washington to New Orleans, it seems to me that it is important to our Western interests that a fast mail should be sent over what is really the shortest route from Washington to New Orleans by way of Cincinnati railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY].

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, the remarks which I shall make here this afternoon concerning this bill are on that portion which refers to the so-called inspectors, or additional inspectors, claimed to be for regular inspectors' work, when in fact it is the spy system continued. Mr. Chairman, I remember the time when we had but six inspectors in the United States; and I do not know but what the work was as well performed then as now; and if there is anything in this idea that we are to send publications over the country at pound rates, that we are to send supplements everywhere at the cost of millions to the Government for the purpose of enlightening and Christianizing the people of the United States, tell me where, in heaven's name, have we been benefited, if it is now found after this large expenditure, that 30 additional men are needed to catch alleged criminals in the postal service.

We started with a force of six or seven men. To-day we have 110, with about 90 in the field, and now we are asked to add 30 more to that service. I say to you as one who has had some experience in postal affairs for about thirty years that I never saw a time in my life, when I asked for an inspector, that I could not get one within twenty-four hours. There is no person so good an inspector as the postmaster himself. There is no man who can tell when wrong is being done within his own domain so quickly as the postmaster himself; and when wrong has been done, if any, that postmaster can call the clerks and call the carriers before him and ask them what is the cause of the trouble. I could settle that matter in ten minutes. I never have had an average of one inspector a year during the time that I was postmaster of New Haven. Aye, and I had time not only to inspect my office and run my own office, but the Postmaster-General would say, "Mr. Sperry, look over the offices in your county, and see how things are going along there. What these men want is kindness; what they want is proper instruction how to perform their duties. Go to them as an experienced postmaster may, and where no wrong has been committed, if they are not properly transacting their business from lack of knowledge or experience, kindly teach them and kindly tell them how." Do not send down a myriad of men upon the poor letter carriers as they are going from door to door, carrying messages of business, love, and mercy, as spies and detectives, and put an assassin's dirk, so to speak, in their official backs.

I tell you, gentlemen, it is un-American; it is unworthy of the name of the American Government to have men acting as spies upon employees against whom no complaint has ever been made. I know these men, at least some of them. Why, the postal clerks, the clerks in the post-offices, the carriers, are fit to sing to-day in the choir of the New Jeruselam as compared with the spies that are put upon their backs to destroy their character and occupation on frivolous charges and pretenses. And I say to you, having had for years 110 men on my pay roll, a purer, a more honest set of men than these same clerks and carriers and postal employees never trod the face of God's earth. And now it is proposed to have 30 additional so-called inspectors—really spies—to continue such work as was done last fall, when they went about seizing upon this man and that man and hanging them up without letting them know for what reason it was done, keeping them for weeks and for months deprived of their pay, and leaving them to-day, so far as I know, without any reason to expect that they are to retain their positions. And it was done to intelligent men, honest men, American citizens, who were doing their duty. If, forsooth, a carrier stopped a minute with a letter in his hand to wave an adieu to the girl to whom he was delivering the letter [laughter], that was an offense which was punished by suspension or removal.

Let us do justice to these men. Let us treat them as they ought to be treated. This abuse is one of the worst, one of the most un-American that can exist, and, in my judgment, it is one of the most efficient methods of demoralizing the force. I have observed these men in the postal service for thirty years as clerks and carriers, and I repeat it, sir, that a better, a more faithful, a more honest, a more efficient set of men as a whole never trod God's green earth. Now, do you propose to put this stigma upon them and permit what was done last fall to be continued? I do not believe this House will consent to it. I do not believe this House will do anything that will aid in the infliction of such an outrage upon one of the most earnest, faithful, and honest bodies of workers in the public service. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to congratulate the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the Post-Office Committee upon what seems to me to be the most intelligent Post-Office bill that I have ever read, and I have had occasion to examine the Post-Office appropriation bills very carefully for the last ten or fifteen years. This segregation of items is the point to which I particularly refer as an intelligent, orderly, useful proceeding; and as a result of that segregation of items it may be conceded that this detestable spy system is to a slight extent affected for the better. That is to say, the inspectors who are to do the spy business will now have to be appointed under the civil-service rules, and thus a guarantee will be afforded that they can at least read and write. But that is all there is in the way of an improvement.

The gentleman from California admits that he proposes in this bill to increase the force of spies. Now, I want to tell you, gentlemen, how these spies work and how they will work even after they are put under civil-service rules. A force of them is sent without the knowledge of the local postmaster into a given city, and of course without the knowledge of the letter carriers; they swoop down upon the city and proceed to "spot" the letter carriers. Let me give an illustration, which I undertake to say is a fair illustration of nine-tenths of the complaints that have resulted in the dismissal or suspension—not the temporary, but the indefinite suspension—of letter carriers. In my neighborhood a letter carrier called at a house to deliver a letter. With the servant who answered the bell came a woman who was visiting at the house and whose husband was absent in Europe. She began to inquire of the letter carrier as to the departures of the European mails. Of course, if he had been a learned lawyer as well as a gentleman he would have told her that the place for her to get the information she wanted was at the post-office, but being simply a gentleman, he proceeded to reply to her question, and he remained on that door-step in conversation with this lady about the departure of the European mails for several minutes. Six weeks later an information was lodged against this carrier for dereliction of duty, in that he had "loitered upon his route" in or about such a neighborhood. The carrier was suspended and for a period of nine weeks he lost his salary. Subsequently he was reinstated, but the outrage upon him was infinite none the less. He denied the offense. He did not remember the occurrence; and it took all those nine weeks to straighten out the facts in the case, ultimately to the vindication of the carrier. Now, I want to say that that is the general way in which this system operates, for the reason that these "spotters" sent to a city are under the necessity of proving that the letter carriers do not do their duty. That is what they are sent there for. They are "inefficient" if they do not bring "results."

Mr. LACEY. Does not the postmaster when he desires to get rid of a Republican subordinate make complaint and then send for one of these inspectors to look the matter up?

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, yes; there are partisan phases of the matter, but I do not care to allude to them now further than to say to my Democratic friends that of course this is a kind of game which, if people are mean enough to indulge in it, whether they are Democrats or Republicans, can be played by both sides. But I prefer to overlook that phase of the subject now and to assume that the Postmaster-General has not been guilty of that kind of offense, and that his men have not been guilty of it, although 90 letter carriers were dismissed as a result of this kind of investigation in the city of New York, and I believe it is almost true to say that the 90 were all Republicans. That, however, is an incidental phase of the case. The injustice is done, whether they are Republicans or whether they are Democrats; and the sense to which I am appealing here in this committee is the sense of justice of every member of it.

Now, I submit to the gentleman from California that if, in his opinion, a system of inspection is required different from that which has already been maintained by the local postmasters in all the cities, which I undertake to say has always been efficient and sufficient, for if a man is competent to be a postmaster in any of our large cities he is competent to take care of the letter carriers and see that they do their duty; that is what he is there for, and if he is not competent to do that without a force of foreign spies and spotters he is not fit for his job; but independently of that consideration, if a scheme of inspection is required, in the opinion of the gentleman from California, let him adopt some such system as is employed in all the great cities for the supervision of the fire department and the police department and all other such departments. Let him prepare a scheme which will provide a system of roundsmen for the carriers. Roundsmen would be the proper inspectors of the carriers. This is a system that can be devised with perfect ease; and if the purpose of the Department in this kind of spy business was not simply that of getting rid of men without the responsibility of saying how it got rid of them or why, it would adopt such a system of roundsman inspection.

One moment more. This bill increases the force of spies. I propose to offer an amendment by which the sum appropriated in this bill for this business of inspection will be reduced to the amount provided in the old act. I hope the gentleman will agree to this, and that between now and Monday he will so segregate the items or will so apply the $300,000 to the various items of expenditure under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General as to make my amendment operate equitably among all the items. If the gentleman will do that there will be no objection whatever to the force of inspection, and there will be every praise to the gentleman from California for his excellent scheme of civil-service appointment which he has embodied in this bill. I thank the Committee of the Whole for its indulgence.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said by the gentleman who has just taken his seat and by the distinguished gentleman who preceded him concerning the appointment of inspectors in the Post-Office Department that I think it but proper and just to give to the Committee of the Whole what has been the result of the work accomplished by that force. In order that the statement of the Department may go out along with the charges which have been made in regard to the employment of this force, I ask the reading of a portion of the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

SPECIAL INVESTIGATIONS.

Before submitting a detailed statement of the results that have been obtained during the past eight months by the investigation of the free-delivery service at a number of offices, it is proper to review the special conditions that made closer departmental scrutiny of the service necessary, and the disclosures that compelled the employment of confidential agents.

When the present Administration assumed charge of the Post-Office Department it found in the files of the free-delivery division of this Bureau fully 4,000 overtime claims of letter carriers, aggregating over $1,500,000, and overtime accumulating at the rate of $250,000 per annum. Five years have passed since the enactment of the eight-hour law, May 24, 1888, and the appropriations for the intervening years, notably that of the fiscal year 1888-89, had been especially increased to enable the Department to meet the requirements of the law; yet no appreciable decrease in the annual accumulation of overtime had been made. The efforts made by former administrations to obtain a strict compliance with the law resulted in its evasion. This alarming condition at once attracted the attention of Postmaster-General Bissell, who, on April 4, 1893, issued the following order prohibiting overtime and calling on postmasters to strictly comply with the eight-hour law:

"APRIL 4, 1893.

"SIR: In relation to the subject of overtime services and claims of letter carriers under the act approved May 24, 1888, you are advised that the judgment of the Court of Claims, rendered March 7, 1892, construing certain phases of that law, has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, from which it appears that 'the carrier is entitled to eight hours' work and to his pay if work is not furnished to him. For any excess on any day he is entitled to extra pay. The only offset that can be maintained is when he is absent from duty without leave. The Department is at liberty to keep a carrier employed eight hours every day, but not to give him a deficit of work one day and an excess another.'

"It appears, further, that for any 'overtime' actually made by a letter carrier on any day in the performance of any kind of duty in connection with the postal service to which he may be assigned by the postmaster he is entitled to additional pay pro rata.

"Under this decision a full day's pay is allowed for not exceeding eight hours' service in any one day. This service may or may not be in consecutive hours. It is not to be construed, however, as deciding that overtime may be allowed in any case unless for an excess of eight hours' actual service in a day.

"Postmasters will pay no claims for overtime services until they shall have been submitted to and approved by this Department.

"The accumulation of vast indebtedness for overtime services in the face of liberal allowances for free-delivery service is an evil which must be abated.

"Section 614 of the Postal Laws and Regulations (issued under date of February 2, 1893) prescribes the duties of letter carriers, and no deviation whatever from this rule will be allowed at any office where any letter carrier makes overtime.

"Moreover, any letter carrier found loitering or unnecessarily consuming time on his route, or absent from duty without permission in the absence of justifiable excuse, will be at once recommended for removal (postmasters can not appoint, remove, reinstate, or promote letter carriers), and at every free-delivery post-office where any carrier is working over eight hours a day, and the Department upon application refuses the allowance of additional carriers, the postmaster will at once rearrange his free-delivery service so as to bring his carriers' time within the eight-hour limit, either by curtailing the exterior boundaries of his free-delivery districts or by reducing the frequency of his deliveries or collections, as in his judgment may seem best for the interest of the service.

"And any postmaster who permits overtime to be made by any letter carrier, in the performance of work prohibited by the Postal Laws and Regulations, or in violation of this order, after May 1, 1893, will be liable to removal for cause.

"Very respectfully,

W. S. BISSELL,
"Postmaster-General."

Even after this order had been sent to all postmasters a disposition was discovered on the part of a number of them to require letter carriers to record eight hours daily for any and all service performed, regardless of the correct time. One office might be mentioned in which letter carriers were required to work in excess of eight hours per day, and were threatened by one of the subordinate officers with dismissal from the service if they made a correct entry of time on their trip reports.

All doubt that the practice prevailed among letter carriers of falsifying trip reports or official time records, with the approval of their immediate superiors, was dispelled soon after the Post-Office Department, acting in cooperation with the Department of Justice, began a systematic investigation of overtime claims. Prior to the beginning of this Administration practically nothing had been done toward a settlement of these claims, although the letter carriers, through their association and attorneys, had persistently urged official action of some kind. Early in 1894 the Postmaster-General selected two competent persons, experienced in the free-delivery service and familiar with the duties of letter carriers, to visit free-delivery offices, and, in the capacity of commissioners of the Court of Claims, to personally examine the time records and receive oral testimony of letter carriers and others for the purpose of expediting the settlement of claims for which suit had been commenced.

From the very first the commissioners reported that no reliance could be placed on the letter carriers' trip reports and official time records, because they did not show the facts; that the Government could build no defense on them; and that the carriers, by their oral testimony and that of others, could impeach the very records made by their own hands and prove their claims for overtime in spite of the official records. I quote extracts touching this point from some of the commissioners' reports:

"An examination of the time records of the station during this period (May 24, 1888, to April, 1893) discloses the same condition of affairs as existed at all the post-offices at this time, diminishing the value of the records as evidence of the exact overtime made by the men."

Also:

* * * "But the records do not show the time consumed in routing mail before and after each trip."

Again:

* * * "The imperfection of the records prevents any exact test of the witnesses' statements.

"In addition to the time shown upon the records, the carriers at this station claim they made overtime which did not appear of record."

And from a recent report:

"The time records were found to be in the usual deficient state in respect to showing the entire daily service rendered. The following witnesses were relied on as to showing the deficiency of the time records," etc.

It is fair to presume that if the practice of uniformly recording eight hours daily had concealed overtime at some offices, it also prevented the Department from knowing that at other offices much was being lost in "undertime" or unused time within the eight hours.

For the purpose of making carriers' trip reports records of facts which would stand in the Court of Claims, and to give the Department full knowledge of the exact time daily consumed by carriers in the performance of their official duties, I issued the following order, dated August 23, 1894:

"AUGUST 23, 1894.

"Postmaster,

"——, ——.

"SIR: Investigations recently conducted at several post-offices show that it has become a custom among letter carriers to enter on their daily trip reports schedule time, instead of the actual time consumed by them. I have reason to believe that this practice has become general. If it prevails at your office it must be stopped at once. The daily trip reports and carriers' time record must show the exact time consumed by them in the performance of their duties.

"You will forward to this office, as soon as practicable, a statement showing the actual time consumed by each of your carriers on each day during a period of ten days following the date of the receipt of this letter.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"F. H. JONES,
"First Assistant Postmaster-General."

The suspicions of the Department were fully confirmed, for the ten-day statement showed overtime at some offices and a large amount of "undertime" at many others. Careful computations show that the Department was losing at the rate of $500,000 per annum in "undertime" and superfluous carriers. Add to this the amount of annual overtime, and $750,000 may safely be estimated as the annual unnecessary cost to which the Department had been subjected.

The saving of this enormous annual loss could be effected only by properly enforcing the eight-hour law and so reorganizing the service as to equalize the force of letter carriers, reducing here, increasing there, and in that manner obtaining for the Department more nearly a full return for the immense sum annually expended for free delivery.

To this end the order of April 4, 1893, was renewed on January 1, 1895, and a copy of it transmitted to every postmaster in the following letter:

"JANUARY 3, 1895.

"Postmaster,

"——, ——.

"SIR: The attention of postmasters at free-delivery offices is directed to the order of April 4, 1893, respecting overtime of letter carriers. It is believed by certain officials of this Department that in some of the post-offices evasions of this order are in contemplation; that overtime is in fact being made by letter carriers, not recorded at the post-offices, and no claim is made for the same at present, but it is supposed that such overtime will perhaps be made the subject of claim at some future time. It is not supposed that the postmasters are cognizant of this fact, but it can hardly be the fact and escape the knowledge of the superintendents of free delivery.

"The order of April 4, 1893, has been and will remain in full force and effect, and I shall hold postmasters officially accountable for any omission to enforce it. The distinct purpose of that order was, and is, to prevent overtime being made, and not merely to prevent or postpone the making of claims for overtime.

"I inclose a copy of my order of April 4, 1893, herewith.

"Very respectfully,

"W. S. BISSELL,
"Postmaster-General."

To aid postmasters to effectually enforce the Postmaster-General's order, I issued the following special instructions at the same time:

"JANUARY 1, 1895.

"Important.

"To postmasters at free-delivery offices:

"Immediately upon receipt of this notice you will post in a conspicuous place in the carriers' working room at the main office and at each of the stations copy of the following rules:

"1. Carriers are strictly prohibited from reporting prior to schedule time, either for morning arrival or for the beginning of any subsequent trip during the day.

"2. Carriers must not remain at their desks or in the working room of the office during any interval or "swing" between trips or during the dinner intervals; nor must they remain in the post-office after reporting from the last trip of the day.

"3. Carriers must record the exact time consumed by them each day, specifying the beginning and closing of each trip and the time spent in routing mail and looking up and marking undelivered matter. Only the actual time employed is to be recorded, but all service rendered must be recorded.

"4. Carriers will continue to make their daily trip reports, making their entries at the beginning and end of each trip. The practice of filling out the entire report at close of day must be discontinued, and any carrier found continuing such practice will be promptly removed.

"5. Under no circumstances must carriers or superintendents conceal the fact that overtime—even to the least extent—is being made. Any attempt to do this will result in the removal of the offender regardless of his rank. It will be equally contrary to this order for any carrier whose route requires less than eight hours to expand the actual working time thereon, or attempt to record unnecessary time in order to have his trip reports show eight or approximately eight hours' work per day.

"6. Where collections are made prior to morning report, the first entry to the left on the trip report must cover the time so expended, and be accompanied by this note: 'Including collection.'

"7. Men detailed exclusively in collection service should not be allowed to enter the workroom of the office except to deposit their collections.

"8. The performance of clerical work by carriers is absolutely prohibited. Their work must be confined to the collection and delivery of mail, the routing of their mail for delivery, the marking up or 'logging' of undelivered matter, and the facing up of mail by collectors upon their return to the office. All other work, except the duty at the delivery windows, must be discontinued by carriers. All other work is clerical, and must be performed by clerks alone.

"Special.

"All carriers, superintendents, and assistant superintendents of carriers, superintendents of stations, and all clerks charged wholly or in part with recording carriers' time will be expected to acquaint themselves with these rules within one month from date or within one month from date of their respective appointments, so as to be able to quote them substantially to any agent or inspector of the Department, or to anyone delegated by the postmaster. Failure of ability to do this will be considered sufficient cause for removal."

In order to ascertain if these orders were understood and properly enforced, and to obtain exact information relative to the condition of the service at each office, that this office might proceed intelligently in the work of reorganization and readjustment, I required each postmaster to answer fully certain questions in a letter of January 1, 1895, hereto subjoined:

"1. Population of your town, according to the latest State, school, or police census.

"2. Estimated population served by carriers.

"3. Number of square miles within the corporate limits, according to municipal records.

"4. Number of square miles served by letter carriers.

"5. Does the free-delivery service extend beyond the city limits? If so, give the extent of territory, estimated in square miles.

"6. Number of carriers assigned exclusively to delivery service.

"7. Number of carriers assigned exclusively to collection service.

"8. Number of carriers mounted.

"9. Number of delivery trips made daily.

"10. Number of collection trips made daily.

"11. Do the letter carriers record actual time made by them? (See order of August 25, 1894.)

"12. Are the letter carriers, or any of them, making overtime?

"13. Have you, your assistant, or superintendent of carriers, ever tested the carriers' routes to ascertain if the territory is properly districted and the carriers distributed to the best advantage, and if they are performing their work properly?

"14. Do any of your carriers perform clerical work of any kind? If so, state fully the class of work performed and the time daily consumed in such work. (See section 614, Postal Laws and Regulations.)

"15. How many substitute letter carriers are employed at your office?

"16. Have carriers discontinued the use of twine since straps were furnished for tying up mail for delivery?

"17. Are the carriers properly uniformed and numbered? Do they wear complete uniform?

"18. How many street letter boxes in use at your office?

"19. Are the street letter boxes supplied with time cards showing the hours of collection?"

The replies to these searching inquiries enabled me to compile very exhaustive data (such as had never before been secured) relative to the entire service, namely, to compare the service of one office with that of another, to point out to postmasters irregularities disclosed by their own statements, to suggest to them methods by which the service could be improved and made to conform more closely to the postal laws and regulations, and in that way to establish a more uniform system throughout the service in so far as the topographical and other conditions of the various offices would permit.

After replies had been received from all postmasters I called for a statement, early in February, 1895, showing the time consumed by each carrier during a period of ten days. This statement differed from the ten-days statement of September, 1894, in that it showed the time daily consumed in the office as well as upon the carriers' routes. The information afforded by this last statement disclosed an unexpected lack of system, great differences appearing in the time allotted for office work at the various offices. For instance, at one office three-trip carriers would require but two hours per day for office work, while at another office, similar in most respects, three-trip carriers would consume nearly four hours in the same class of work. Then a case might be cited of a post-office serving a population of 10,000 people in an area of 4 square miles maintaining four deliveries per day in the business and two in the residence portions of the city, with five letter carriers working eight hours per day, while another office with a smaller population in a smaller area could provide only three business and two residential trips daily with an equal number of carriers.

There appeared to be no reason why the service at these offices should not be equal in every respect, and steps were promptly taken to effect the desired changes. Similar cases were dealt with in the same manner. All this led to correspondence which betrayed on the part of many postmasters a lack of knowledge of the regulations, the requirements of the service, their own duties and those of letter carriers. The attempt to correct irregularities by correspondence, however, did not prove effective or satisfactory, and it was decided to begin a systematic investigation of the service through special agents.

The agents obtained a record of the conduct of each carrier, the manner in which he performs his duties, take account of the exact time consumed by him on his route, test the efficiency of the collection and the delivery service, report the condition of letter boxes and whether or not they are supplied with proper time cards, and, in short, collect information that can not be gathered in any other way. When they are detailed for service in a city they are supplied with the letter carriers' schedule and route cards so that they may have no trouble in locating carriers at any point on their respective routes at any time during the schedule. At the close of each investigation they prepare a general report on the condition and requirements of the service, stating whether an increase of force is necessary or a decrease possible.

The persons to whom this work is intrusted are men of intelligence and integrity, many of them having had experience in the postal service. They are not permitted to make themselves known to postmasters, are especially warned against interfering with or attempting to entrap letter carriers, and are required to report only the acts and doings of the letter carrier in his delivery of mail, giving the record of the faithful and efficient carrier as well as that of the negligent and slothful. In all cases reflecting upon the conduct of the letter carrier force each carrier is furnished with a verbatim copy of the charges and given ample opportunity to submit such explanation as he may have before final action is taken by the Department.

A letter carrier's efficiency record is now being prepared from the data supplied by these agents as well as postmasters. When completed it will contain the individual record of each letter carrier in the service.

The work of the agents has been systematically prosecuted during the past eight months. The results of the work during this period may be found in the following statements, the first dealing with the personnel of the service, the second showing the actual saving to the Department, and the third giving the number of offices at which improvements have been made without additional cost:

Personnel.

Whole number of offices investigated	151
Total number of carriers employed at these offices	4,075
Carriers reprimanded for various irregularities	208
Carriers suspended for falsifying trip reports	57
Carriers suspended for failure to collect from street letter boxes	40
Carriers suspended for drinking while on duty and loitering	392
Carriers dismissed for drinking while on duty and loitering	55

The personnel of the carriers' force at 60 of the 151 offices examined was found to be above the average, the carriers being faithful and energetic.

Savings effected.

Reductions of the force at first-class offices between January 1, 1895, and October 1, 1895, equal to 157 carriers, at $1,000 per annum, making a saving at the rate per annum of	$157,000
Reductions at second-class offices between January 1, 1895, and October 1, 1895, equal to 61 carriers, at $850 per annum, making a saving at the rate per annum of	51,850
Total reduction of 218 carriers, at	208,850
Applications for additional carriers refused, equal to 132 carriers, at $600 for the first year	79,200
Gross saving	288,050

Under the practice in vogue before the establishment of the secret service, and depending upon imperfect data at hand, the Department would have made these additional appointments upon the showing submitted by the postmasters.

From this amount deduct the cost of the secret service from the date of its establishment, February 1, 1895, to October 1, 1895	75,000
And the service may be credited with a net saving of	213,050

Improvements ordered.	Offices.
Extension of service ordered at	68
Overtime stopped at	11
Letter boxes painted and collection cards supplied at	58
Carriers required to wear proper uniform at	23
Additional street letter boxes erected at	4

Besides the actual saving effected, the improved efficiency of the service in the offices investigated must be credited to this service. At every office the discipline of the force and efficiency of the service have been much improved, the work more equally distributed among the letter carriers, and at many offices extensions made and facilities increased without additional cost.

Several postmasters have acknowledged in letters to this office that they have been able to make the improvements and extensions suggested by the Department without the additional carrier or carriers previously requested, and several cities might be named in which the patrons of the post-office have thanked the Department for providing a better service than they have ever before enjoyed.

About one-fourth of the 604 free-delivery offices have been investigated, and by the close of the current fiscal year fully two-thirds will have been examined. I am confident that the results to be obtained will be even better than those reported herein, for the service is now more perfectly organized than it was at first, and its work more effective and expeditious.

The benefits derived from these investigations may be summed up as follows:

Securing the data and necessary details of the service to enable the Department understandingly and justly to consider all applications for increase of force.

To weed out the habitual loiterers and drinkers who bring discredit upon the service and upon the carriers.

To secure eight hours' honest work, with prompt delivery of mail.

Saving of overtime claims at the rate of $250,000 or $300,000 a year.

Saving, by stopping undertime and preventing the employment of superfluous carriers, $500,000 a year.

Establishing the fact that the continuance of carriers in the service depends only upon themselves and the proper discharge of their duties, without reference to any outside influence, political or otherwise.

Mr. MCMILLIN (before the reading was concluded). There is not time to finish the reading of the entire statement which I wish inserted in the RECORD; but I will ask that the remainder be published without reading.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What I may have to say on this subject, Mr. Chairman, I will say in the course of the five-minute discussion.

Mr. LOUD obtained the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Before the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] proceeds, I want to yield to him the remaining five minutes of my time.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall use more than five minutes; and I think I have about ten minutes of my own time remaining. I believe the general debate has gone about far enough.

I desire to thank my friend from New York [Mr. QUIGG] for the bouquets which he has so kindly thrown at me in relation to this bill; and I am thankful that he criticises only one portion of the measure.

In relation to the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY] and a portion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], I can understand, of course, that such remarks sound well at home; but they are not relevant to the bill which the House is now about to consider. Of course, Mr. Chairman, most of us have played whist; and most of us have anticipated the pleasure of "post-morteming" every hand after it is played. Really, this is a post-mortem of the spy system—a system which this bill absolutely wipes out. I do not desire particularly to discuss and rediscuss a question which is dead. But it seems that some gentlemen are so full of this subject that, even though we have (if I may be permitted to use the expression) strangled it beyond any possibility of resurrection, they must in the fullness of their hearts pour a little of their sentiment upon this House.

This bill carries no spy system. I stated frankly in my opening remarks the considerations which had guided and governed the committee in the preparation of the bill; and I may say I am surprised to hear the objections raised by members of the committee on this floor, because it is substantially the first time I have heard them, and this bill was considered in our full committee for two days.

Let me repeat what I said yesterday, that a supervision over every Department of the Government is actually necessary, and over the carrier service more than over any other branch of the service to-day. While I know, Mr. Chairman, that I shall give utterance to some remarks which will not, perhaps, sound pleasantly upon the ears of some gentlemen, I will state the views which have been gathered by me during months and months of close investigation and examination.

Now, while I am willing to admit that there may have been abuses in the spy system, as I said on yesterday, the result of that system has been not only to greatly benefit the carrier service itself, but has been of great benefit to the people of the country, who have some rights as well as the Government employees.

I may say here, Mr. Chairman, that in my humble opinion the American people have run free-delivery mad. I will repeat it, that the American people have run free-delivery mad. We are now in the great cities of the country, in the business portions of them, giving six and seven deliveries daily to business men. There is not a well-regulated business house in the country having its box at the post-office that will assume to go to that box and collect its mail more than four times a day.

Mr. ARNOLD of Rhode Island. What proportion of the business men avail themselves of the free-delivery service in the cities?

Mr. LOUD. That I can not say.

Mr. ARNOLD of Rhode Island. Do you think that more than one-half of them do?

Mr. LOUD. Now, so far as the residence portions of the cities are concerned, we are giving them, as a rule, four and five deliveries a day; and I say that it is the most absurd of the absurd. This system was inaugurated for the very purpose of cutting down the free-delivery service, which has run on from an insignificant sum a few years ago to an expenditure of $13,000,000. The deficit in the Post-Office Department has constantly been increasing, and I believe the fact that the Post-Office Department to-day is run by the Government is the most serious menace to our republican institutions. It is the most extravagantly managed Department in the Government. The spy system was inaugurated to put the system as far as possible on business principles. I assume, and I will undertake to make the statement, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a good, practical business man in this country to-day who could not, if he were to have the contract for ten years to run the Post-Office Department with the present appropriations, make from thirty to forty millions of dollars clear by the operation.

Mr. SPERRY. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SPERRY. Does not the free-delivery system to-day, as a whole, more than pay for itself?

Mr. LOUD. I do not think it does.

Mr. SPERRY. Then it did. I do not know what it does now; but it once did.

Mr. LOUD. In 1892, I will say in response to the gentleman, it did pay; but we have been running into extravagance ever since. I believe that if that service were curtailed and brought within its legitimate intent, if you were to give the people of the large cities such free-delivery service as justice demands, that the free-delivery service would not only pay for itself, but would return a liberal revenue to the Government.

Mr. TERRY. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOUD. I prefer not to yield for interruptions.

Mr. TERRY. I only want to reenforce the point the gentleman is making by suggesting that the free-delivery service cuts off the box-rent system and thereby decreases the revenues of the Government.

Mr. LOUD. Well, that is outside of my point. I desire to get back to the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut. He has condemned a system to which I have already referred in this debate. But your committee, and the chairman of the committee, I will say, was not willing to put the inspectors under the First Assistant Postmaster-General. For reasons advanced on yesterday I do not think that advisable.

Now, we have proposed to increase the force of inspectors, not to spy on the letter carriers, because you use that word in an offensive sense, but for the purpose of providing some supervision not alone over the letter carriers themselves, but over the whole Post-Office Department in the country.

Permit me to say that there are some 70,000 post-offices in the United States—correctly stated, the number is 70,014—and besides those detailed for service in the Money-Order Department, to be paid out of the money-order fund, there are 75 post-office inspectors to examine and supervise the work in the various post-offices.

Mr. SPERRY. What are the auditors for? These men were not sent around to make inspections until the last few years. They were employed for other purposes. The auditors did that work.

Mr. LOUD. What "men" does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I think the gentleman is probably going into the rural, or free-delivery service, and I do not want to get off into that field just at the present time.

Mr. PICKLER. I know I should not have any help from the gentleman, anyway.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; you would. I am always ready and willing to help the gentleman when he is in a just cause.

Mr. PICKLER. Unfortunately we do not agree as to the justness of it. Now, what is the complaint against the letter carriers?

Mr. LOUD. I will say that there is the same complaint against letter carriers that there would be against this very body of men, if they were hired to perform certain service. The natural desire of the average man in this world is to do no more than he is compelled to do. That is human nature. Now, with these 13,000 men there is no supervision. Of course the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY], when he was postmaster, did supervise not alone his own office but the whole county. But you must remember, Mr. Chairman, that we have very few men in this country who are imbued with those high principles and who have that activity and honesty and earnestness that the gentleman from Connecticut has, so we are dealing with the average honest man. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this is the last that will be heard during the consideration of this bill relating to this so-called "spy system."

Mr. QUIGG. Well, it is not the last that will be heard of it.

Mr. LOUD. For, permit me to say—and I will not say it in any offensive sense—this tirade against the "spy system," which is not carried in this bill, is nothing in the world but the merest buncombe.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is exhausted. The Clerk will report the bill by sections.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Third. For compensation to postmasters, $16,250,000.

Mr. MCRAE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment to paragraph 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in lines 13 and 14, page 1: "Sixteen million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars," and insert in lieu thereof "seventeen million dollars; that there shall be allowed and paid to each postmaster of the fourth class $5 for each quarter, in addition to the compensation allowed under existing law."

Mr. LOUD. I make the point of order against that, Mr. Chairman, that it is new legislation. I will withhold the point, if the gentleman desires to speak upon this amendment.

Mr. MCRAE. I yield to my colleague [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I consume the valuable time of this House, but I rise to support the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. MCRAE]. I have conferred with him upon this subject and I think this amendment is one that is eminently just and proper. I agree with the statement made by the chairman of this committee, that a great number of the people in our great cities seem to have run crazy upon the question of "free delivery." Year after year we are asked to spend millions of the people's money to increase the efficiency of that branch of the postal service. It is now costing the Government many millions of dollars. I read from the report, which states that for the free-delivery service the expenditure is $12,139,092. I am not opposed to free delivery within reasonable limits. In some of these great cities of this nation the letters and papers are carried five or six times a day and dumped into the laps of the patrons of the office.

Now, here is a proposition to make a small increase for that class of the American people who realize less benefits from the appropriations made by this Government than any other class of individuals in it. The so-called "business interests" of this country are constantly looking out for themselves. They are constantly clamoring for legislation in their particular interests. The golden streams of the Treasury are constantly going out to them. But the people who live in the rural districts of these United States, who constitute the bone and sinew of our population, rarely have their interests looked to in making the adjustment of these appropriations.

I propose to submit to this committee a few facts upon this subject, and if I can not finish in five minutes, I hope I shall be allowed five minutes more in order to complete my remarks.

To show you some of the expenses of this system, and how it operates, I submit the following facts and figures:

The total number of Presidential post-offices in the United States is 3,504. The average salary paid to these Presidential postmasters is $1,689. In addition to that, on account of the free delivery, there is paid out for letter carriers $12,139,092. The compensation of clerks in post-offices, most of them in the Presidential offices, amounts to $9,414,135. For salaries, Presidential postmasters, $5,897,200. Then for lights and fuel in these Presidential offices there is expended $1,324,695. Total for this branch of the service, $28,775,122, that is, for the sums paid out in that line.

Now come to the fourth-class postmasters: The total number in the United States is 66,560. The amount paid to them is, in round numbers, $10,182,308, or an average of about $152 each. Many of them, however, in our Southern and Western country are paid only five or six dollars, and some of them as low as $3 a year; and the great trouble that I have in my district is to get men to accept these post-offices and perform the duties. From time to time these offices have to be abolished; and what is the result? The people complain, and then we have to go to work to find some man who is willing to take the office, at such scanty pay, and then be hauled up by some red-tape post-office inspector for not keeping his office in first-class shape. Time and again, Mr. Chairman, I have had to appoint as many as half a dozen men in a year for one of these post-offices.

I hope I may be permitted to conclude my remarks.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended for five minutes by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee and the committee for their courtesy. Mr. Chairman, many a time I have been called upon to recommend, and have appointed as many as five or six persons in one year in one of these fourth-class post-offices, because a man could not afford to conduct it at what is paid. Pretty soon the office is abolished, and straightway I am besieged with petitions from the patrons of the office to reestablish the office. It means a great deal to those people out in the country. They do not write many letters, it is true; but when one of those people does write a letter it is a very important matter to the man who writes it, and he wants to mail that letter and get an answer without riding 10 or 15 miles to do it.

Now, while we are spending many millions of the people's money for free delivery and fast mails, and everything else, in God's name let us do something for those people. They are the men who, after all, are the basis of our national wealth and our national glory. From their ranks came the hardy pioneers that have pushed the outposts of your civilization across the plains and beyond the mountains. They are the men, sir, who swung their axes in the unbroken forests and blazed the pathway and leveled down the highway along which the chariot of your civilization has been rolled. [Applause.] Let us do something for them, sir, and let us not raise these petty points of order every time there is a proposition to do something for the plain people of these United States. [Applause.]

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire just a few minutes to express my approval and hearty support of the amendment offered by my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE]. I did hope that my friend from California in charge of this bill would forego the point of order, but of course he must be governed by what he sees to be his duty in this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I can not hope to express to this House in as forceful and I may say in as eloquent a manner as has been done by my colleague [Mr. TERRY] who preceded me the reasons which in my judgment should impel this House to adopt these amendments. It is sometimes said that the Post-Office Department ought to be self-sustaining. I heard that argument when I was a boy—that those who used the post-office ought to pay for it.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if that rule were applied all the way through, then the people who use the Army and the Navy and for whose benefit we maintain the Army and Navy should be taxed with the expense; but that is not the case. The people of the whole Union pay the tax in proportion to their ability, if we have just taxing laws. There is no class of servants of the people of the United States so poorly paid as are the fourth-class postmasters in the rural districts of this country. I know full well—as I have had some of the experience of which my colleague has spoken—of the difficulty in keeping postmasters in the small offices in the rural districts. The people there need post-offices. The rising generation—the boys and girls, young men and young women—need these post-offices for the dissemination of knowledge. They are the sons and daughters of the pioneers, they who carried the domain of empire of this country westward, across arid deserts, over streams and mountains, and who planted the American flag on the Pacific Coast.

They are people, Mr. Chairman, who do not get very much at the hands of the American Congress. I have been told that to adopt this amendment will cost $1,500,000. An increase of a million and a half dollars for postal facilities for the patrons of the 60,000 fourth-class post-offices in the United States is a small sum. My only objection to the amendments of my colleague [Mr. MCRAE] is that they do not go far enough. I would prefer the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] to regulate the salaries of these fourth-class postmasters. The postmasters at these small post-offices should be paid more, so that competent men and women could afford to give more time to them in the proper discharge of the duties of those offices, which are for the benefit of the people who live in the rural districts of this country. Those people are entitled to this amount of consideration at the hands of the American Congress. It is not a matter of grace and of favor we are asking in their behalf at your hands; it is a matter of right.

We are asking in these amendments what it is said would increase expenditures a million and a half dollars, which is held up as a piece of amazing extravagance, and yet the report of the Postmaster-General shows that over $12,000,000 was paid for the maintenance of the free-delivery system in the cities of the country last year.

I believe the present temper of this House is to grant this increase if allowed to vote on the subject, and I again appeal to the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to withdraw the point of order.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is clearly a change of existing law, and would be clearly out of order. That part of the amendment which increases the appropriation, if offered as an amendment, would be in order.

Mr. MCRAE. I will take the judgment of the House on that portion of the amendment increasing the appropriation. If we get the money now, perhaps we can get the other hereafter.

Mr. LOUD. That is a new amendment.

Mr. MCRAE. I insist upon that part of my amendment which the Chair holds to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. That part which increases the appropriation would clearly be in order if introduced as a new amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in lines 13 and 14, on page 1, "sixteen million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert "seventeen million dollars."

Mr. LOUD. I will just say that I hope that that amendment will not be adopted. That can not accomplish the object that the gentleman has in view.

Mr. MCRAE. But is not that the amount the Department asks for this purpose?

Mr. LOUD. It is.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the items in this bill that I think I give my approval to in the shape in which it comes from the committee, and in connection with it I desire to call attention to the gradual increase in the amount of expenditures for this purpose, as shown at the bottom of the first page of the report. The statement shows that the expenditures for 1890 for this purpose were $13,761,749.72, and then follow the figures of the expenditures for each succeeding year. There has been a gradual growth from year to year, not following any definite rule, but each year exceeding by a little the expenditure for the preceding year. The expenditure for 1891 exceeded that for 1890 by $812,000; 1892 exceeded 1891 by nearly $676,000; 1893 exceeded 1892 by nearly $648,000; 1894 exceeded 1893 by only $20,000, while 1895 exceeded 1894 by only $61,000.

Now, assuming that the increase for the next year will follow, approximately, the increase for the year preceding, the expenditure would be less by nearly $100,000 than the amount recommended in this bill. In other words, if we let the appropriation stand, as recommended by the committee, at $16,250,000, we are providing for an increase over the expenditures of the preceding year of about $170,000, which is nearly three times what the increase was for the year before. It seems to me, therefore, that the allowance made by the committee in this item of the bill has been liberal enough to prevent any deficiency if we appropriate $16,250,000, as recommended.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say only a word. While I come from a city, I agree entirely with what the gentlemen on the other side [Mr. TERRY and Mr. NEILL] have said about these fourth-class postmasters. I have lived in country districts, and I know these postmasters. I know that they are a worthy, sturdy class of men, and I believe they ought to receive this additional compensation. So I trust that the amendment will pass.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read.

The amendment was read, as above.

Mr. DINGLEY. How would this amendment give these postmasters any more compensation than they are now receiving? Their compensation is fixed by law, and simply increasing the appropriation would not increase their compensation.

Mr. McRAE. If we get the money for the salaries we will trust to Congress to give us the legislation necessary to pay them the additional compensation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it would be as well to wait until we get the legislation before we vote the money.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McRAE. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 13 and 14, page 1, after the word "postmaster," strike out the words "sixteen million two hundred and fifty thousand" and insert the words "seventeen million," and add the following: "That there shall be allowed to all postmasters where the pay under existing law does not exceed $100 per annum the sum of $10 per quarter, which shall be paid them quarterly, in addition to their present compensation."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment changes existing law.

Mr. LITTLE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order. I desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. LOUD. This ground has been fully covered already, but I will withhold the point of order for a few minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Of course I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is open to the same objection as the prior one, so far as the point of order is concerned, but I want to say to the gentleman in charge of this bill that I hope he will find it consistent with his views of public duty to withdraw the point. I want to say to him—and I suppose I voice the sentiment of almost every gentleman who represents a rural district—that in my district, as in all such districts, there are a large number of postmasters whose compensation does not exceed ten or twelve dollars, and some who do not get more than three or four dollars. The country is sparsely settled; a post-office has perhaps from ten to twenty-five patrons, and it is impossible to get a farmer to devote his time to attending to the office for the small pittance that he receives. It would not pay a man to do the mere clerical work for the amount of money some of these postmasters get.

I have put this amendment at the very lowest point to which I think it ought to go, so as to embrace none whose salaries exceed $100, but if the gentleman will not accept that, I would be willing to reduce the limit to $50, or even to $25. Now, I do appeal to the gentleman in charge of this bill, without buncombe or anything of that kind, to consent that this change be made. We can not expect a farmer to give up a corner of his house for post-office purposes without some compensation, and in many cases they have to go 3 or 4 miles and carry the mails upon their backs simply for the accommodation of their neighbors. This amendment would not increase the appropriation very largely. I do not know just what the increase would be, but the money need not be used unless it is found necessary.

I say to the gentleman, in all candor and sincerity, that it seems to me a simple matter of right to adopt this amendment. If we want to serve these people and give them their mails at least once a week, we certainly ought to provide means whereby they can have postmasters. It should be remembered also that these postmasters, even in the most remote districts, are required to file quarterly statements with all the accuracy and precision that would be required of a man in a Presidential office. They can not be expected, it seems to me, to do this without compensation, although many of them do so. Almost daily there comes to me information of the resignation of some one of these fourth-class postmasters, whose salary is perhaps $10; and there come to me applications from people wanting the office continued; but no one is willing to assume the responsibility of the position. People of that class are as much entitled to their mails as the best man in the largest city in the country. They are just as good citizens; they pay their taxes; they are patriotic in their devotion to the country.

I see that in this bill the appropriation for the free-delivery service is increased nearly $5,000,000 above the amount appropriated last year. If my amendment be adopted, it will not raise this appropriation above the amount recommended by the Postmaster-General.

I do hope that if it is in the heart of the committee to help this service in the least they will do so. The Postmaster-General is powerless without legislation of this kind, which I believe he would welcome. In conversation with me the other day he said:

Our Department is overrun with these matters. As quickly as we appoint a man as fourth-class postmaster and he finds out the duties incumbent upon him he resigns, and thus we are forced frequently to discontinue the offices and deprive the people of the service.

I do appeal to the chairman of the committee to withdraw his point of order and let us at least take the sense of the Committee of the Whole on this question. I believe that it is in the heart of this Congress to give the pittance which my amendment asks. The amendment is to apply only to postmasters who under the present law receive less than $100. I urge and beg the gentleman from California, out of consideration to those plain, honest people who under existing circumstances are deprived of proper mail facilities, that he withdraw his point of order and let us take the sense of the Committee of the Whole upon my amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved upon the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order; there is no need of taking up time in this discussion.

Mr. LOUD. I think the matter has been sufficiently discussed. I state emphatically that I shall not accept any proposition of this kind. If gentlemen want that sort of legislation, let them bring it before the House in the regular way. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope I may be allowed a few minutes.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman can make his remarks on the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment which puts the matter in a somewhat different form.

The proposed amendment of Mr. PICKLER was read, as follows:

Add to the appropriation these words:
"Of which amount there shall be allowed to all postmasters whose pay under existing law does not exceed $100 per annum the sum of $10 per quarter, which shall be paid them quarterly, in addition to their present compensation."

Mr. LOUD. That amendment is subject to substantially the same point of order as the one just ruled out.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to explain my amendment?

Mr. LOUD. I dislike to insist upon the point of order; but let me say to the gentleman that he will have ample opportunity before this bill is concluded to get in his speech on this subject.

Mr. PICKLER. I am not anxious to make a speech.

Mr. LOUD. I state emphatically that I shall not accept any amendment of this character.

Mr. PICKLER. This amendment is in different form from the last.

Mr. LOUD. I know it is; but I shall not accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California, the Chair understands, insists on the point of order.

Mr. PICKLER. I understand the gentleman to say, then, that these fourth-class postmasters shall have no show in this bill if he can avoid it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken. This amendment proposes new legislation, the provision being in substance the same as that of the two amendments already ruled out.

Mr. PICKLER. I move, then, to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I regret, as I said yesterday, that it seems impossible to do anything in this bill for the fourth-class postmasters or for the country districts. It appears that the chairman of the committee, in his wisdom, has found it necessary to insert in the bill a great many innovations, involving large expense, for the benefit of the city districts; yet he absolutely refuses the appeals, in whatever shape they may come or from whatever source, of gentlemen who want something done for the rural districts.

I do not wish to detain this committee by saying anything further in favor of the claims of these fourth-class postmasters. The gentleman from California well knows the merits of this matter; but he lives in a city district, and I know that he has no sympathy with the men who live on the prairies and away from the larger post-offices. I know that he has no sympathy with the fourth-class postmasters or their patrons. I know that he has no sympathy with the people who have to go a long distance for their mails because they can not get anyone to serve as fourth-class postmaster without pay. The gentleman in every way possible has shown his antipathy to the interests of that class of people. It seems to me I have never seen a more just appeal made to a gentleman in charge of any bill than has been made to the gentleman from California this morning for help in this bill for the fourth-class postmasters. If the gentleman will even concede the right of this Committee of the Whole to express its judgment on this question, that is all we ask. Let us take the sense of the Committee of the Whole. Let us see whether the majority of members on this floor are not in favor of helping these fourth-class postmasters.

The amendment which I offered, and which the Chair has just ruled out of order, did not propose one dollar of increase in the appropriation; yet the gentleman in charge of this bill, representing a city district, and having no sympathy for our people in the rural districts, having no sympathy for fourth-class postmasters, having no sympathy for the people who are so unfortunate as to live away from the large cities, like San Francisco, refuses, stolidly refuses, to listen to any measure of relief for these people.

I regret the action of the gentleman very much. I regret that while this bill is loaded down with innovations there can not be something done for the rural districts. It seems to me that when so much is done for the city districts, at least this little bit might be done for the rural districts. Even here, this morning, the House refused to take a step to help the farmers of the country. Now, here is a proposition which must be slaughtered also, because the gentleman takes the same position on it that was taken with reference to the other. I regret it very much.

I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to say that I am in favor of the amendment just offered. According to my information and knowledge an appropriation was made in the Fifty-second and also in the Fifty-third Congress. A sum of money, I forget the exact amount, but I think about $20,000, was appropriated for the purpose of experimenting in the matter of free delivery in the rural districts of the country. This amount was not expended as it should have been done. The Postmaster-General, in his annual report at the beginning of the Fifty-third Congress and Fifty-fourth Congress, I believe, stated that he found it impracticable to establish such a service. In this opinion I do not concur, but such are the facts in the case. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it is impracticable, according to the opinion and ruling of the Postmaster-General, to establish a free delivery in the rural districts, it seems that it would be nothing but simple justice and fairness that the same result might be accomplished in some other way, and these advantages ought to be accorded to these people; and in view of the fact that the House can not do this in any other way it should increase the salaries of fourth class postmasters, a majority of whom are in the rural districts—at least we ought to proceed in some way to give the people in the country the benefit of this mail service.

In behalf of the district I represent, which is almost entirely an agricultural district, and of course a rural district, an increase in the salary of these fourth-class postmasters is the only way that we can reach the class of people who live throughout that region and secure for them the advantages which the post-office is supposed to secure for the people of this whole country. It does seem to me that if the House will stop for a moment and consider this question, and not seek to override and vote down or destroy by points of order every measure that is brought in here for the interest of that class of people—I say that if they would stop to reflect for a moment, after that reflection I am convinced they would be willing to do this small act of justice to this class of people in the rural districts. They can not be reached in any other way, and unless we afford them relief in this manner in many parts of the country it would be utterly impossible to reach them at all throughout the whole of the country districts.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from South Dakota, to increase the salary of these officials, and indorse the eloquent words spoken by the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from South Dakota with reference to them. I see no reason why the people in the country should not receive the same privileges with people of cities and towns.

I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixth. For necessary miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with first and second class post-offices, including furniture, $150,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, may authorize any of the postmasters of said offices to expend the fund he may allow them for such purposes without the written consent of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk to this paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 16, of page 2 of the printed bill, the words: "For necessary miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with third and fourth class post-offices, including furniture, $100,000."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the point of order be considered as pending upon this amendment for the present. I will look the matter up. I do not think it is authorized by law.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with what has been said by gentlemen around me, both on the left and right of the House, in reference to taking care of the third and fourth class postmasters of this country. I understand that points of order have been raised on all the provisions of this bill which have been offered here in the shape of amendments looking to the increase of the salaries of fourth-class postmasters, because it was an increase of salary and not authorized by existing law, and therefore that it could not be done legitimately on the appropriation bill.

But this amendment does not raise or interfere in any way with a salary. It is an appropriation in the exact terms of the bill itself and relates to necessary and miscellaneous expenses in the third and fourth class post-offices; whereas the paragraph in the bill just read refers to necessary and miscellaneous expenses in the first and second class post-offices. If one is germane to the bill the other certainly is.

Now, if we have a right to expend $150,000, as the bill provides, for these necessary and miscellaneous items, including furniture, without naming them, for first and second class post-offices we have an equal right to expend a hundred thousand dollars for third and fourth class post-offices; and that amount will enable the Postmaster-General, in the exercise of his discretion, to take care of these poor places in the country and accomplish that which we are all anxious to accomplish, namely, to assist the country districts in the matter of mail service.

I live in a city myself, but in my district there are a large number of country post-offices also. I have means of knowing the amount of work done in the country post-offices, and I am aware of the fact that the allowance made by the Post-Office Department for carrying on that work is not enough. This will enable the Postmaster-General to allow a reasonable amount of miscellaneous expenditures, items of furniture, and other matters of that kind connected with the work of the offices, and will meet the point argued so ably by the gentleman from South Dakota, the gentleman from Arkansas, and the gentleman from South Carolina.

I hope the amendment will be adopted, because it is just what we have been saying we wanted to do. If a man is getting only a small salary, and in addition to that gets some money to pay the expenses of his office, it is the same as an increase of salary. You give a man $20 a year salary and then you provide a sum for the expenses of his office. It is equivalent to raising his salary, for at the time you are keeping him within the salary fixed by the law you allow him something for the rent of his office, for fixing it up and other matters of that kind, which involve an expense to him, and this would practically amount, in the long run, to an increase of his salary.

I hope my amendment will prevail, because it is simply an act of justice, and certainly these third and fourth class postmasters need justice at our hands.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order. This is an item that has never been carried before, and I am satisfied that it is not warranted by law, even if the other one is.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understand the gentleman to say that it has never been in the bill before, and that that is a reason why it is amenable to the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As I understand, the appropriation for bicycles is something new, and according to that it would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, it has not been very long; it is since the gentleman and I were born, and that was only a few years ago.

Mr. LOUD. This is an expenditure not authorized by law.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I submit that the mere fact of a point of order being raised does not of itself make the point of order good. The mere fact that it is said to be opposed to existing law does not of itself make the point of order good. If this is amenable to any law or any rule I hope it will be pointed out, because it is an appropriation in the exact language of the item in this bill, found in lines 9 to 16, inclusive, in which the money is appropriated for first and second class post-offices. If we have a right to appropriate money for first and second class post-offices, in the name of all that is reasonable and right, why have we not the right to appropriate money for third and fourth class post-offices?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. What is the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The gentleman states that it is a point of order; that it is subject to a point of order, and that is all.

Mr. LOUD. There are some gentlemen in the House who understand what they say, perhaps, as well as the gentleman from California, my colleague, understands them. I raised the point of order, Mr. Chairman—and if the gentleman did not hear me I will repeat it—that this is an appropriation not authorized by existing law.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Where is the law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to be discussing the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes, and I will ask, where is the provision of law with which this is in conflict?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Where is the rule?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Where is the provision of law? I yield to no man in my respect for the intelligence and learning of the gentleman from California, my colleague [Mr. LOUD], the chairman of this committee; but at the same time I am in the condition of the gentleman from Missouri the other day when he said that precedents were sometimes bad. Now, I should like to know where the law is. The very fact that this has never been in an appropriation bill before does not of itself prove anything. Is it possible that an appropriation bill in this House is tied down to the narrow rule that nothing can be put into it except what was in the appropriation bill of the preceding year? Are we carrying on the business of this Government upon that rule? I thought this country increased in size, in wealth, and population——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And in Treasury deficiencies.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, in deficiencies. I do not know exactly what he is referring to, but it must be a good thing or he would not call my attention to it. [Laughter.] Now, I understand that this House has a right to appropriate money to carry on the post-office business of the United States, and we have a right to appropriate money for anything necessary to carry on the Post-Office Department. If we find it necessary to hire or buy a bicycle or a canceling machine, we have the right to do it. If we find it necessary to appropriate an immense sum of money—$12,300,000—to have a free-delivery service in the cities of the United States, in the name of equity and justice, why have we not the right to appropriate $100,000 to assist the third and fourth class postmasters in doing their work, for the benefit of the farming population of the United States?

Mr. SPERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Why, certainly; a hundred of them.

Mr. SPERRY. My point is that in places where the free-delivery system is established the citizens pay for their own delivery 2 cents for every letter that they mail, while the farming towns pay only 1 penny for some classes of letters. The cities themselves pay enough for the delivery of those letters to make free delivery self-sustaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course, if the gentleman from Connecticut says so, it is so [laughter]; but I always understood until this moment that it cost 2 cents to send a letter, whether you mailed it in San Francisco, in Hartford, or in Red Gulch.

Mr. SPERRY. The gentleman needs further instruction.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Certainly, certainly!

Mr. SPERRY. Speaking now of the 2 cents which is paid on the delivery of the letter in the town where free delivery exists——

Mr. PERKINS. Drop letters.

Mr. SPERRY. On what are called in post-office parlance "drop letters," and it is these drop letters in the cities where their letters are delivered that pay the expenses of these drop letters and the free delivery.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman means that when you mail a drop letter in a city you pay 2 cents on it, and on a drop letter in the country you pay 1 cent?

Mr. SPERRY. That is it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. So far as I have ever been advised there never yet was a drop letter put into any country post-office. [Laughter.] The farmer sends his letters through the post-office because he wants to send them to his relatives and to his business connection.

Mr. SPERRY. If the gentleman will allow me a word?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Why, a dozen.

Mr. SPERRY. I will tell him that any letters dropped in the country post-office for a part of that country town where it is dropped pays but 1 cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well; if that be true——

Mr. SPERRY. I merely stated that to the gentleman because I saw that he needed information.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, if that be true, then I have learned something; and I am going to move to the country so as to reduce my postage from 2 cents to 1 cent. [Laughter.] Heretofore I have been swindled by Uncle Sam, and I propose to introduce a relief bill for my own benefit before this session closes. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPERRY. I hope the gentleman will not do that until he has destroyed his use of the franking privilege.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. You will vote for my bill, will you not? As I understand the franking law, I can only frank my official business. If the gentleman from Connecticut can tell me how I can frank letters to my relatives and friends I will be obliged to him. I have been paying postage and swindling myself again. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SPERRY. I will be glad to inform you that you can frank those letters according to law; and the law is very plain, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I have learned something. "Never too late to learn." [Laughter.] As I was saying, when interrupted in a very pleasant and instructive manner by my very pleasant and instructive friend from Connecticut, I see no reason on earth why we can not appropriate money for giving postal facilities to the poor as well as to appropriate money for the rich people. We should legislate for the farmers as well as the banker and the speculator on Wall street, as I think we are spending altogether too much money at the wrong end. They have got money enough to pay for their postage if it was $100 a letter, while the farmer needs to be given all the advantage he can. And I was saying it does not make any difference how this money is to be spent. If it is spent for the benefit of the Post-Office Department it is certainly legal. Would it be out of order to have a paragraph in this bill providing for the purchase of a new kind of canceling machine? I have read in the newspapers something about mail bags and how people were injured or demoralized in making mail bags. Would it be out of order if I introduced an amendment to appropriate money here to buy a patent self-acting double-extension mail bag that would cure itself of all injuries? [Laughter.]

Now, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that if it is out of order it must be out of order because it interferes with some law; and I respectfully ask the chairman to call our attention to the part of the law or the section of the law that this amendment violates, because if it be true that we may not legislate and can not appropriate money in a bill to pay the expenses of the Post-Office Department except for the first and second class post-offices, the sooner we find it out the better, and then commence to pass bills that will enable us to legislate for the poorer post-offices that really need legislation as well as the rich and powerful post-offices.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to state that the gentleman's amendment is not germane to this paragraph. This paragraph is distinctively for the compensation of postmasters. That compensation is positively fixed by law with reference to the first, second, and third class postmasters, and with reference to the fourth-class postmasters the amount of the cancellation of their stamps as adjusted quarterly, each year determines it. The amendment is not in any wise germane to this paragraph.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is a good enough lawyer to know that in a case of this character the onus of proof should be upon him——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No, sir.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). But I will cite the authorities for the gentleman, if he will possess his soul in patience for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I never could do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. Try; and if you fail, try, try again. [Laughter.] Section 1415 of the Postal Rules and Regulations covers this exact subject. It is as follows:

> The Postmaster-General may allow to the postmaster at New York City and to postmasters at offices of the first and second classes, out of the surplus revenues of their respective offices—that is to say, the excess of box rents and commissions over and above the salary assigned to the office—a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent, fuel, light, furniture, stationery, printing, clerks, and necessary incidentals, to be adjusted on a satisfactory exhibit of the facts; and no such allowance shall be made except upon the order of the Postmaster-General.

That is as far as the law goes, and we have no power to appropriate beyond the first and second class post-offices.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is that the law, or is it a regulation of the Department?

Mr. LOUD. That is the Revised Statutes, section 3866.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California, like all men from California, is a good man and an able man [laughter], but, as I understand, he is not a lawyer and does not practice law, and he has fallen into the error, which I think is common among men who are not lawyers, of citing a law that does not apply to the case. This statute says that:

> The Postmaster-General may allow to the postmaster at New York City and to postmasters at offices of the first and second classes, out of the surplus revenues of their respective offices—that is to say, the excess of box rents and commissions over and above the salary assigned to the office—a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent, fuel, light, furniture, stationery, printing, clerks, and necessary incidentals, to be adjusted on a satisfactory exhibit of the facts; and no such allowance shall be made except upon the order of the Postmaster-General.

Now, that does not, in express terms, provide that the United States Congress shall not appropriate any money for third and fourth class offices, and it is a well-known rule of law that when a statute is legislating upon a particular subject it exhausts itself upon that subject and does not inhibit or prohibit legislation upon other subjects. This is simply an expression of opinion by the legislative department that for that particular class of service and for that particular class of post-offices certain money may be used out of a certain fund. But, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's law is good, then his whole paragraph is amenable to a point of order and is without any warrant of law, because the paragraph does not confine this expenditure to the surplus revenues of the respective offices, but takes it out of the Treasury of the United States, and this law that he cites——

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will read a little more carefully—of course I understand that he is a good lawyer and I am a shoemaker—but nevertheless if he will read the law a little more carefully, he will find that in no case can this allowance be made under that statute unless it be made out of the surplus revenues of the office. Now, the fourth-class post-offices have no surplus revenues, the postmaster absorbing the whole revenue in his salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, again the gentleman is incorrect in citing a proposition of law, because this bill does not appropriate any money out of any surplus revenue, but does appropriate it out of the Treasury of the United States, and if his point of order is good, then this whole paragraph is amenable to that objection, because it says that you can pay this only out of the surplus revenues. But, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for citing me this law. The very next paragraph reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General may hereafter allow rent, light, and fuel at offices of the third class in the same manner as he is now authorized by law to do in the case of offices of the first and second classes.

That would certainly permit the amendment so far as third-class post-offices are concerned.

Mr. LOUD. So far as the law applies to the third-class offices, if the gentleman will peruse it a little more carefully, he will find that it applies only to rent, light, and fuel, and we have no power to go, in third-class offices, beyond those three items of light, rent, and fuel, for which we provide in a preceding section of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But you do not make any provision for rent, light, and fuel.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes, we do. We have already passed that item.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the law cited by the gentleman from California does not apply; that it does not in any way show that this amendment is out of order. I hope the Chairman will overrule the point of order, because I believe that in so doing he will decide in exact accordance with the law and as he would do if he were a judge hearing and acting upon argument in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. The law which has been cited by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] authorizes the Postmaster-General to make allowances for rent, light, fuel, etc., to postmasters in second and third class offices; and the act passed March 3, 1893, provides for the payment of first-class postmasters. The amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON], even if in order, would not be germane to the pending paragraph, but if offered to the preceding paragraph, in connection with which this subject was under consideration, it would be liable to a point of order, because it changes existing law; it proposes a radical departure from the law now upon the statute book—both the act cited by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and also the act applying especially to fourth-class postmasters, which provides for determining their compensation entirely with reference to the cancellation of stamps. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent—and I address myself especially to the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD]—that we may go back to the fourth paragraph. I was necessarily out of the House when that paragraph was read and had not opportunity to offer an amendment which I very much desire to offer.

Mr. LOUD. At present I think I must decline to accede to the gentleman's request, but perhaps later on——

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me say to the gentleman that I do not expect to be in the House on next Monday, and if I can not bring forward my proposition now I can not do it at any time. It will be a favor to me if it may be done now.

Mr. LOUD. I suppose the gentleman from Iowa is aware that there is another gentleman pressing a similar request in regard to another amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, this is not very much of a favor. It is almost always granted when requested. I ask unanimous consent that we may go back to that paragraph, so that I may offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked to return to paragraph 4.

Mr. DINGLEY and others. Let the proposed amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is made that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa be read; which will be done, if there is no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 2, page 2, after the words "for compensation to clerks in post-offices, $10,350,000," insert "$600,000 of which shall be available and shall be used in payment of clerk hire in third and fourth class post-offices."

Mr. DINGLEY. That would be new legislation and subject to a point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole return to paragraph 4. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to call attention——

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman from Iowa offer an amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Let it be understood that a point of order is pending upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California reserves a point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that this amendment can be adopted without any increase of the appropriation. I suppose gentlemen are aware of the fact that it has been the habit of the First Assistant Postmaster-General to apportion a large sum—$580,000 last year—to the payment of the clerical service named in my amendment. He has stopped that; and now he allows only a sum sufficient to compensate for the labor of separating at separating offices. That will probably require $80,000; so that $500,000 that has heretofore for years been used for clerk hire in third-class offices will not be used for that purpose unless some such provision as that which I offer be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I notice that the appropriation, notwithstanding this curtailment of the service, is increased nearly $300,000; and it is increased in the face of the fact that the committee report a saving in 1895 of $285,000, the sum which was not expended from this appropriation, which in that year was but $9,700,000. Now, this bill increases the appropriation some $250,000 above the last appropriation, so that there is in the bill, available for this purpose, even if this were a new use or purpose, $535,000. I submit that this is an important matter—important to all of us who have a large number of third-class offices in our district.

I want to repeat what I said yesterday, that the whole trend of improvement in the Post-Office Department is in the interest of that fraction of the people that live in the large cities. There is no proportionate expenditure made or proposed for that class of people living in the villages. Yet more than half of all the people of the United States that are served by the Post-Office Department are served by the third and fourth class offices.

Let me call your attention, as a proof of this, to one or two facts. For compensation of clerks in post-offices the amount asked for by the Department is $10,500,000. This bill provides for $10,350,000. Now, all of that, save and except about $100,000, is to be appropriated and used in the first and second class offices, and only about $100,000 or less will be used in the second and third class offices, where the great masses of the people receive their mail.

Again, let me call your attention to another appropriation here—that is, for letter carriers. There was appropriated—and I can not find in the report now the exact amount—something like $10,000,000 for this purpose. Every dollar of that will be expended in the first and second class offices. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining of this. I believe it to be absolutely right. I want to see the improvement of the mail facilities continued and extended to the third and fourth class offices, but I do not want to see the curtailment that the Department is engaged upon in reference to any of these third and fourth class offices, for it is just as important that at the third and fourth class offices mails should be expeditiously distributed as it is in the first and second class.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman in charge of this bill on yesterday said that there was not a postmaster who had a salary of eighteen hundred a year at a third-class office who could not do all the work of the office himself. He is mistaken in that.

Mr. LOUD. That statement was qualified to a certain extent.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). The gentleman was mistaken in his statement. But suppose that it could be done; suppose it was a fact that the postmaster at such an office could perform all the work; suppose that from 6 o'clock in the morning to 9 o'clock at night some office had to be kept open to meet at any time during those hours the arrival and departure of the mails; suppose the postmaster could, in the fifteen hours, perform the labor of distributing the mails. Is it not also true that when the mail comes in the people of the third-class office are just as anxious to have it distributed as they are in the cities? They do not want that the whole day shall be consumed by the postmaster in performing alone the duty of receiving the mail. They want it distributed as well.

And, Mr. Chairman, it is not right that men should be compelled to do this work. It is the purpose of the Government to facilitate the business of the people by the rapid movement of the mails and the rapid handling of the mails. We recognize the rightfulness of this service, and there is no member, I take it, who grudges to the business man the superior facilities that are accorded to him in some of these places. Now, here are $23,000,000 that are appropriated for this service, and yet all of that, with the exception of $80,000 or $100,000, will be expended in the first and second class offices. All we ask is that out of one of these appropriations of more than $10,000,000 there may be reserved $600,000 to be used, as heretofore it has been used, in facilitating the delivery of mail matter to people who live at third and fourth class offices. It is justice that it should be done, and I urge on the members the proposition I have submitted with the hope that this will be done.

I thank the committee for its courtesy.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Chairman, it may appear to be a work of supererogation to add a word to what has been so well said this afternoon along the line of this discussion. I doubt not that it is "love's labor lost," but still it is in the line of progress.

What the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has said and what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] has said are in the line of progress to demonstrate the true principles of the postal service of the United States and the relation of the legislation of this body toward that service. It is not a service for the purpose of raising revenue for the Government, any more than your appropriations for the Army, for the Navy, or for any other Department of the Government. It is an appropriation for educational purposes, if it may be so expressed. It is for the purpose of disseminating throughout the rural districts those opportunities for general information that by liberal appropriations are now accorded to the urban populations. There is no line of thought suggested nor is there a line of thought entertained by me or by my constituents that would antagonize appropriations of the most liberal character for the urban population.

I am in full accord with the principles and with the purposes expressed and conveyed by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], as also other amendments along this line, although I doubt not it is all lost, as the chairman of the committee has on this floor enunciated the fixed determination to "rule out" such proposed changes, and states that such changes and reforms as we seek for the benefit of third and fourth class post-offices can only be accomplished by direct legislation. But where will the general legislation come from? It will never come from out the burial chamber of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I say that without casting any reflection upon them or impugning either their patriotism or their sincere interest in all classes alike of the American people, but make the assertion based upon results of all such efforts tending toward innovations or remedial legislation. I doubt not but what every word that has been said this afternoon will apparently be lost. But it will not be really lost.

All efforts toward remedial legislation is accomplished by agitation and by such discussion as this, attracting the attention of legislators and the people at large toward a true interpretation of the mail system and its possibilities for general welfare and for the upbuilding of rural populations. It only accentuates that record that was made thousands of years ago, when it was stated that "the dogs may eat the crumbs that fall from the children's table." With all due deference, the dogs of fourth-class post-offices are deprived of the crumbs that might fall from the table that is spread with such bountiful profligacy for the children of the urban districts.

I contend, and shall contend, not only in this Congress, but wherever I may have an opportunity, for the improvement of facilities in third and fourth class post-offices, and am in full accord with the remarks of the gentleman and with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, in order that the House may understand exactly what we are voting on, I ask the Clerk to report the amendment again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. LOUD. I suggest I do not think the point of order would hold in this case.

Mr. DINGLEY. I insist upon the point of order. This provides that $600,000 shall be used. I understand that as the law stands now that would not be used.

Mr. LOUD. If the word "shall" is in there, it does change existing law.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by substituting the word "may" in the place of the word "shall." I think if we have this declaration in here on the part of the House, that it will be used as it has been used heretofore; so I shall be glad to modify the amendment by substituting the word "may."

The CHAIRMAN. So that it will read "the amount of $600,000 may be used."

Mr. DINGLEY. But does not that change existing law? If the law as it exists now does not allow the use of so large a proportion for this purpose the word "may" does not change the relation of it to the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Maine that for years the money has been used in the way I am seeking to have it used.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine insist on the point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY. I am taking the statement of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that this would allow a larger proportion to be used for third-class offices than the law now provides for them.

Mr. HEPBURN. The law, as I am advised, does not in any way separate this gross sum in its application to offices of a particular class.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not.

Mr. LOUD. With the modification which the gentleman from Iowa suggests, I do not think this is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. The law is this:

That the Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail routes as distributing and separating offices; and where any such office is of the third or fourth class, he may make a reasonable allowance to the postmaster for the necessary cost of clerical services arising from such duties.

That is the act of July 12, 1876, upon which this appropriation has always rested and been disbursed. Now, he has the discretion under this act, but his discretion is confined to distributing and separating offices, and under that he has disbursed the amount.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am perfectly willing to meet that by a modification of the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. My judgment is that the distribution of this large amount, upward of $10,000,000, is far better left in the hands of the Post-Office Department, which is always in sympathy with a good administration of the service, than to be left in the haphazard judgment of Congress as to whether the amount used for this purpose shall be five hundred, six hundred, or seven hundred thousand dollars. You have no right to make it obligatory upon the Postmaster-General that he shall take so much from this fund, unless those offices, under the statute, are distributing or separating offices.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have said to the gentleman, and I say again, that I am entirely willing to modify my amendment in harmony with his views.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no antagonism to fourth-class post-offices.

Mr. HEPBURN. I see you have not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Because they are the feeders of the great offices.

Mr. KYLE. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa, if he modifies his amendment in accordance with the suggestion he has made, then the only effect of it is to increase the amount of this appropriation, is it not?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; it does not increase the amount of the appropriation. I ask to insert the word "separating" before the word "offices"; so that it will read "third and fourth class separating offices."

Mr. BINGHAM. Distributing also?

Mr. HEPBURN. "Separating" is the word they use in the Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. The law says "distributing and separating."

Mr. KYLE. Then, if I understand the gentleman, the effect of the amendment will be to limit the amount that the Postmaster-General is to use in this distribution to $600,000. Is that the effect of it?

Mr. HEPBURN. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say something with reference to the merits of this amendment, and to call the attention of the House to this fact: The Post-Office Department when the estimates were made up for the amount necessary to carry on this department of the postal service put it at $10,500,000. This bill appropriates $10,350,000. The law as it now is permits the Postmaster-General, at his discretion, to take whatever is deemed an amount sufficient to pay whatever may be necessary for the distribution of the mails for these offices about which we are talking. Now, I submit that if there is anything in the gentleman's amendment except to increase the amount of the appropriation it is to take away from the Postmaster-General that discretion which he now has; and I submit to the good judgment of this House that that ought not to be done. He of all officers in the Post-Office Department knows better, and keeps up with whatever is necessary to be done in these offices. He knows the amount of work. He knows the number of the different offices. He knows the amount of work and the number of clerks needed to carry on the distribution. He knows where the mail is to be sent out to the star routes, and is fully informed on that subject; and I say again if there is anything in the gentleman's amendment except to increase the amount of this appropriation it is to take away from the Postmaster-General that discretion.

Now, as to the merits of the proposition to increase this appropriation. The committee took this item and went carefully over it when we had an opportunity to sit down in our committee room and carefully consider what was necessary.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman says that they had an opportunity to carefully consider what was necessary. Did you observe the fact that there was an unexpended balance of $285,000 from the appropriation of 1895. I think the appropriation was $9,700,000, or $650,000 less than the appropriation of to-day. So that you have appropriated $650,000 and $280,000 more than was expended in 1895. Now, will you account for that? Why did you do that? Here is substantially a million dollars more appropriated this year than was used in the year 1895 for this very same purpose.

Mr. KYLE. The answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that the service of the Postal Department is growing. It is true that we appropriate more money than was appropriated in the preceding year. We do not appropriate, however, as much as was asked by the Department; but we do appropriate $250,000 more than was appropriated in the preceding year, and we propose to leave this matter in the sound discretion of the Postmaster-General to distribute this money where his judgment dictates it is necessary. That is all there is about this proposition.

Mr. QUIGG. Does not my friend think that $10,000,000 is a very large sum of money to be left to the discretion of anybody to distribute? Was not almost every member of the Post-Office Committee during the argument on the clerks' classification bill in favor of taking the distribution of this money out of the hands of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. KYLE. In reply to that, Mr. Chairman, I will say that this does not change the discretion that has been left in the Postmaster-General heretofore.

Mr. QUIGG. I know.

Mr. KYLE. There has been no criticism along that line.

Mr. QUIGG. That is what we have been objecting to all the time. It is an enormous sum to leave within the discretion of one man to distribute.

Mr. HEPBURN. If I can have the indulgence of the House one moment more, I want to call the attention of the gentleman who has just spoken in regard to the discussion in the committee. Why is it——

Mr. KYLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr HEPBURN. It was not to ask a question. Why is it, and what does your committee have to say in regard to this matter? Here they have proposed $300,000 of an appropriation more than is used. I do not know how it is for this year, but they had $285,000 for the last fiscal year. Now, then, why is it that they are insisting upon this change in the use of this money, a use that has been going on for very many years and that Congress has acquiesced in from year to year by making the needful appropriation? What is said upon that subject by the Department? What is the Department going to do with this money? Here is a sum sufficient, and more than sufficient, for them to continue these expenditures. You have increased the sum that was sufficient by $250,000. What is to be done with the money? Now, the Postmaster-General will not use it in the way that it has been used heretofore. I insist that if $500,000 is to be saved, then this item is $500,000 too much.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask how this question stands and whether a point of order is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was in doubt whether the gentleman from Maine made the point of order or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. I made the point of order, but the amendment has been modified since; and I would like to hear the amendment read as it stands now.

The amendment as modified was reported.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think the point of order will hold.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think as the amendment has been modified it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa why it is that he would not limit it to $600,000?

Mr. HEPBURN. Five hundred and eighty thousand dollars, I think, was what our friend from California told us.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the gentleman means that they may not need it?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman apparently does not understand its purpose. The Department, as I understand, desires to limit to a very inconsiderable extent the sum which has heretofore been used in the payment of clerk hire.

Mr. BINGHAM. That I did not understand. Then the Department has changed its policy?

Mr. HEPBURN. For example, take an office where $800 was allowed, they have cut it down to $80, and where $400 was allowed, to $40, and that amount of appropriation can not be used for any purpose under this clause, except to compensate for the labor engaged in the actual separating for star routes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman think his amendment will reach that?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think so. I think that if there is an amendment of this kind adopted, expressing the will of Congress in the matter, the old allowances will be continued.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman designs this as a mere indication of the will of Congress?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is all I ask. Under the rule I can not get the legislation I desire. If I could, I would like to make it imperative.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, can only result in injury to his case, if it can result in anything. There was expended in 1894 for this service $578,000. It is a service as to which the Department is restricted. Allowances can be made only for separating purposes. I have no figures since 1894, but I should say that for the year ending June 30, 1897, they would probably need more than $600,000. Now, permit me to say that the gentleman is seeking to accomplish something that he never can accomplish by this method. I think his intent is to defend the postmaster at Clarinda and to secure this clerk-hire allowance of $800, but I want to say in behalf of this service—and I would like the attention of the committee on this point—that the Post-Office Department is not pursuing the course of reducing this allowance. There has been no revision of this system for fourteen years. The amounts allowed to distributing offices fourteen years ago are being allowed to-day, and the First Assistant Postmaster-General has sent to every separating office in this country a strip, such as I hold in my hand, requiring them to send back to the Post-Office Department the amount of work they perform under these heads: Number of routes—times per week, number of offices pouched on; indirect service—number of routes, times per week, number of offices pouched on; separating labor—pieces of mail separated daily, registry transmits handled monthly, amount paid per annum for clerk hire.

On the return of these slips the First Assistant Postmaster-General readjusts these allowances. There are several offices which have become large distributing offices that have been heretofore allowed no clerk hire whatever, and when the First Assistant Postmaster-General sought to investigate this matter he found there was a condition of things existing that ought to be remedied. Let us take the office at Clarinda, to which the gentleman from Iowa refers. Of course, it may be that the postmaster there has to work until 9 o'clock at night and he may have to be up at 2 o'clock in the morning. For argument's sake, I will admit that. But under the amendment which the gentleman has offered he can not get any money for that office except for separating purposes. Now, let me tell the gentleman what the business of separating is at the office of Clarinda.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, there is no possible contest between the gentleman and myself on that point; but he does not appear to understand the situation.

Mr. LOUD. Well, that is probably owing to my dullness; but I hope the gentleman will not take up all my time explaining it to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman understood the subject he would know that under this authority to employ clerical labor at separating offices they have made allowances far beyond the demands for simple separating.

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps not beyond the demands at the time when they were made.

Mr. HEPBURN. There are a couple of star routes that take 40 or 50 letters out of that general mail, and the Postmaster-General does now make an allowance of $80, which is sufficient to cover that service, but the point is that the Department heretofore, exercising its discretion, has allowed for "separating" a sum of money that has been applied in the general clerical management of the office. That practice has been universal. It is found in every one of your second-class offices now, and it is to secure the continuance of that system that I offer this amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. We want that continued.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, have not my five minutes about expired?

The CHAIRMAN. They have expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield the gentleman my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. Now, let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that even if his amendment prevails he can not help his postmaster at Clarinda, because the present Administration, I think, is going to enforce not merely the intent, but the letter of the law. Let me explain to the committee how much work there is now being done at this post-office at Clarinda and why this allowance for clerk hire is being cut off. This is what the Department says:

On January 13, 1896, the postmaster at Clarinda reported to me that he separates daily 386 pieces of mail from these star routes and railroads, which would take him probably thirty minutes a day, and also has 54 registry transmits monthly; that is, during the month 54 registered letters will come into his office for other points and he is obliged to make a record of it and send it on. This would be an average of a little over two a day for this service. For some reason the postmaster at Clarinda has been drawing for several years $900, and on February 3, 1896, I reduced that amount to $80 a year, in the belief that he was not entitled to any more under the law and to make it fair and just to other offices that do more work, etc.

There is the milk in the cocoanut so far as Clarinda is concerned.

Now, let me cite another office where there are 2,377 pieces of mail handled daily, and registry transmits per month 645 in number, and where the clerk-hire allowance is only $480. Now, then, the First Assistant Postmaster-General is endeavoring to equalize this matter. This office was allowed only $80 under the conditions stated. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General did not desire to run this appropriation for clerk hire beyond a reasonable amount, and he has sought to cut down such offices as Clarinda. He has endeavored to expend a reasonable proportion of the appropriation upon the offices where it properly belongs. I beg to say that his course in this direction meets my hearty approval, as I think it meets the hearty approval of the people of the country. It is business, Mr. Chairman, that the First Assistant Postmaster-General is trying to do.

As to the gentleman's amendment, he can accomplish nothing by it. If the amendment should accomplish anything, it might be in the direction of injuring the very interest that he is seeking to advance, because the effect of the amendment is to limit the appropriation, which would perhaps necessarily cut down some of these amounts below those which would be allowed under proper conditions without the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying to the gentleman that he has entirely misapprehended the purpose which I have had in view in this matter. I have tried my best to enlighten him, but for some reason or other the effort seems to be unsuccessful.

I have not claimed for one moment that the compensation for the labor of distribution was not ample. The gentleman has read correctly the returns from this particular office in regard to the labor of separating, but he has not read the returns from that office showing that there are eight or ten mails received daily, that there are thirty or forty sacks of mail matter daily, that there are hundreds and hundreds of packages received there for distribution, so that the services of three persons are required.

Now, this $800 has been appropriated heretofore for that clerical labor, and this is what I want continued; this is what every gentleman here who is interested in this class of offices wants to have continued. The Postmaster-General, however, proposes to limit the expenditure in such offices to $80, which, while it might be sufficient for the labor of distribution, allows nothing for increased facilities and more rapid distribution; and the money saved in this direction the Postmaster-General would expend in expediting the business of the great cities. That is what I do not want.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEPBURN, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 59, noes 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

Eighth. For pay of letter carriers, $12,254,300.

Mr. PICKLER. I think it will save the time of the Committee of the Whole if the gentleman from California will indicate what there is of new legislation in the provision for the free-delivery service.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, there is a desire on the part of several gentlemen that the House should now adjourn. I shall give the fullest explanation in reference to this matter; but it is a question whether at this hour we had better go on with the bill or accede to the wish of many members that the Committee of the Whole should now rise. This is a question which is liable to cause us a great deal of discussion; and I think the House is uneasy, or it would not have determined as it did on the last vote. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. PICKLER. I have the floor, I believe. I wish to say that I may not be here on Monday, and I desire now to enter a point of order against any new legislation that there may be in the provisions with reference to free-delivery service. I want that point of order to be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota raises a point of order. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] moves that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose: and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6614) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. LOUD (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of G. S. Curtin, administrator of Lewis Curtin, deceased, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for the printing and binding of the Eleventh Census reports—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter of the Surgeon-General of the Army respecting an increase in the number of copies in the edition of the index catalogue of the library of his Bureau—to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bill and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred House bill No. 3344, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia, accompanied by a report (No. 672); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FLYNN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred House bill No. 6348, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, March 9, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on motion of Mr. HARRIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior of the 5th instant, submitting an amended estimate of appropriation for rent of buildings, Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1897, contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill now pending, increasing the item for rent for the Indian Office from $6,000 to $6,500, and recommending that the $500 additional be made immediately available; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 31, 1895, a statement containing a copy of each obligation issued by the Government since March 4, 1789, with a reference by title and date to the laws respectively authorizing such issues, and showing the amount of each issue and the amount now outstanding, properly classified, and including Treasury notes of every kind, bonds, and certificates for currency, silver, and gold; and also a letter from the Register of the Treasury, dated February 25, 1896, upon the subject; which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Army, dated February 28, 1896, respecting an increase in the number of copies in the edition of the index catalogue of the library of that Bureau; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs proposing legislation in behalf of certain Chippewa Indians, permitting them to retain the lands upon which they have resided for many years, and upon which they have made improvements, instead of being compelled to remove to the diminished Red Lake Reservation, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 14, 1889, and inclosing a draft of a bill in behalf of these Indians and recommending its passage; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a joint communication from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, the originals of the sworn statements of the 65 persons in the State of Arkansas, made between August 4, 1894, and February 22, 1895, as to the value of the public lands in their respective counties, which affidavits accompanied a report of Burton T. Doyle, representing the Secretary of the Treasury, and George C. Ross, representing the Secretary of the Interior, under the act of Congress approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to authorize and compromise a settlement with the State of Arkansas"; which was read.

Mr. BERRY. I ask that the communication be printed and lie on the table. Senate bill No. 502, to which it relates, has already been reported, and has been made the special order for the 16th instant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table and be printed.

POTOMAC RIVER FLATS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to an act of Congress approved August 5, 1886, a report of the findings of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the matter of the right, title, or interest of any person or corporation adverse to the complete and paramount right of the United States in the Potomac River flats; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON presented a petition of the legislature of the State of Utah, praying for the passage of House bill No. 2758, to fix the standard of weights and measures by the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the governor and legislature of the State of Utah, would respectfully petition your honorable body to pass H. R. No. 2758, a bill to fix the standard of weights and measures by the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures, introduced by Representative HURLEY December 26, 1895.

The superiority of the metric system over the old system of weights and measures is as great as the superiority of the United States system of coinage of dollars, dimes, cents, and mills over the British system of pounds, shillings, and pence.

The advantages of a system of such simplicity as the metric system are too well known to require to be enlarged upon; but in addition to the natural advantages of such a system (advantages that have caused its adoption by all the enlightened nations of continental Europe), it has to the Government and people of the United States the additional advantage of furnishing them with a system already adopted and in use or required to be used during the present year by every other Republic in both North and South America.

All governmental action within the last one hundred years has been in the direction of the adoption in all accounts of the decimal system of notation, which is the underlying principle upon which the metric system is established.

The framers of the constitution of our new State incorporated in said constitution an article requiring the metric system to be taught in the public schools of the State, and the people will gladly welcome such action of Congress as will allow the entire Union to require by legislative enactment the use of the system with the knowledge that such legislative enactment is in line with the provisions of Congress on the same subject.

And, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray.

GEORGE M. CANNON,
President of the Senate.
PRESLEY DENNY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved March 21, 1896.

HEBER M. WELLS,
Governor.
